Picking on Hollywood

THE valued and able New York Times appears to be increasingly afflicted with a bias against the motion picture.

In these columns there was recent attention to the insertion by The Times of the word "film" to quote a Two Gun Crowley letter in such a manner as to credit his murderous impulses to screen inspirations. Again in last week's mishap involving the shooting of a small boy by a playmate in Montclair, New Jersey, the Times, along with other publications, developed the news story around expressions which laid the blame on gangster pictures, ignoring quite the fact that the parents and the police alike had permitted the boy to retain possession and play with a mail order pistol, and the fact that after all the killing was done with a pistol and not a reel of film.

Now one may observe that in the Times of June 24 there appeared a special cable from London, quoting Lord Irwin, former Viceroy of India, as saying that the prestige of the white man in India had gone forever, and adding, "The former Viceroy attributed this to three things: first, the defeat of the Russians by the Japanese; secondly, the employment of Indian troops in the world war against white men, and thirdly, the influence of motion pictures on the Indian mind."

Next we discover in The Times of June 25 an editorial entitled "White Men in Asia," which includes this: "The deplorable effect upon Asiatic sentiment of the works of Hollywood has been of more recent concern.

You see the Viceroy spoke of motion pictures, while The Times can think only of the works of Hollywood. It is obvious enough to this industry that India sees all of the British cinema product and in all probability more European made film than ever reaches America.

It may be brought to the attention of The Times, and the rest of the daily press of America, that there is available an official Indian-British judgment in the matter in the report of the Indian Cinematograph Commission appointed by the government to examine into the very questions involved. This commission reported, after a two year study, that: "We are without exception satisfied that the overwhelming majority of films certified for public exhibition in no way bring western civilization into contempt."

The Commission also took cognizance of the fact that the entire agitation about film influences on the natives had arisen because of trade jealousies in Wardour street, saying: "We do not suggest that trade propaganda is illegitimate in itself, but obviously a man with wares to sell is not likely to lose any opportunity of criticizing the wares of his rival. The British film industry very naturally wishes to recover the position which it held in the film world prior to the war, but when it attempts to show that the films produced in America are in one way or another inferior or harmful, the cautious man will bethink him of the adage that all is fair in love and war."

Standing for Dirt

MR. WALTER WINCHELL in his "On Broadway" in the New York Daily Mirror of Monday last sets down: "Tallulah Bankhead says she made Gary Cooper, but he says no, the cad."

If such published expression concerning two prominent performers of the screen can pass unresented by Paramount and by the industry a strangely supine state has been reached.

Without discussion of the taste or merits of such an item if it concerned mere individuals of no publicity moment, it is all too obvious that it becomes something to notice solely because it involves the names of motion picture personages. Its publication is therefore a motion picture affair, and one can not fancy any set of conditions which would warrant it.

As long as the motion picture institution, in its strange timidity and frail tremblings at suggestion of controversy, stands for dirt it will get plenty of it.

Keeping Sound in Tune

"BETTER THEATRES" this week presents some important suggestions on the maintenance of sound picture projection equipment and the very necessary careful constant attention to the quality of sound rendition in the theatre. The series of articles on the subject of "What the Manager Should Know About Sound," is an important contribution to the working technology of the business. They come from the pen of one of the most able sound engineers. After many years of experience with silent equipment the problems of the booth were relatively few and simple. Today they are many and complex and the failure of a tiny part or a single adjustment of the complex sound mechanism can stop the show. And when the show stops there is nothing going on but the overhead.

Remembering Deadeye Dick

IN view of the prevailing habit of the daily press to pick on the pictures as an editorial pastime, and MOTION PICTURE HERALD'S continuous diligence in pointing out that habit, it becomes also an obligation to present intelligent words from The Daily News of New York, which, anent the Montclair excitement, says:

> As we've remarked before, it isn't the talkies that make the public interest in gang pictures. It's the public's breathless interest in prohibition's gangster crop which forces the production of gang talkies.
> Forty years or so ago, all the kids except the sissies were smuggling dime novels into their hideaways or school desks. Parents were much alarmed. They foresaw their children growing up to become Deadeye Dicks and Calamity Janes.
> But those children, fully 99.8 per cent of them, grew up to become excellent citizens, good husbands, good mothers and all the rest of it. Some of them even grew up to become crusaders against gangster talkies.

The Daily News has consistently maintained a friendly sympathy with this aspect of the production problems of the motion picture industry and its censorship issues.

RETURN OF NONTHEATRICAL SALES TO PRE-SOUND PRESTIGE SEEN NEAR

Intelligently Organized Effort Declared Chief Factor—Makers Of Equipment Awake to Possibilities—Field Found Lucrative

Exploitation subjects in the nontheatrical field, and complete rehabilitation and restoration of the nontheatrical phase of motion picture selling to a point where it will be as important as in pre-sound days, appears a probable development of the next three months.

Success or failure of the development, in the opinion of C. W. Bunn, Erpi's sales chief, rests in an intelligently organized effort to deal with nontheatrical accounts. This organization of nontheatricals, contends Mr. Bunn, should not only control the interference of nontheatrical showings with regular theatre playdates, but should so solidify that phase of the industry as to make its returns unusually attractive to distributors.

C. W. Bunn

Joe Brandt

"There never has been a really organized effort of the industry to deal with nontheatricals," said Mr. Bunn, "particularly insofar as satisfying the needs of that field. It offers, and always has offered, unusual opportunities, and if a clearing house representing the industry had control over interference with regular theatre accounts, there appears no reason why the field could not be developed to an important place in the industry without invading the theatrical field. Most certainly an organized picture supply is needed."

Stuart W. Webb, executive vice-president of Pathe Exchange, Inc., which in silent days occupied an important spot in nontheatricals, says that one handicap in the development is the inability of projection manufacturers to make available sound-on-film portable 16 milimeter devices. "There have been no successful machines of the 16 mm. portable type to date," stated Webb, "except those which use only sound-on-disc."

In currently surveying the nontheatrical field, most distributors declined to discuss their policies and plans for the new development. With but few exceptions, including Columbia and Fox, major distributing companies refused to talk, apparently deciding against taking a chance of antagonizing theatre owners, who since the industry's early days have harbored bitter feeling toward nontheatricals and to the departments of film companies which encourage the use of regular theatrical attractions to nontheatrical accounts.

Before sound, important exhibitor interests were almost continuously at loggerheads with distributors over nontheatrical showings, and although distributors definitely have decided to re-enter the field, it is believed that they will more carefully scrutinize nontheatrical accounts before booking theatrical product, in order to eliminate a recurrence of the misunderstanding with exhibitors.

"Fox has never lost interest in the nontheatrical business," according to Glendon Allvine, home office publicity and advertis-

Allied's Advice on the Buying Situation

A publicity release from the office of Abram F. Myers, president of Allied States Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, in Washington, D. C., under date of June 30, says:

"BUY NOW—AND GO BROKE"

The foregoing slogan is respectfully suggested to publications and organizations friendly to independent theatre owners as a substitute for the one currently used by publications and associations seeking to commit the exhibitors to binding obligations in this, the most uncertain and dangerous period in the history of the industry.

FEEL YOUR WAY UNTIL YOU SEE THE LIGHT

Any theatre owner who can tell now what he can afford for pictures six months from now either has a great situation or the gift of prophecy. The wise thing to do is to proceed cautiously, buying only when necessary. Remember that the bankers in control of the large companies, knowing nothing of showmanship, are enforcing rigid economy and any product you buy will be "cheap product."

MOTION PICTURE HERALD, editorially, and in certain display advertisements to the trade, in a series now appearing, has taken a position arguing that no progress can come of a state of inaction and stagnation. It is the HERALD'S opinion that the best interests of all elements of the business can only be served by doing business. "Watchful waiting" as a policy has few victories to its credit in any activity or enterprise which requires daily performance and continuous turnover.

It is also the declared and delivered policy of MOTION PICTURE HERALD to keep its columns open to the expression of any and every honestly held and expressed opinion from persons of responsibility in the motion picture industry. Therefore, it is with cheer, if not agreement, that this page presents the Allied States bulletin.

THE EDITOR.

CHURCH COUNCIL, AFTER A YEAR'S CHECKUP, VINDICATES INDUSTRY

Pornographic Stills Flaunt Industry's Advertising Code

Spokesmen for the industry permit their indignation to rise to excessive heights when outside criticism is registered relative to a lack of decent moral standards in motion picture production.

The effort of the industry generally to maintain a reasonably wholesome character in its entertainment and advertising has been a strong and determined one, yet in various instances there is to be found evidence which makes much of the outside criticism heard appear to be altogether insufficient to fit the case.

One of the most destructive conditions affecting the good repute of the industry is the practice which has been carried on in varying degrees in connection with the making of pornographic stills which are supplied to various foreign countries where there is a demand for such and also to certain American publications which have a bent for the risque.

A current case of considerable gravity is a group of publicity stills made by the RKO Pathe studio and distributed by the RKO Pathe publicity department in New York. The stills in question were photographed by William E. Thomas and presumably refer to a sequence which is to be included in the forthcoming production of "The Common Law." These photographs in the main feature the practically nude form of an obscure performer who is identified on the photographs as Dolores Muray.

These photographs are disturbing evidence that certain sections of the industry are continuing to go along merrily thumbing their noses at both the Production Code and the Advertising Code.

Clarke Re-elected President of Fox

Harley L. Clarke was re-elected president of Fox Film Corporation at the meeting Wednesday of the new board of directors. The entire executive personnel as voted by the board follows:

Harley L. Clarke

Harley L. Clarke, president; Winfield Sheehan, vice-president-general manager; W. C. Michel, vice-president and treasurer; S. R. Burns, vice-president and secretary; James R. Grainger, vice-president in charge of sales; Glenn Griswold, vice-president; Sydney Towell, comptroller; W. S. Bell, assistant treasurer; Felix A. Jenkins, assistant secretary; J. J. Kitson, assistant secretary; F. R. Stoeckel, assistant secretary.

Winfield Sheehan made a hurried trip from Hollywood to attend the meeting.

MPTO Condemns Substitutions

The MPTO of Maryland, at a meeting on June 25 adopted a resolution declaring the practice of certain distributors in offering contracts with a clause permitting them to change story, star, cast or director a coercive practice.

The resolution bases the action on the declaration of the Federal Trade Commission calling that an unfair practice, and recognizing the right of the exhibitor to cancel the proved substitution. The meeting also declared that owners signing such contracts are doing so under protest.

Hays Declares Gang Films Are Right of Free Screen

Will H. Hays, in a letter to Mayor Charles H. Martens, of East Orange, N. J., declared, "I have no excuse for a film glorifying a gangster."

"The proper treatment of crime as a social fact or dramatic motive," the letter continued, "is the inalienable right of a free press or an unshackled stage or screen. Success of self-regulation is shown on many screens in the words, 'Crime does not pay'."

Report Contrasts Those Of Crafts and Chase

Federal Body Finds the Motion Picture "Avowedly Attempting To Put House in Order"

The art and industry of the motion picture, after a year of intensive investigation by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, have received a pleasant vindication in a report made public this week.

The report, which issued from the New York offices of the council, is, in view of the utterances official and unofficial of former years, an even tempered, measured and considerate document. To one familiar with the expressions from the earlier background of the organization when the late Reverend Wilbur Fisk Crafts and Canon William Sheafe Chase were its spokesman, this week's report becomes almost sensational by its quiet contrast. It may be taken to denote clearly that the motion picture's last decade of labors of adjustment to various organized groups expressive of large blocks of public and religious opinion have achieved vast results.

In sum it may be said that this report denotes that the Protestant bloc, as represented by the Council, finds the motion picture:

...avowedly attempting to put its house in order..

...the Hays organization has entertained some laudable purposes, has set up some constructive procedures and has definite accomplishments to its credit..

The record of the industry in settling disputes by arbitration is impressive.

..those who complain that the critics of the industry often overlook its better products in making their appraisal, and that they tend to put forward more rigid standards than the public can be induced to support undoubtedly have ground for their contention.

...—it must be patent that voluntary cooperative efforts toward social betterment, wisely conceived and well directed, are capable of accomplishing something which the imposition of force can never accomplish.

A flat declaration against censorship is made in these words: "The religious and social agencies are themselves at fault in becoming much too preoccupied with 'cuts' and 'eliminations.' The motion pictures can not be made good by the use of scissors."

The report takes some exception to some aspects of the activities of the Motion Picture Producers & Distributors of America, Inc., chiefly in connection with the payment of honoraria for addresses or other services

B & K FIGHTS SUMMER COMPETITION WITH INSTITUTIONAL ADVERTISING

Weekend Business Boost Is Big Objective

Child Appeal Copy Used With Film Censored for "Adults Only"— Then Circuit Defies Board

Combating summer competition and extreme heat with institutional advertising copy is being given a tryout in Chicago by Publix-Balaban & Katz.

A box, two inches deep across five columns, is being used by the circuit to top the advertising for its five Loop theatres. The standard advertising presentation of Balaban & Katz theatres groups the circuit's Loop houses in a single compact layout. A similar group arrangement is used by the circuit for the advertising for its outlying theatres.

The copy used three days this week in the two-inch, five-column box above the Loop theatre advertising read, "Come where it's refreshingly cool—where joy reigns supreme! More than 100,000 men, women and children found refuge from the city's sweltering heat in Publix-Balaban & Katz theatres. Neither the lake, parks nor boulevards afford the refreshing comfort, the pure, fresh air—the exhilaration found in these theatres."

Similar copy is to be used for weekend advertising throughout the summer, appearing with the launching of new programs, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The idea also is being carried into the neighborhood theatre advertising of the circuit, with the summer vacation period affording copy for the first three-column top box in connection with the Publix-B & K "A" pre-release houses. The first copy used was: "School's Out! Bring or send your children to Publix-Balaban & Katz theatres. They'll enjoy the delightful shows, the cool, refreshing surroundings, and breathe pure, fresh air!"

The only hitch in the "child appeal" copy on its initial tryout was that the picture playing the circuit's three leading outlying houses—Uptown, Paradise and Tivoli—was "Laughing Sinners" (M-G-M), which happened to have been released on an "adults only" permit by the Chicago censor board. Balaban & Katz, however, acting on the advice of their attorney, Leo Spitz, opened the picture to general audiences. The move precipitated a storm of protest from agencies critical of the industry and placed Henry Sonnenschein, secretary to the mayor, in an embarrassing situation. It was Sonnenschein, according to Spitz, who authorized him to advise B & K to ignore the censor's ruling.

An incidental phase of the circuit's summer advertising plan is that midweek advertising space is curtailed, thus permitting without an increased average expenditure the additional space used for the institutional copy over the weekends.

Business Builders

Major circuits are insisting that managers once again include, and lay heavy stress on, kiddies' admission prices in all "paper and advertising."

During the dearth of child patronage, which now is being alleviated, a tendency developed in circuit operation to ignore special reduced prices for youngsters.

Copyright Bureau In National Move To End Bicycling

The Copyright Protection Bureau plans to send representatives to all exchange centers in an effort to reduce bicycling violators, holdovers and fraudulent returns on percentage engagements, in a "campaign of education."

At present the movement will be concentrated in the Southeast and Southwest, with anticipation of a national campaign as soon as the bureau's financial status permits.

D. C. Liebler, H. Groves and Joseph Stern are three representatives now in the field. The thought behind the move is the reduction of exchange losses estimated to run into millions annually.

Fox West Coast Rules Out Drives

Because "drives" are "old-fashioned, nerve-wracking, spirit-breaking," Fox West Coast executives have intimated through the Western edition of The Last Word that this type of selling pictures to the public will no longer be used by that organization.

"If pressure is not put upon you by your executives," the statement says, "it doesn't mean that you don't have to get up steam on your own account.

"The responsibility and authority which are being passed on to you carry with them the supposition that you have sufficient steam to drive yourself.

"The wise manager doesn't want to be told how and when to start his own spurts. He doesn't wait for a certain week or month to be designated as a period of extra effort."

30 Story Building for NBC

The National Broadcasting Company plans a 30-story building in San Francisco as western headquarters and to house the first television sending unit on the Pacific Coast.

Johnson Resigns Paramount Post; May Live Abroad

Julian Johnson, for ten years with Paramount as an editor and supervisor of picture production, has resigned effective July 1.

Mr. Johnson says that he will take a long vacation before making a new alignment with the industry. It is probable that having prospered long in the art of the motion picture, he will now indulge in a long held desire to take to the leisure of country life in France and write certain books on which he has been accumulating data for years.

It was through the printed word and his rise in newspaper work beginning on the Los Angeles Times that Mr. Johnson came to the motion picture industry. He came to New York as a music critic and became engaged in amusement enterprises. At this juncture James R. Quirk took over the administration of the then obscure Photoplay Magazine published in Chicago and made Mr. Johnson its editor, through its early years of upbuilding. From Photoplay he went into scenario and title work with various concerns and was for a time associated with Ray Long at Cosmopolitan Magazine, going thence to Hearst picture enterprises and thence to Paramount.

Mr. Johnson's recent work has been largely with such productions as "Rango" and "Tabu." He achieved marked success with "The Patriot" and in his work on "Beau Geste," and many earlier pictures of the silent era.

Public Hearings For Applicants

The radio commission will in the future hold public hearings on all applications for television broadcasting wave length assignments.

Approximately 20 television stations are now in operation, with permission having been sought for six more. As a consequence of the numerous applications, it was decided that applicants must show they had something beneficial to offer.

One engineer said: "The art is not yet to the point where it is successful commercially. The applicants are being required to show they are willing to contribute money and talent to experiments with the art."

Fox May Close Seattle House After Dismissing Musicians

Differences between Fox West Coast and the Musicians' Union may cause the closing of the Fox Paramount in Seattle and the cancellation of the city as a stand for Fanchon and Marco units.

% Mr. Carl E. Milliken,
28 West 44th St.
New York City, N. Y.

My dear Mr. Milliken:

Replying to your letter of June 6th. The re-action from the School Principals and the co-operative spirit that they gave us on the picture "The Great Meadow" was remarkable.

All theatres, who are co-operating with the schools in this way, did a great business on "The Great Meadow".

The School teachers came in a body at my invitation and were very appreciative and stated that any other educational picture that the Exhibitors may show in the future, we could rest assured that we would have their co-operation.

The picture is still to be shown in quite a number of neighborhood theatres in St. Louis, and I have advised allmembers of my Organization and have outlined the same campaign that I have used in my theatres in co-operation with the school.

With kindest and best regards, I remain

Very truly yours.

National Educators Told Of Service Value

Suggests Preview System to Select Proper Screen Fare for Juveniles —Cites Production Code

General organized effort by the schools of the nation to make use of "The School and the Screen," department conducted in Motion Picture Herald by Rita C. McGoldrick, was recommended by Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, in addressing the convention of the National Education Association Monday night at Los Angeles Shrine Auditorium.

Carl E. Milliken

Rita C. McGoldrick

Increasing interest in the department's work, which "has been particularly valuable in view of the number of recent pictures which have lent themselves to the service," is being shown by teachers and Parent-Teacher Association groups, as well as producers and theatre managers, Milliken said. He cited the "Cimarron" questionnaire broadcast by "The School and the Screen" as the ideal method of bringing worthy pictures and the public together in closer co-operation for selection of a proper screen diet for juveniles, and urged the setting up of a preview system.

Monday, opening day of the convention, was given over largely to contacting the motion picture industry. Between 15,000 and 20,000 teachers were drawn to Los Angeles by the meeting, which represents a membership of 700,000 educators. The visitors, divided into state groups, were marshaled by local hosts and hostesses and, by arrangement with studios, were taken for sightseeing trips around the various lots.

This is the first breach in the studio anti-visitor rule set up with the inauguration of sound pictures, and it was estimated that during the five days of the convention 8,000 to 10,000 were shown around.

The Milliken address was the feature of the opening session.

The local Hays office cooperated with the educators. Mark Larkin, publicity chief, had a desk at the auditorium and worked with the local committee.

Saal May Watch Young's Interest At Educational

"Bill" Saal's recent resignation from Publix is understood to have been brought about by L. A. Young, Detroit financier and former Tiffany operator, who signed Saal to a two-year personal contract to watch his Tiffany interests under the Educational management.

Grant L. Cooke, now Young's representative at Tiffany, will re-join the financier in Detroit industry, possibly in Young's wire business.

Saal and Cooke now are at Detroit conferring with Young.

Division Head Denies Publix Closing Minneapolis Houses

Eddie Ruben, Publix division head, has denied reports that Publix intends closing at least six loop and neighborhood houses in Minneapolis and a similar number in St. Paul.

Ruben declared, "We are operating on a week-to-week basis, with two-weeks cancellation notices posted, but we are not planning a wholesale closing such as has been reported."

Sheehan, in London, Proabbly Will Outline Foreign Plans

STATES UNITE IN FULL SUPPORT OF HOOVER'S VISUAL EDUCATION TEST

Governor of Washington Alone Opposes Plan

Ninety-six Students and 48 Teachers Gather at Capital Monday for Exams and Showing of Films

The United States, with the exception of one governor—Rolland H. Hartley of the state of Washington, the state farthest from the nation's capital—is giving whole-hearted support to President Hoover's test of visual education. The national demonstration will be held at Washington this coming week.

Governor Hartley, the one opponent of the plan, has termed the movement "destructive." His Honor, the Governor, apparently feels that introduction of motion pictures in the schoolroom will be an added burden to the taxpayers; and, in his opinion, the Government should not lend its support in the sales of talking picture apparatus.

Nevertheless, 47 states and the District of Columbia are sending 96 students and 48 teachers to the national capital for the demonstrations.

Honor Graduates Sent

Each governor, through the state's educational department, has selected two honor 8th grade graduates (a boy and a girl) to represent his particular commonwealth. Each pair will be accompanied by a teacher.

These young people will arrive in Washington on Monday, and will go to the Wardman Park Hotel. Not until Tuesday will they be called upon to display their academic training.

First, at the George Washington University, they will be given examination in civics, history, natural science and geography.

On the following two days they will be shown films on these subjects, which have been prepared with the cooperation of some of the country's leading educators.

On the fourth day another examination will be given, and the results of this will determine, to a degree, the effectiveness of visual education.

Clarke Sees Big Results

Though this is a national educational project, the expenses of it are being met by Fox Film Corporation.

The committee in charge of the demonstration was appointed by Dr. William John Cooper, by order of President Hoover. The chairman of the committee is Dean William C. Ruediger of George Washington University.

Harley L. Clarke, president of Fox Film Corporation, said of the Washington meeting:

"The support given to visual education by President Hoover will lend great impetus to a movement that has been in much favor with educators throughout the country for several years. Additional education for the millions of children who now get only a grammar school preparation for life will pay great dividends to the country.

"There are about 23 million children in the grade schools, 80 per cent of whom never go beyond that stage of education. A little enrichment of knowledge for these children and the visual presentation of a wider vision of life is bound to raise their economic value. If this economic value is increased only a few cents a day, it will soon pay interest on the national debt. A decade of children graduating worth 10 cents more a day, would yield the tidy sum of over half a billion dollars annually."

A Possibility!

Maybe the film houses could use something like this. It was an advertising stunt by a rathskeller and dance hall, a dime a dance place, down New Orleans way. The place paraded a group of bathing beauties through the streets one day recently—and advertised the same girls, suits and all, as partners for all those who desire to dance—at 10 cents per. It's a possibility for film houses, but not a very good one!

Win $9,000,000 Loew Stock Suit

Justice Salvatore Cotillo, New York supreme court, decided for the defendants in the $9,000,000 suit of Edward G. Stanton against Nicholas M. Schenck, David Bernstein and Arthur M. Loew.

He alleges they received that amount by sale of their Loew stock to William Fox and the Fox Theatres Corporation, and demanded an accounting of profits. Stanton had sued as owner of 20 shares of Loew stock and on behalf of the corporation, making the basis of his action a claim that the three defendants, as directors and officers of Loew's, Inc., could not dispose of their stock and that, if they did, the profits from such sale should have accrued in the interest of the corporation.

Cohn Denies Coast Report That He Will Quit Columbia

Harry Cohn, Columbia production head, contradicted reports on the Coast that he is leaving the company, by saying, "Why should I sell out, considering the fact that theatre-owning companies are not making the pictures demanded by their own theatres."

"The future looks rosier than all the years we have been building up Columbia. Secondly, I am free here to produce as I think best and couldn't be elsewhere. Anyway, I haven't been asked," he said.

Monopoly of Radio Set Trade Laid To RCA in New Suit

RCA, cleared of charges of monopolizing radio communications in a 3-to-2 vote of the Federal Radio Commission last week, is accused of having assumed leadership in a patent pool conspiracy for monopoly of the radio set industry, in a bill filed this week in United States district court at Wilmington, Del., by Poughkeepsie Gold Seal Electric Company.

The Poughkeepsie company states that it has been made defendant in two patent suits in the United States district court of southern New York because it has refused to pay tribute to RCA.

Continued Heat Boon to Houses

Reports from Publix-Balaban and Katz in Chicago as well as other local houses, indicate that with the continuation of the heat wave, people are finding the resorts and other forms of heat relief unsatisfactory and are consequently returning to the refrigerated theatres.

B & K reports a 25 per cent increase in business last week, over the same number of days in the previous week. Golf course attendance is estimated at only 50 per cent normal, and traffic on highways and crowds at parks are concentrated in periods before and after theatre hours.

Tax Bureau to Check Chicago Returns in Projection Graft

Allied Theatre Owners of Illinois have been waging a fight against labor conditions in Chicago, now being investigated by the state's attorney's office.

The Internal Revenue Bureau is checking to ascertain whether or not the investigated interests have accounted for money collected on operators' permits issued for money in violation of the state law.

Earl Van Hyning of Iola, Kan., head of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas and western Missouri, has been elected president of the Iola Chamber of Commerce.

F & M Dedicate New Studio

An address by Governor James D. Rolph of California marked the dedication in Hollywood of the new Fanchon & Marco studios, where the F. & M. "Ideas" for Fox theatre stages will be produced in the future.

BRITISH FIGHT SINGLE FEATURE PLEA AS DAMAGING TO ENGLISH PRODUCT

Outside Producers See Smaller Field By Theatre Pool

Producing companies without theatre affiliations are expressing concern over a contemplated theatre pool which involves RKO, Loew's, Fox, Warners and Publix, says Motion Picture Daily. A narrower market and reduced outlets are the possibilities seen by those not in the pool project.

Thirty-five cities and 200 to 300 de luxe theatres are reported to be figured in the deliberations.

RKO Pathe Loses Important Appeal

C. J. Scollard of RKO Pathe said Thursday no decision had been reached as to action the company would take in the Turnin Theatre Corporation case, which Pathe lost when the appellate division affirmed the decision of Judge Valente of the supreme court, that contracts that were entered into by exhibitors with the old Pathe company are valid. There is no appeal of the case, the trial of it being Pathe's only recourse.

"We are still considering the matter," said Scollard.

It is pointed out that the decision in favor of the theatre company opens the way for many costly suits against RKO Pathe.

Writers Approve Recommendations

More than 200 screen writers have adopted the recommendations to the producers of the Academy of M. P. Arts and Sciences at a recent Hollywood Writers' Club meeting.

The report, which will be the basis of early producer-writer conferences, has for its aim the fostering of closer relations between writer and director, less interference in play preparation and use of more originals as screen material.

Various angles of the writer end of production were discussed.

Kurtzman Supervises Roxy

Harry Arthur, general manager of Fox Theatres Corporation, has appointed Charles E. Kurtzman supervisor of the New York Roxy. Albert Margolies, formerly in the home office advertising department, has been named advertising and publicity director of the house, replacing Martha L. Wilschinski, resigned.

Taking a Bow

Hughes-Franklin circuit "hopes to be the ONE organization to recognize the importance of leaving local management alone, of not making rubber stamps of its managers, of giving them every opportunity to express themselves!"

And this despite vigorous efforts of Sam Katz at Publix, and Fox theatre chiefs in the past several months to rehabilitate company managers and return them from the status of "clerks" to the position held before large circuits became "swivel chair operated."

Johnsons Return From Expedition

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson are due to arrive this week-end on the S. S. Excalibur from Africa with a cargo of motion picture, romance and "ivory apes and peacocks."

Mr. Johnson has been in Africa on this excursion for about a year, making movietone sound pictures. His plans for release and presentation of the pictures have not yet been made. It is said to be likely that he will remain in the States for a year, devoting much of his time to lecturing. His last major efforts in picture production were marketed through Talking Picture Epics.

This year's expedition was largely devoted to deep jungle country and more savage regions. Mr. Johnson is bringing three young gorillas, and various other items of the flora and fauna of his beloved "beyond the blue."

Pathe Releases Special on Fliers

A Pathe News special, released on Thursday, carries the story of the 16,000 mile globe-encircling flight of Wiley V. Post and Harold Gatty, the latter having taken special pictures during the trip, which ended with the arrival of the fliers in New York on Thursday morning.

In the exclusive interview following their arrival, Post and Gatty give their views of the flight and Gatty, navigator, points out on a map the course of the flight and relates the difficulties encountered.

Warners to Fight Skouras Suits

Say Few Likely to Crash American Market

Believe Dropping Double Features Would Necessitate Home Film as Chief Attraction Under Quota

By W. H. MOORING, London

Sam Eckman, Jr., British chief of M-G-M, chose the occasion of the annual summer conference of exhibitors of Great Britain—which he was asked to address—as a big opportunity to start in England the "Single Feature Program" campaign just launched in America.

It may as well be admitted, to begin with, that in England the idea of cutting the bill is under suspicion, and it is almost certain that a considerable majority of British exhibitors are against it.

In some circles there it is interpreted as America's way of damaging the chances of a large proportion of British films, which even their producers would admit are likely to play only as second features.

Certainly there are few British films, even in these days (when good British output is increasing), which stand any real chance of crashing the American market as top liners, or of disturbing American feature bookings in other markets. As "seconds" they might; as "firsts" they never will.

But in any case British exhibitors are not seriously concerned with that aspect of the matter—however much their leaders would have us believe they are. Exhibitors have merely to consider the question from the box-office standpoint, and it is doubtful whether many showmen outside the London area would care to risk cutting their bills to a single feature with shorts and newsreels. Aside from the larger centers, British audiences still visit the cinema largely as an institution, and not to see a particular feature film.

Further, there is the complication introduced by the operation of the quota law. Each theatre has to show a certain percentage of British feature films—over 3,000 feet long. If single bills were started, this would mean that on the present quota—due to increase again next year—the chief attraction one week in every 10 or so would have to be a British film. How is that going to help America, and how is it going to place exhibitors who already had arranged to run their quota off in second features?

Advertising Reels

A new concern, British Industrial Films, Ltd., nominally capitalized, with John Maxwell of British International, and A. E. Bundy, formerly of British Instructional Films, as directors, is to make a series of pictures called "Secrets of Industry" and other similar productions. It may not be too kind to refer to these as ad films, but they are most certainly to aim at propaganda of British Industries, and a good deal of Governmental support—though not finance—is understood to be forthcoming.

HOOVER PLAN SEEN AS FILM INDUSTRY BOON

Executives Optimistic on Effect of Plan; Clarke, Katz See the Future Much Brighter

That President Hoover's debt moratorium plan, if adopted internationally, will have a salutary effect upon business generally and consequently upon the motion picture industry, is the belief of some of the industry's leaders.

The first note of optimism in months was noted in executive offices.

"President Hoover has done a great service to the world . . . and business interests everywhere are under definite obligation to support him," Harley L. Clarke, who has just been re-elected president of Fox Film Corporation, told a representative of MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

"Burdensome and in many cases unbearable taxes are the principal cause of the stagnation of world trade," he continued. "Billions of dollars were spent to carry on the World War and property worth other billions was destroyed. We are paying the interest charges and amortizing the principal of war debts too rapidly. These debt burdens inevitably stimulate a spirit of national insularity and lead to acts of reprisal as well as protection.

"The president is not suggesting debt cancellation. He is merelv suggesting a temporary suspension of payments. Certainly no harm can come from giving the world a moratorium of a year or two on both principal and interest payments on international war debts with normal payments to be resumed at the end of the period.

"It may be necessary to provide for the payment of the suspended installments some time within the next decade or two, but even such a plan will bring relief, permit the stabilization of values and encourage the revival of business. At least the plan should prove definitely whether excessive debt burdens have been a major factor in the depression that has come over all countries."

Although stating that it was difficult to definitely forecast the effects the plan would have on business, Nicholas M. Schenck, president of Loew's, Inc., said that he was "quite sure that they will be beneficial to all industries including amusement enterprises."

Sam Katz, head of Publix, said that conditions during the last six months had not warranted "cheerful forecasts," but that now "I believe I can strike a definite note of optimism in speaking of our business in the near future. All the signs seem to point in that direction, as a result of President Hoover's proposal for debt relief.

"Ours is a mass business, intimately associated with the economic condition of the rank and file of our population. Therefore, any improvement in the economic condition of this country cannot help but be immediately felt in our theatres.

"This recovery from the lethargy and timidity which has characterized buyers in the past year can only result in one thing—improved business conditions generally, from which our theatres will directly benefit."

Economy and Profits

"Effective economies" and "costless business-getting effort" are increasing the net profits of Publix theatres, acording to Sam Katz.

"An example," he says, "may be obtained from one district where the gross for June was 7.78 percent under that of May. The net profit for that district, however, was 300 percent greater than that of May."

Pathe News Still Cutting Its Staff

Three more members of the New York staff of Pathe News, Inc., were dismissed last weekend, including Beverly Jones, an editor, Rex Vivian, an assignment man concerned with Trans-Lux theatre specials, and Foster Travis, an office boy. The assigned reason in the dismissal notes was based on economic conditions.

Jones' name has been much on the screen in the last three years in connetcion with his contributions to Pathe Review, which under the prior administration was a weekly one-reel screen journal of novelty and whimsy. The Review is, according to announcement, to be resumed after some months of suspension, on a basis of thirteen issues a year. Thomas Chalmers, one-time Metropolitan Opera star, is in editorial charge of its production.

Harold Noice, former Pathe staff cameraman, an adventurer and traveler of note has been in negotiation for the purchase of selections from the extensive and costly Pathe Review negative library, which was an item of consideration in the Pathe sale of assets to RKO.

Ralph Sanders of the Chicago sound staff, who recently was dismissed, before joining Pathe News was chief of sound testing for the entire General Electric Company organization of Schenectady. Two years ago he was loaned back to General Electric for six weeks because of his expertness in sound.

Hodes Moves Up to Post Of Metzger's Assistant

Joe Brandt at Columbia has promoted Hal Hodes to executive assistant to Lou Metzger, sales chief at the New York home office.

Hodes, who has had charge of accessories and poster sales, will continue supervision over that department, with Al Seligman, Brandt's brother-in-law, taking active charge.

Joe Rivkin to Buffalo

Joe Rivkin has left New York for Buffalo to stage a campaign for the premiere on July 9 of Tiffany's "Salvation Nell," James Cruze's first personally directed opus for the company.

No Dividends On Quadruplets, So She Sues Pathe

Somewhere on the much-crowded New York Supreme Court calendar, and probably due for trial some time between now and two years hence, is a civil damage suit for a really sizeable sum of money against Pathe News, Inc., and the reason is a set of quadruplets, which failed to pay dividends, as Mrs. Marre Concetta Perricone of Texas claims she had been led to expect.

When, something over one year ago, Marre Concetta gave birth to the phenomenon—or phenomena—of four-at-once, a Pathe News contact man, sallying about the Texas region, was Johnny on the spot. According to the voluminous complaint filed by Mrs. Perricone, this ambitious young contact man had spread a proposition before the eyes and ears of the mother, which sounded very, very good.

If, suggested the newsreel subject finder, according to the complaint, Mrs. Perricone would only consent to pose for newsreel cameramen with the four similar new arrivals, he could assure Mother Perricone that, upon the release of the picture before the sympathetic and delighted gaze of millions of motion picture patrons the country over, contributions, from rich and poor alike, would immediately commence to pour in upon the worthy mother for the care and upkeep of the new brood. And, of course, Mrs. Perricone would shine in the reflected glory of her achievement.

Mrs. Perricone, it seems, agreed rapidly and whole-heartedly to the proposal, and the cameramen arrived, did their stuff, and departed. In due course of film time, the mother and her quadruplets appeared on the screens of the land, under the banner of Pathe News. Mrs. Perricone was, undoubtedly, pleased.

Time passed, much time, in fact, but no checks, in engraved envelopes, weighted the back of the mailmen who daily visited the porch of the Perricone home in Texas. The mother was, naturally, surprised, and some time later, distinctly annoyed. So much so, that about one year ago she started suit against Pathe News in Texas. But the case was dismissed by an unsympathetic court.

Last February, still dissatisfied with the lack of return, both money and a favorable verdict from the Texas jury, she carried her case to the New York Supreme Court, where it rests today, waiting for the turn of the wheel, which will bring the case of the quadruplets before the court of the Empire state.

In her complaint, she charges that not only did she receive no contributions as assured, but the film was not even couched in such a manner as to convey the impression to film patrons that an appeal was intended.

There may be a precedent set in the case, with regard to future newsreel situations of a similar character. But meanwhile, day by day, Mrs. Perricone's quadruplets grow gradually older, as is the way with children. Perhaps by the time anything is done about it, the quadruplets may be able to earn more than their perturbed and indignant mother might receive in a court of law.

a victor over adversity

MR. HARRY M. WARNER is one of the braver few of the industry of the motion picture. He has had all the kinds of breaks there are and a lot of them have been bad. If he could have been defeated he would have vanished from the sight of the screen world by 1915, before "My Four Years in Germany," before "Schooldays"—and there would be no Warners-First National institution of today. Down all the years from the little nickelodeon at Greencastle in Ohio, nearly three decades in the past, he has had an abiding faith in this industry, his industry and its tomorrow. He has consistently sold himself and the industry. He never quits.

From the merry state of Maryland, famed for fried chicken, terrapin, good living and a cheerful view of a good world, come plain but pleasant words about the state of the nation and the outlook for business. Governor Albert C. Ritchie, in the course of an address in New York the other night, offered some observations, obvious enough but also obviously somewhat overlooked in some of the fogs of pessimism and hysteria that have been drifting across the motion picture horizon.

"Here," said Governor Ritchie, "is a nation of 120,000,000 people. They have an infinity of wants and desires. They are willing to labor, to buy and to sell. They are filled with the spirit of courage, initiative and enterprise. They are determined to maintain high standards of life and to raise these standards higher. They live in a land of unlimited resources and opportunities. . . . He must have little faith and little vision indeed who does not foresee a prosperity and contentment even greater than before. . . ."

This prospering people has by its patronage created the great prospering institution of the motion picture. They will maintain it and keep it flourishing, if the makers of pictures, the distributors of pictures and the exhibitors of pictures will but strive to keep them sold. The problem is selling, selling, selling. Because we live by the consumer who in consuming must buy and buy and buy. What he will buy will be what is best sold. The pictures are just as good as they ever were, and probably the average is better. The job is still to buy and sell. The man who waits to do business in this business will still be waiting after the business is done.

MARKET SLOWS UP FOLLOWING RALLY

Look to Final Quarters for Sizable Pickup in Picture Revenues and Enhanced Values

By THE ANALYST

After an extension of last week's rally, picture stocks slowed up with the rest of the market. Gains made by leaders were either reduced or canceled, but in view of rather wide recessions in some leading industrials, rails and utilities, the setbacks in film shares were negligible.

Appearances indicated that the change in speculative attitude toward picture stocks, which placed the issues among the leaders in last week's market upturn, was not temporary and there was a growing disposition to look to the final quarters for a sizeable pickup in picture revenues and consequent enhancement in value of industry's stocks.

This was reflected in an absence of selling pressure against film stocks in reactionary sessions and the increasingly favorable comment on long-term outlook for the shares. Some of the leaders were subject to quiet accumulation in recent sessions.

The market was dominated by the war debt situation and the Franco-American deadlock on the question unsettled the market in Monday and Tuesday sessions.

Loew's was an outstanding feature during the week, maintaining a large part of its Saturday runup. The stock was bought as a result of current earnings estimates that placed per share earnings for the fiscal year ended August 31 between $6.50 and $7 a share. This compares with $9.65 a share earned in the preceding fiscal year, considered good in view of the general situation. The stock was cited in many quarters as an attractive speculation.

Eastman Kodak, after running up sharply near the end of last week, was subject to considerable realizing and sold off to around 148 after having touched a high of 156½.

Warners was fairly steady in a narrow range. Reports were current that the company in the near future would segregate its radio and motion picture activities and form a new holding corporation to take over certain assets of Brunswick-Balke-Collender, its subsidiary, in which, according to report, Warners would retain a controlling stock interest. It will be remembered that it was the radio division that put the company in the "red" in the last fiscal year's operations.

Fox Theatres A was in some supply on the curb as a result of the earnings report for the fiscal year ended October 26, 1930, showing a net loss of $2,484,824, compared with net income of $2,748,006 in the preceding year.

Loew's Net for 40 Weeks Equal to $5.75 Per Share

A net profit equal to approximately $5.75 a share will be reported by Loew's, Inc., after subsidiary preferred dividends, on 1,413,574 common shares for the 40 weeks ended about June 6, and probably will show close to $7 a share for the fiscal year ending August 31, 1931, says the Wall Street Journal. These figures will compare with a net profit of $11,781,924 or approximately $7.64 a share on 1,413,351 shares in the first 40 weeks of 1930 and $14,600,332 or $9.90 a share for the 1930 fiscal year.

For the 28 weeks ended March 13, 1931, corresponding roughly to the first half of the fiscal year, Loew's reported a net of $6,879,960 or approximately $4.50 a share on common after subsidiary preferred dividends, against $8,243,584 or $5.46 a share on the present amount of stock a year ago.

It is expected that the company will declare the usual $1 extra dividend on the common in the fall

Fox Theatres Net Loss of $2,484,824 Recorded for 1930

Fox Theatres Corporation with its affiliates and subsidiaries showed a net loss of $2,484,824 for the year ended Oct. 26, 1930, after interest, depreciation, amortization, write-offs and minority interests.

Consolidated income account: Receipts from admissions, rents and result of operations of jointly operated projects $33,717,078; other income $430,781; total income $34,147,859; operating expenses $31,349,641; operating profit $2,798,218; guarantee receivable, in bonds from owner of former theatre circuit $739,241; total $3,537,459; interest $3,353,658; depreciation $1,295,079; amortization $1,280,636; loss on sale of investments and property written off $25,555; loss $2,417,469; proportion of profit of controlled and affiliated companies applicable to outside interests $67,355; net loss $2,484,824.

Independents Plan Closing Four Days

Plans for closing the neighborhood and suburban motion picture theatres of St. Louis and St. Louis County four nights a week as a means of reducing expenses were considered at a meeting of St. Louis motion picture theatre owners this week. Fifty independent theatres are considering the proposal that they close their doors on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays until next fall. First-run houses would not be affected.

TEXT OF FEDERAL COUNCIL'S FINDINGS

Following is the full text of the conclusions of the Department of Research and Education of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America:

"In drawing conclusions . . . the reader should bear in mind the limitations of the study. . . . We are not attempting to answer the question, which is very properly absorbing the attention of many of our constituents, to what extent motion pictures violate the standards of decency and propriety for which the churches stand. We have not attempted to study the great mass of films that the industry is releasing to the public week by week. Nor are we venturing to pass judgment on the various proposals for public regulation of the motion picture industry. Rather, we are presenting relevant facts relating to the existing policies and procedures by which the industry is avowedly attempting to put its house in order and the methods it is using. To this end we have directed our attention briefly to the activities of the Hays organization as representing the industry as a whole. No attempt has been made to evaluate the policies of individual companies.

"The report undertakes, first, to present a general picture of the industry and an analysis of trade practices, and secondly, to discuss in particular the ethical questions that are giving concern to patrons of the industry and to the general public. In these conclusions we shall consider chiefly the major ethical questions. We wish to make clear also that in the judgments here set down we are not calling in question the motives of any individual or group. Rather, we are trying to evaluate policies and practices from the point of view of the public welfare. We regard the present inquiry as a case study in corporate ethics.

Cites Laudable Purposes

"That the Hays organization has entertained some laudable purposes, has set up some constructive procedures and has definite accomplishments to its credit, we think is clear. The record shows that the studio relations department has done some constructive work in hammering out standards and securing recognition of them. The development of an extensive program of cooperation with women's groups in the use of preview lists and in the arrangement of special programs is no small accomplishment.

"The record of the industry in settling disputes by arbitration is impressive. It appears also to have accomplished something noteworthy in the matter of employment conditions, through the operation of the Central Casting Corporation in Hollywood. In such undertakings there is much of social value to conserve.

"But the development of a public spirited policy within the industry is a slow process and fraught with difficulties of which the organization has not informed the public. To win acceptance for social standards and ethical trade practices by the producers and to keep refractory members from 'running out' on the organization has taxed the resources of its officers, who have nevertheless sought to conceal their household problems and to put up a bold front to the public. A franker acknowledgement of difficulties and a placing of responsibility for tardiness of achievement might have gained greater public support and might also have been an effectual disciplinary measure within the organization. As matters stand, critics of the industry contend that there is a disappointing disparity between 'promise and fulfillment.'

"It must be recognized that the task of introducing higher standards in motion pictures has been rendered much more difficult by the advent of sound. The relatively low standards of the vaudeville stage have long been a matter of common knowledge. Almost over night the industry found itself with a horde of undisciplined vaudeville actors and entertainers on its hands, many of them notoriously lacking in moral and esthetic. Furthermore, the motion picture industry is confronted with the task of evolving and maintaining standards in an atmosphere created by the current interest in 'freedom,' 'self-expression,' avoidance of 'repression,' and philistinism in art and literature. This atmosphere is constantly breathed by the patrons of a 'legitimate' stage that recognizes no standards and is hospitable to exhibitions which probably few motion picture producers would attempt to put on the screen even though they might have no personal scruples in the matter.

Sees Block Booking as Factor

"With reference to block booking and blind booking, it is beyond question that this 'wholesale merchandising,' as the industry calls it, puts the exhibitor of exceptional taste and conscientiousness at a great disadvantage. If he does not know precisely what he is contracting for and if he receives undesirable pictures beyond the limit of his cancelling privilege he is powerless to maintain standards. The system is undoubtedly an obstacle to the efforts of patrons of the theatres to place responsibility for the choice of films directly upon the exhibitors.

"Yet the practical difficulty of eliminating the block booking system is doubtless great. The exhibitors themselves recognize the advantage of wholesale buying. The new contract which would allow an exhibitor to reject 5 per cent of the 'block' without any payment therefor should help to remedy the difficulty experienced by exhibitors who are concerned over the pressure exerted upon them to run objectionable films. However, until the doubt raised by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the arbitration case as to the legality of a standard contract is resolved the industry hesitates to put the improved contract into effect.

"The plain fact, however, is that within the industry complaints by exhibitors against the block booking system on moral grounds are not numerous. We think the emphasis upon the technical procedure of distribution tends to distract attention from the main issue, which is to induce the industry to make better pictures and to cease making objectionable pictures. Whatever regulative measures may be desirable, there is no substitute for a more refined demand at the box office window.

"The producers point out that block booking may serve to carry exceptionally good pictures which alone would not stand the box office test. On the other hand, if this contention is valid the system may be fairly judged by the extent to which under its operation the number of superior films booked is increased.

"Much confusion still exists, apparently, as to the relation between the films themselves and the advertising by which the public is induced to go to see them. Many a picture is assumed to be salacious because of misleading advertising, some of which is an affront to decency and taste. Where this is true the industry must accept responsibility. It can be said for the producers and distributors that they are only partly accountable for advertising. Where the advertising complained of is taken from the producers' press books or consists of billboard posters furnished by the distribution-producer, the latter must bear the blame. But ultimately, the exhibitor is the advertiser. Obviously, however, with increasing consolidation of production, distribution and exhibition, the public must look increasingly to the central organization of the industry for the development of standards and for making them effective. The results of the new Advertising Code will likely be an important factor in determining the attitude of the public toward the industry.

"Much Dissatisfaction"

"That there is a very large amount of dissatisfaction among leaders of religious and social work with the present status of motion pictures is beyond question. The numerous resolutions by religious bodies and organizations which are cited in this report make this fact clear. The dissatisfaction is not confined to reform groups or agencies. It is felt by many who are by no means illiberal in their social outlook or 'puritanical' in their ideals. On the other hand, those who complain that the critics of the industry often overlook its better products in making their appraisal and that they tend to put forward more rigid standards than the public can be induced to support undoubtedly have ground for their contention.

"The question is asked on behalf of the Hays organization why the Protestant churches have not been more responsive to its approaches and have not participated in any consistent way in its cooperative program. The principal reason, we believe, is that confidence is lacking. There is no adequate basis in confidence for full and hearty cooperation with the industry on the part of the churches, the religious press and agencies of religious and moral education.

"The prime requisite for an adequate test of cooperative measures is a clearer understanding on the part of socially minded people of the function of the Hays organization as the producers and distributors themselves understand it. The frequent reference to Mr. Hays as a 'czar' of the industry is misleading. We find no ground for such a claim to power on his behalf, yet the circumstances of the creation of Mr. Hays' office were such as to encourage it, and Mr. Hays' assurances that the industry 'stands at attention' to do the will of disinterested public groups, suggest some extraordinary power on his part. Thus, it has come about that critics of the industry have tended to draw one of two inferences: either the organization is impotent to do what Mr. Hays and his associates would like to accomplish or it is a 'smoke-screen' to deceive the public and to cover purposes of a narrowly selfish character.

"The fact seems to be that the producers and distributors never intended to delegate to Mr. Hays arbitrary power, but that they have looked to him and to his organization to negotiate, so to speak, with an insistent public opinion in a way to accommodate the industry to inevitable changes in standards with the least possible loss to a group of profit-making enterprises. This is not to say that they were uninterested in standards, but they were conducting a business, and they probably acted in accord with prevailing policies among business enterprises. We believe that a full understanding of his limited powers and of the difficulties that have constantly attended the efforts of his organization in the field of standards would have done much to simplify the task of Mr. Hays and to allay suspicion concerning his organization.

Methods Raise Questions

"But some of the methods employed by the Hays organization, discussed in the text of this report, in winning approval for the industry and support for its program raise serious questions. They have contributed much to the attitude of questioning and suspicion to which we have referred. It is not sufficient that plausible reasons may be assigned for the relationships assumed and maintained. The fact that persons responsibly placed who received honoraria from the industry for varied services may be presumed in every case to have rendered only services which the recipient thought warranted, does not avail as a justification.

"To be sure, these methods are not uncommon. They were made familiar to the American public through the investigation of the public utilities propaganda three years ago. It may even be argued that the chief significance of the facts here disclosed is in calling attention to the vague and indefinite ethics of the business community. But an organization that is avowedly attempting to improve the moral standards of its members and is inviting the public to render whole-hearted cooperation in this effort must use methods that are above suspicion. The payment of an honorarium to an administrative official of a religious organization by a trade association at a time when policies are being formulated in which that association has an obvious interest invites a damaging interpretation when the facts are disclosed. And the payment of honoraria, in whatever form it may appear on the books, to a field representative of a religious organization in recognition of services rendered on the platform, when all the while the public knows nothing of such a financial arrangement, is bound, when disclosed, to undermine public confidence on both sides and to give rise to sinister inferences. As has been stated in the report, we have found no evidence that the services rendered to the industry in the cases involving the Federal Council were not conscientiously rendered. But the fact that sincere people can become involved so easily in this kind of arrangement only to find themselves presently in an impossible position, makes the practices in question all the more serious.

"It should be clearly understood that the question here raised is not one of acceptance of extra-salary compensation per se. The latter question is one which we think every religious, social and educational organization would do well to study, and upon which a well thought out policy for the guidance of its staff is an ethical asset. But, in the present instance, the judgment we have expressed rests upon the particular circumstances described.

Urges Self-Regulation

"It is probably safe to say that the public—at least, the church constituency—will welcome a greater willingness on the part of the Hays organization to let its achievements stand on their merits and to give less of its time and resources to the 'cultivation' of persons of influence.

"The opinion is widespread that the motion picture industry should be regulated in the public interest. Whatever may be the issue of efforts now being made to establish public regulation of the industry—and the scope of this study has not been such as to warrant a recommendation on that point—it must be patent that voluntary cooperative efforts toward social betterment, wisely conceived and well directed, are capable of accomplishing something which the imposition of force can never accomplish. Experience with the regulation of business and industry points to the desirability of promoting self-regulation to the utmost. It is thus that the ethics of group relationships are evolved.

"But there has been no adequate test of the procedures set up by the Hays organization to improve standards because the essential basis—confidence—has been lacking. The discontinuance of the Committee on Public Relations, as this report shows, was accompanied by, if it did not result directly from, defections on the part of important and representative members who were concerned about policies. If the Hays organization is going to serve either the industry or the public in an acceptable way it must keep the public more fully advised of its purposes, methods and problems. Only frank and ingenuous statements must be made as to the organization's purposes and accomplishments. It is not sufficient that policies and procedures be honest in purpose; they must be convincingly honest in execution.

"If a new basis in confidence can be established the industry will be entitled to a more cooperative attitude on the part of those who are now its critics. Much of the criticism up to this time, however well inspired, has been uninformed upon many important practical aspects of the problem and so exclusively negative in character that irritation on the part of the industry and bafflement on the part of interested citizens have resulted. The situation has indeed called for crusading—and the present study is perhaps among the results of such crusading—but the need of the present hour is the formulation of a constructive policy. The complaint of the industry that Protestant groups and agencies have in large measure been unresponsive to its request for cooperation cannot be wholly dismissed on the ground that confidence in the industry is lacking. It calls attention sharply to the lack of any adequate means of formulating and expressing the judgment of our Protestant churches so as to register effectively either approval or disapproval of the industry, its product and its policies. There has been hitherto no comprehensive, competent agency, convincingly disinterested in both administration and program, which could supply competent and helpful criticism and guidance to the industry.

Proposes Representative Agency

"Unrelated, sporadic criticisms and advices will help the industry little in the task of building standards and making them effective. If measures of public regulation are needed some representative agency should be charged with the duty of thinking through the measures proposed and recording a judgment concerning them. On the other hand, to the extent that cooperation with the industry in measures of self-regulation promises results, such an agency is equally needful in order that cooperative measures may be devised and executed in responsible fashion.

"The agencies representing the community would do well to make their influence more broadly social. It is well that critics of the industry should be alert to discover and eliminate objectionable scenes and spoken lines, but this is only the negative aspect of the problem. The industry should be made to feel a demand for more socially useful pictures, for pictures that will contribute to the effort in which the churches are engaged to promote responsible citizenship, interracial understanding, industrial justice and international goodwill. The religious and social agencies are themselves at fault in becoming too much preoccupied with 'cuts' and 'eliminations.' The motion pictures cannot be made good by the use of scissors.

"We urge that the facts recorded in this report be made the subject of careful study in order that our churches and religious organizations may become a positive factor in improving standards within the motion picture industry by aiding those of its efforts which are constructive, by increasing its sense of social responsibility, and by formulating a sound judgment on the issue of public regulation. As a great agency both of instruction and entertainment the motion picture must become the purveyor of all that is best and richest in our culture and the ally of the uplifting and refining forces of community life."

Herald-Tribune Says: —

The New York Herald-Tribune on June 30 said editorially, under the heading "Scissors-and-Paste Morality":

"'The motion pictures cannot be made good by the use of scissors'—that sentence from the long report of the churchmen upon the Hollywood industry is worth all the rest of the report. It applies to so many things and to so many brands of meddling moralists . . .

"A bad film cannot be made good by any or all of the groups of tired gentlemen looking at films and scissoring them in the various states of the Union. To reduce a kiss from a full minute to a split second, to reduce a 'damn' to a 'darn,' to decree that Mickey Mouse's cow must not have too conspicuous a milk capacity—these are the forms of morality of men who understand nothing whatever of either men or morals. If the standards of the motion picture industry are to be raised it will not be done by waving pious scissors but by building organically within the industry.

HAYS MAKES REPLY

Will H. Hays, in his letter to Bishop Francis J. McConnell, president of the Federal Council, deplores the fact that the Federal Council did not release to the press the factual report from which its department's conclusion on the industry were drawn, and charges an "unwarranted distinction which the department's conclusions attempt to set up between the aims and purposes of this organization (MPPDA) and the alleged or implied failure of motion picture producers, distributors and exhibitors to cooperate in the program of self-regulation set up in the industry." Hays in his reply then states in part:

"As against such conclusions, statement after statement is made in the factual report on the authority of the investigators employed by the Department of Research and Education, indicating the most gratifying cooperation on the part of producers.

"Discussing the effect of the new Production Code adopted by the organized motion picture industry, the department's own investigator makes the following observations in the factual report:

" 'In 1930 the new Production Code, which was first applied in Hollywood in March, introduced another factor affecting the number of rejections. Almost at once it became the criterion for judging material. If a proffered play or book was otherwise acceptable, the first question to be asked was, "Can this—without mutilation—be made under the new code?" If the answer was "No," rejection followed. This may account for the sudden increase in the number of rejections reported in 1930. On the other hand, to the extent that the interpretation of the new code by Mr. Joy and his staff has shown producers how to salvage works which previously would have been rejected, the number of rejections has been kept down.'

"Referring to the Advertising Code adopted by the motion picture industry in June, 1930, the factual report contains the following statement:

" 'Since that time a number of cases have arisen calling for sharp criticism by officials of the organization and apparently resulting in the discontinuance of the specific advertising. There also appear to have been some cases in which offending advertising managers of certain theatres belonging to affiliated circuits were penalized for violations of the Code by loss of their positions or transfer to less important ones.'

"If the organized motion picture industry has secured the cooperation of social, religious, educational and other organizations in the constructive movement for better pictures, it is because American motion picture producers have held the door wide open to every agency able and willing to promote this objective. . . .

"If such results have demanded a constant educational effort, if to encourage such efforts and movements the industry has helped pay printing costs, postage and mailing, allowed reasonable honoraria covering traveling or other necessary expenses in the delivery of lectures, and paid for authoritative study and advice on the various problems before it, no apology is required to your Department of Research and Education which has not a single practical proposal to its credit for the betterment of motion pictures.

"Whatever payments were made for services rendered by individuals associated with your organization, in order to guide producers in the treatment of themes with religious significance, whatever honoraria were paid in the form of expenses to lecturers enlisted in the movement of raising the standards of demand for better pictures, were made on the basis of extra-salary compensation, the principle of which is accepted in your department's own report. . . .

". . . What is to be said about those who betray their religious constituencies by demanding and receiving compensation for lecture tours on the subject of 'exposing the movies?' . . .

"Certainly no study that presumes to cover the subject of public relations in the motion picture industry can ignore such patent facts, and your Department of Research and Education could have accomplished a real public service by differentiating in its report between honest and constructive criticism, and the exclusively destructive criticism that comes from the sources indicated.

"Your Department investigators were fully informed of a letter written to the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, under date of June 14, 1926, by the Rev. George Reid Andrews, in his then capacity of chairman of the Federal Council Committee on Religious Drama and as executive secretary of the now reputedly disbanded Church and Drama Association. From this letter, I quote in part as follows:

" 'That ten per cent of the gross receipts of the picture (referring to the "King of Kings") be paid into the treasury of our Church and Drama Association only so long as I am chairman of the board of trustees or executive secretary of the organization.

" 'If and when I should retire from the organization, the right is reserved to me to say whether what funds remaining in the treasury or coming into the treasury shall be payable to the Drama Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. If for any reason neither of these organizations can receive the funds, then they shall revert to me personally.'

"From the day he was finally made to realize that the industry would not accede to this and subsequent demands for contributions, the Rev. George Reid Andrews has conducted a campaign of statements and charges against the organized motion picture industry. . . .

"The fact remains, however, that progress, and steady progress is being made. Insofar as the Department of Research and Education has itself recorded the evidence of such progress, it praise the doughnut and condemns the size of the hole.

Issue Beclouded, Milliken Holds

The administrative committee of the Federal Council "has been placed in an unfortunate position" because "the Department of Research and Education, after clarifying the principles on which honoraria were paid by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, beclouds the issue in its conclusions," writes Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the MPPDA, from California. Milliken said in part:

"The Department's actual report clearly establishes that all payments of honoraria were legitimate expenditures, without sinister intent whatsoever. The factual report states that during the years 1928, 1929 and 1930, 52 individuals received some expenses or honoraria for aiding in the work of developing the better quality of picture demand.

"In the face of its own clear record, the department felt impelled to cite in its conclusions the payment of these legitimate honoraria as 'of chief significance in calling attention to the vague and indefinite ethics of the business community.' At the same time in its conclusions the department passed by in complete silence the numerous demands made upon the industry for contributions which the industry declined to make, because of a lack of that propriety of purpose which prevailed in the cases where payments were made.

"My resignation for the administrative committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, to which I was elected in 1924, is an expression of my personal feeling, as a member of the administrative committee, concerning the unfortunate position in which such a clouded report places the Federal Council. My resignation was in no sense associated with my duties as secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America."

Federal Council Vindicates Trade

to former members of the Council's staff, saying:

The payment of an honorarium to an administrative official of a religious organization by a trade association at a time when policies are being formulated in which that association has an obvious interest invites a damaging interpretation when the facts are disclosed. And the payment of honoraria, in whatever form it may appear on the books, to a field representative of a religious organization in recognition of services rendered on the platform, when all the while the public knows nothing of such a financial arrangement, is bound, when disclosed, to undermine public confidence on both sides and to give rise to sinister inferences. As has been stated in the report, we have found no evidence that the services rendered to the industry in the cases involving the Federal Council were not conscioentiously rendered.

Unfortunate and not altogether appreciative reception of the report in some quarters have unhappily tended to give the publicity attendant upon it the aspects of a controversy, which in truth does not exist. It is clear indeed from a calm reading of the report that there is no war between the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and the motion picture industry.

There does appear to be some controversy between Mr. Will H. Hays and some ministers, as evidenced by a letter from Mr. Hays to Bishop Francis J. McConnell, president of the council, made widely public. In this communication a deal of attention is devoted to an older controversy with the Reverend George Reid Andrews, dating back to 1926 when he was chairman of the Federal Council Committee on Religious Drama and executive secretary of the Church and Drama Association. It will be remembered that the Reverend Mr. Andrews wrote a letter "asking for 10 percent of the gross receipts of the 'King of Kings'," and stipulating a number of conditions, among them one under which the funds would have reverted to him personally.

However it does not appear that either the motion picture industry or the Protestant churches are properly on trial today over that mouldering, ancient issue.

Censorship Fails, Mrs. McGoldrick Tells Canadians

Political censorship has failed and the solution of problems of moral and religious values in motion pictures lies in appealing to the source of production, Rita C. McGoldrick, who conducts the department of "The School and the Screen" in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, declared in an address delivered Monday afternoon before graduates of the Catholic schools of Canada at the convention of Les Associations Federees in Toronto. Madame Aurelien Belanger is president of the organization.

Speaking of the work of the Motion Picture Bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, Mrs. McGoldrick told the convention:

"It has been our experience that politically appointed censors, with their legal limitations, were not interested in the moral values, the respect for religion, the question of divorce, the use of holy and sacred objects, the dignity of the church, as we were.

The speaker said that as a result of the Bureau's work, "no book, short story, synopsis or scenario, with any Catholic reference, is purchased by the producers without our having been asked for an approval. And in this we claim 100 per cent protection. No American-made picture has been released in the past five years in any way offensive to us as Catholics. There was one exception and this picture was subsequently changed for us at an extraordinary expense.

Mrs. McGoldrick told the convention of the improvement in production standards achieved since the adoption of the Production Code of Ethics.

"Within this past year we have seen the fruit of it in many instances," she said. "Notwithstanding those pictures that you and I object to, statistically the number of endorsed pictures has increased. Where in 1929 to 1930 our Bureau endorsed only 49 per cent of the industry's product, in this year the percentage will be more than 60 per cent. We noticed the improvement particularly in the short subjects, which have sprung up astonishingly in the percentage of endorsements. We are also witnessing a new phase of production in pictures suitable for juveniles."

The speaker told how the Bureau, recognizing the deplorable status of public taste that had made box office losses of such productions as "Disraeli," "Abraham Lincoln," "With Byrd at the South Pole," and John McCormack's "Song o' My Heart," while gang pictures swelled attendance, had set about deliberately to give as wide publicity as possible to pictures of a high moral standard, "hoping thereby to encourage the producers to make more of the same kind."

Hostessing!

The Paramount in Omaha reports splendid results with the newly-inaugurated hostess idea. The hostess solicits theatre parties, offering choice seats in a reserved section. She watches local paper announcements of bridge parties and communicates with the sponsor of the affair, suggesting a theatre party to follow the bridge. So far, so good!

Myers' View on Sponsored Reel

Although there has been no definite decision as yet to abandon the proposed sponsored ad-newsreel planned by Allied States, association leaders, headed by President Abram F. Myers, will abide by decision of theatre members who now have in their possession a request to analyze the situation as to its economic possibilities and the angle of an antagonistic press. Decision of the majority, expected shortly, will rule.

Abandonment of sponsored policies by Paramount, Warners, Fox and others, led Myers to re-consider advisability of going through with the Kinograms reel, initial issue of which is scheduled for mid-August.

If Allied decides to drop the plan, it is felt in organization circles that little difficulty will arise with advertising clients upon cancellation of the several contracts for space which already have been signed.

Educational to Hold 3 Meetings

Educational will hold three regional sales meetings, the first scheduled for the Hotel Astor, New York, July 13 and 14, with representatives of Eastern, Southern and Canadian branches present.

The second meeting will be at the Congress Hotel, Chicago, July 16 and 17, for middle-western representatives. The final meeting is set for the Brown Palace Hotel, Denver, July 20 and 21, for Western people.

Home office executives will attend all meetings, when selling of Educational, Tiffany and Sono Art-World Wide product will be discussed.

National Broadcasting Asks Television License

A license for an experimental television station to operate in the ultra high frequencies has been requested of the Federal Radio Commission by the National Broadcasting Company. The concern already has three such licenses.

Will Organize Council to Work with Industry

Committee Also Will Be Entrusted With the Task of General Supervision of Houses

With 400 delegates from all parts of Canada in attendance and after a prolonged discussion in which ecclesiastical leaders, government officials and representatives of motion picture interests participated, a cinema committee of the Federated Alumnae Associations of the Catholic Convents of Canada was set up in Ottawa Thursday in the interests of better motion pictures.

In addition to the elected delegates of the Alumnae associations, large numbers of clergymen, teaching nuns and Catholic women graduates sat through a sweltering session in which every possible phase of the motion picture question was debated.

Vote to Organize

The general trend of the discussions centered upon the best and most practical action to be taken by this organized group of college women looking to the safeguarding of "the requisites of Catholic doctrine and morality in motion picture exhibitions."

A resolution was agreed upon to organize among the various bodies and societies that represent Catholic theatregoers in Canada, a Canadian Catholic Motion Picture Council, entrusted with the task of a general supervision of motion picture theatres; "the lodging of protests against offensive films" and "insufficient censures"; the organization of systematic propaganda to educate Canadian Catholics to demand and support clean pictures and to raise the public taste in matters of the cinema; to bring about practical cooperation with the motion picture industry in general.

McGoldrick Paper Read

Col. John A. Cooper, president, Motion Picture Distributors & Exhibitors of Canada; Major J. C. Boylen, chairman, Board of Censors of the Province of Ontario; Eugene Beaulac, chairman of the Censor Board of the Province of Quebec; Hon. N. A. Belcourt, member of the Canadian senate, and a representative of Quigley Publications were among those not members of the Women's Federation who had a part in the extended discussions.

Mrs. Thomas A. McGoldrick, chairman of the Motion Picture Committee of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, who was to have delivered one of the addresses, failed to put in an appearance. Her paper was read to the assembly by one of the delegates and proved to be the most impressive contribution of the entire proceedings.

Much discussion was given over to the moral character and tone of the pictures "imported from the United States" and exhibited widely in all parts of Canada. The Production Code of Ethics, adopted last

Emil Heber, His Wife and Granddaughter

Five-Dollar Bill Gave Him House But That Was Two Decades Ago

And Now Emil ("Pop") Heber Is on Way to Europe for Vacation After Seeing Theatre Business of California Rise From Early Beginnings of many trials

Down payment of a five-dollar bill made him a full-fledged theatre owner. That was two decades ago, and now Emil Heber, known up and down the West Coast as one of the pioneer theatre men and one of the northern California's most popular exhibitors, is on the high seas bound for a well-earned vacation in Europe. With "Pop" on the German liner Bremen when it sailed at midnight Tuesday from New York were his wife and granddaughter, Helen Heber.

"Pop" Heber, now proprietor of the Mission theatre in Sacramento, came to America nearly 25 years ago and his first business venture was a small delicatessen shop in Jersey City. Then came the Horace Greeley slogan, "Go West, Young Man," and Heber eventually became the owner of the Piedmont theatre, in California, with the "five-spot" clinching the deal.

There were plenty of heartaches in those four years that he operated the Piedmont, but he finally climbed out of the red side of the ledger. In 1917 he transferred his interest to Sacramento with the purchase of the Nippon theatre and later the Majestic. The Majestic, 1,000-seat theatre, is now under the name Mission theatre.

Other theatres which were under "Pop's" direction are the Sequoia, another Sacramento house which operated for nearly 10 years, and the new Alhambra at Alturas, Cal., de luxe house which he built three years ago and sold when he decided to concentrate his interests in Sacramento.

The party will visit Germany, France and England and other countries before their return in the fall.

First Terry-Toon Club

Educational's idea for a Terry-Toon Music and Fun Club, started at the Cameo, Philadelphia, with 2,500 youngsters present last Saturday, seems to be getting away to a good start. Children were presented with buttons, novelty instruments and instructions on how to be a real club member. Exhibitors from other territories were present, and were sufficiently impressed to request details as a means of steering the younger element of the populace toward the theatre. Manager Sam Hyman had distributed 10,000 bills and heralds at schools and churches prior to the first meeting.

Allied to Issue Analysis Of Distributors' Contracts

Allied will shortly issue to leaders, and later publish in "Allied Exhibitor," an analysis of contracts now being used by distributors.

The summary will be the work of Nathan Yamin, who wrote on the 5-5-5 Conference.

Jungle Film for Paramount

John Russell, author, has been signed by Paramount to adapt "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" current novel, and for which Ernest B. Schoedsack will film sequences in the actual locale in India.

To Make Italian Films

Cavalier Ufficale Rosario Romeo, Italian actor director, has been signed to appear in and direct a series of Italian talking pictures to be produced by Aurora Film Corporation, New York.

Pettijohn Cuts 9 Film Boards In Retrenchment

Film boards of trade were to be reduced from 32 American offices to 23 on July 1 by Charles C. Pettijohn in a retrenchment program inaugurated by himself, founder of the boards.

C. C. Pettijohn

The reduction will result in doubling the work of adjacent offices, but will remove from the Film Board budget the secretaries, their assistants and staffs in Albany, New Haven, Cincinnati, Charlotte, Des Moines, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Portland and Butte, the cities included in the cut.

Exchanges who are members of the Film Boards in the nine cities off the list, are to elect non-paid secretaries, to whom all credit cases will be referred, but the machinery of operation in the case of those cities will be handled by the board, which takes on the additional territory.

Trader Horn Dies In England at 79

Alfred Aloysius Smith, or Trader Horn, as he was known and sought after for a few brief years of literary lionizing, died last week in a hospital at Whitestable, London, at the age of 79, after a short illness.

Rolling stone, jack of all trades, and principally African trader and miner, he told his story to a novelist in South Africa, who wrote it in novel form, and Trader Horn became a world figure.

M-G-M made the film "Trader Horn," based on the famous novel, and which enjoyed wide success in this country and has been shown all over the world.

Sono Art's "First Aid" Nears Completion at Coast Studio

Sono Art-World Wide is completing at the Coast Metropolitan studios, the latest of the Thrill-O-Drama series, "First Aid," on which release date is set for July 25.

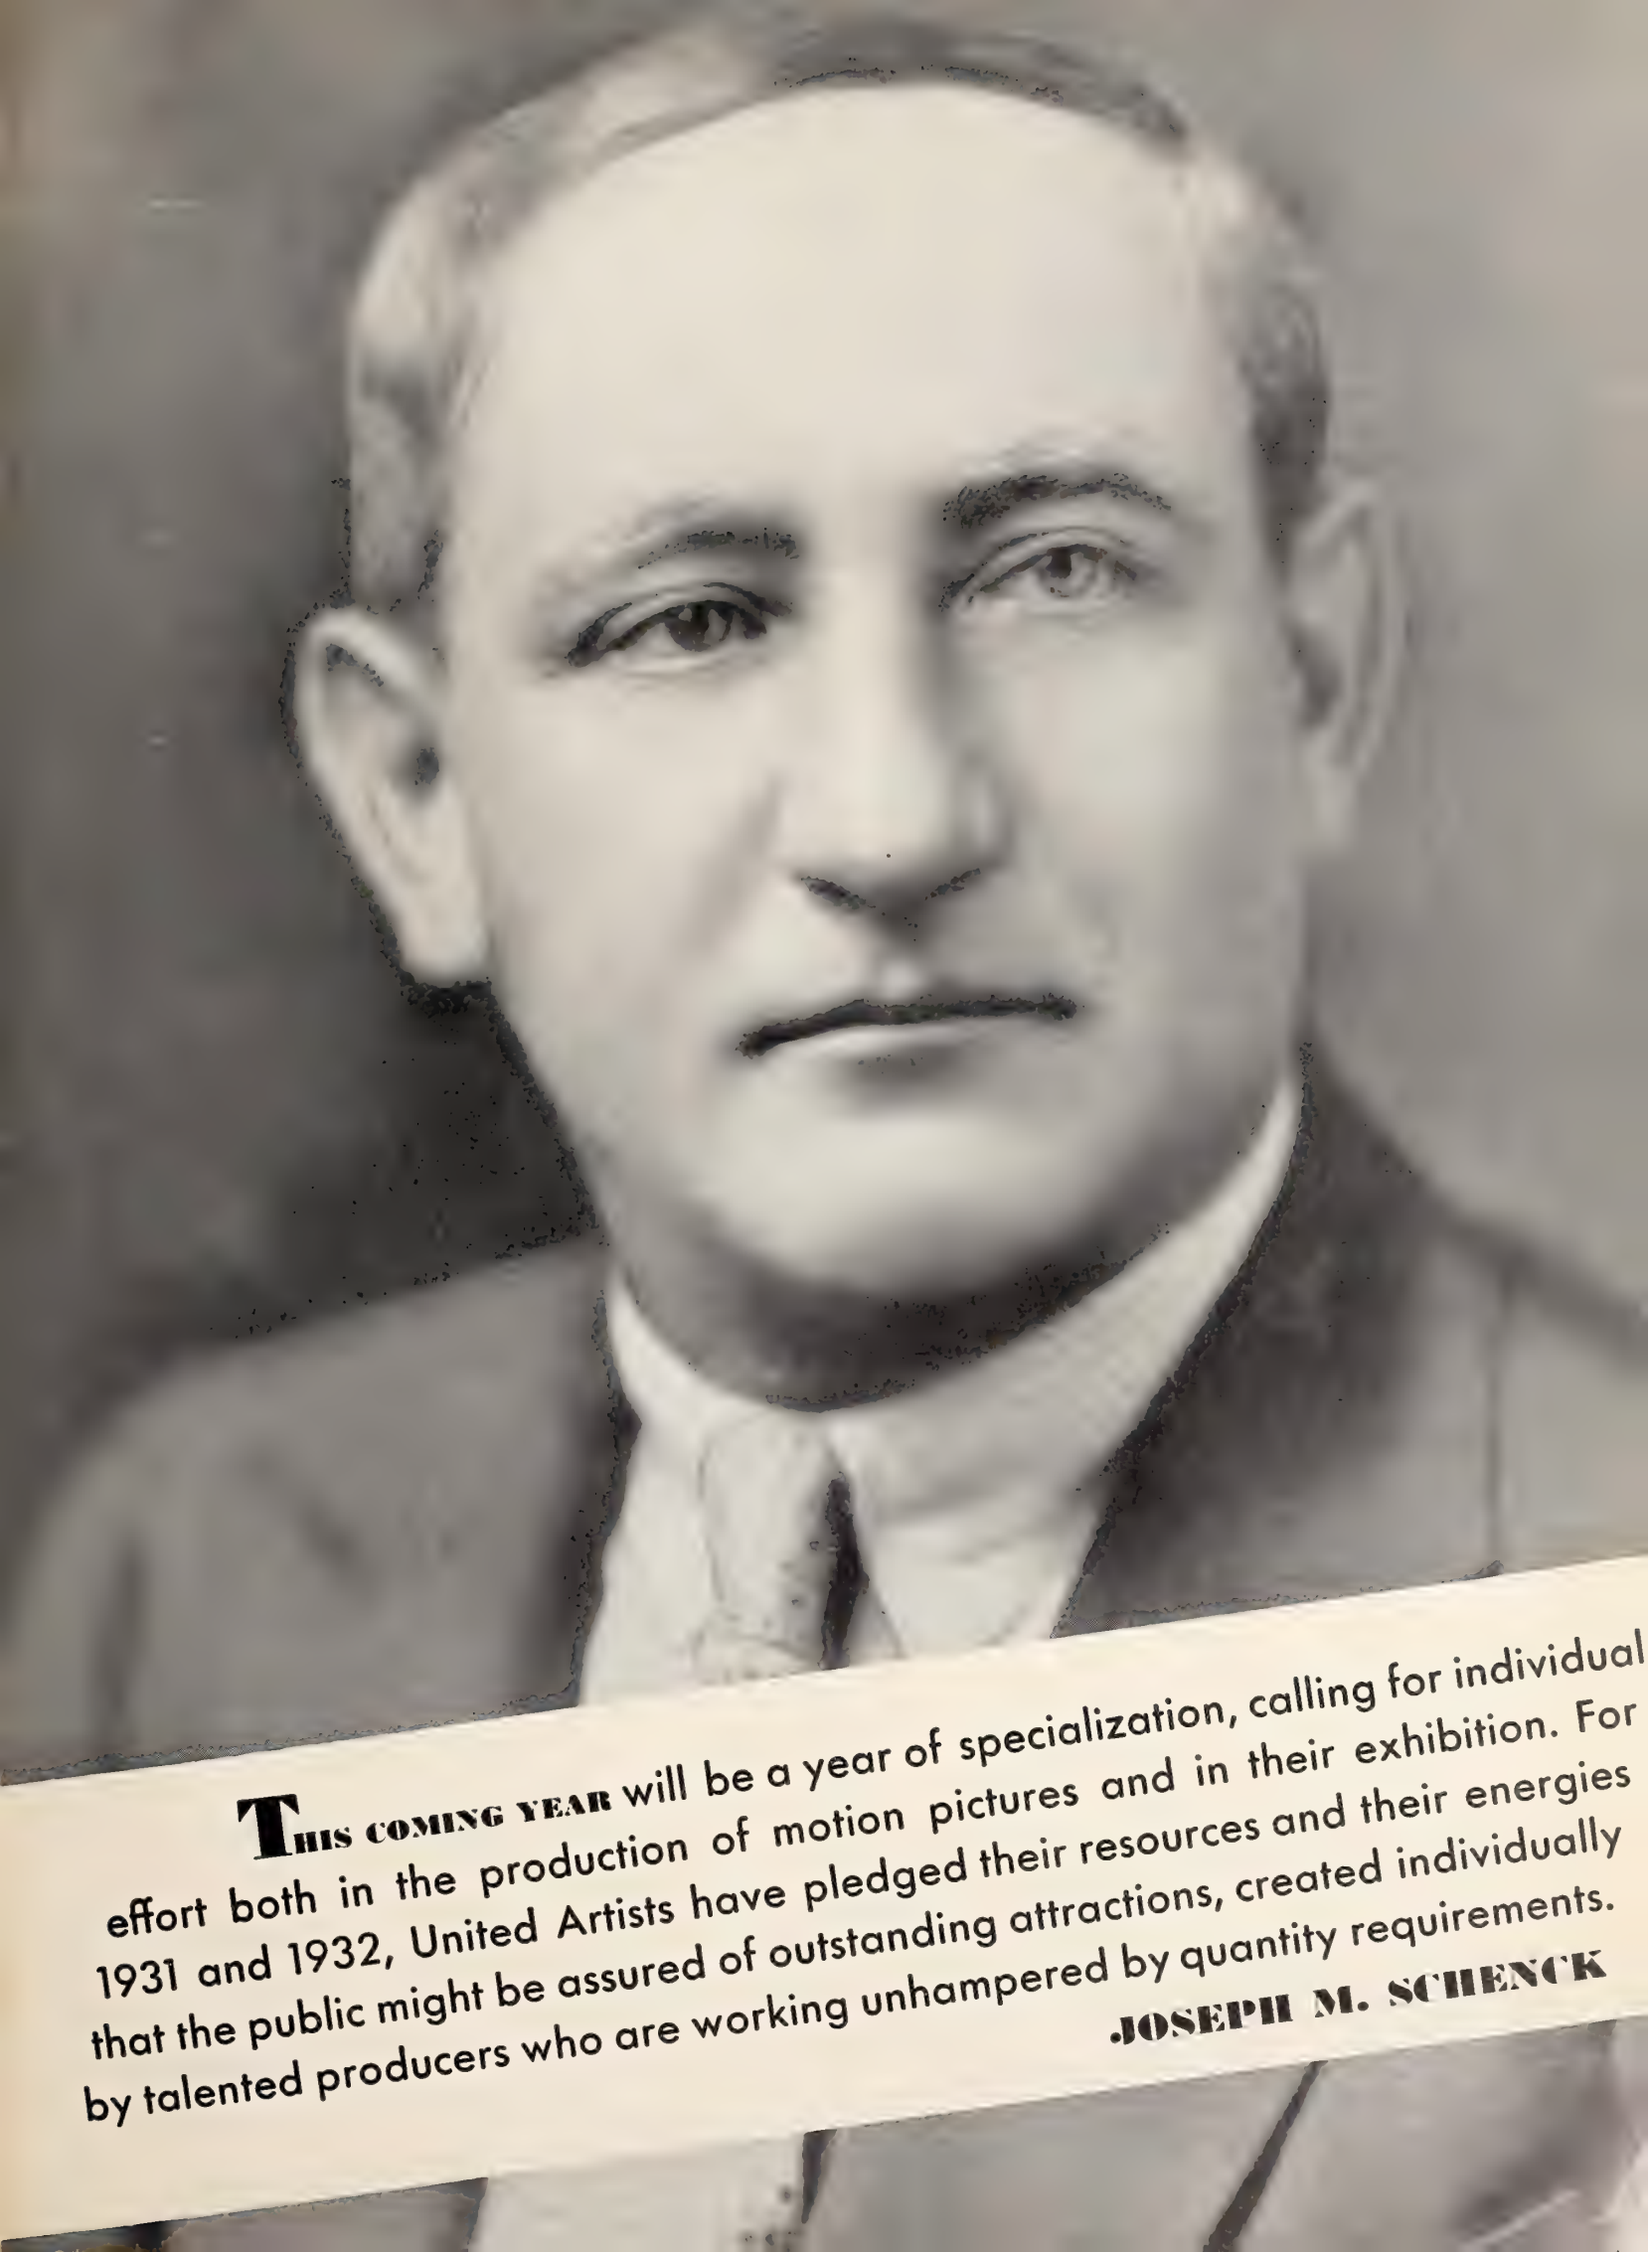
Grant Withers has the featured role, supported by Marjorie Beebe, Donald Keith, Wheeler Oakman and others.

Headline Names Cast

Marion Nixon, Theodore Von Eltz, Lloyd Hughes and Burr McIntosh have been assigned chief roles in the next drama of Headline Pictures, to be produced on the Coast under direction of Charles Hutchison.

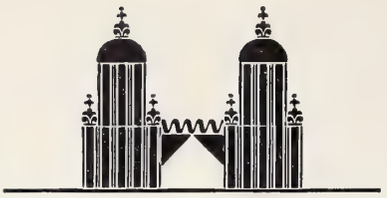
"Wings of Tomorrow" at Little

The Little Picture House, New York, is showing the Visugraphic film "Wings of Tomorrow," in conjunction with the feature film during the weekend of July 4.



THIS COMING YEAR will be a year of specialization, calling for individual effort both in the production of motion pictures and in their exhibition. For 1931 and 1932, United Artists have pledged their resources and their energies that the public might be assured of outstanding attractions, created individually by talented producers who are working unhampered by quantity requirements.

JOSEPH M. SCHENCK



THIS year, more than ever, cold, hard facts must be faced! In 1931 and '32 only the unusually good picture will do profitable business.

The success of a theatre will depend entirely on how carefully the exhibitor will book his pictures.

This applies to a circuit buyer as well as the owner of the smallest theatre.

You cannot afford to speculate on paper promises any more than we can afford to mislead you with righteous enthusiasm about our coming product, which we ourselves have not seen.

This is why we are not urging you to buy blind at this time.

We are in this business to make money — the same as you!

We are interested in your box-office because our money has to come out of it!

United Artists will release but a few productions, BUT THEY WILL BE REAL ATTRACTIONS. More thought, more imagination, more careful planning, more real brains are going into these specially created attractions than ever went into any like number of pictures before.

Your playing time is your biggest asset!
Protect it! You're in show business now!

THERE NEVER CAN BE a substitute for Quality. The best and only the best that can be made will ever meet with the whole-hearted support of the movie-going public that is so necessary in making the production and exhibition of motion pictures a profitable business.

SAMUEL GOLDWYN

Leadership

• • • a Responsibility

The motion picture industry has always looked to United Artists for leadership and inspiration • It is a responsibility . . . but a responsibility that we are proud to hold.

Leadership, first of all, means taking the Initiative . . . this United Artists has always done, to the credit of motion picture advancement, Artistically and Commercially!

Foremost among production leaders stands the name of SAMUEL GOLDWYN, whose genius has been a torch lighting the way of the industry almost since its inception.

A Producer of profitable pictures, he has inspired others to make better pictures, substantially laying the foundation of the industry's stability.

Mr. Goldwyn is the producing general of United Artists Pictures for 1931-1932. His showmanship genius will be a vital part for every production.

Each picture produced and released by UNITED ARTISTS will be AN INDIVIDUAL ATTRACTION, CUSTOM BUILT TO MEET THE 1931-1932 MARKET.

Only stories, books, plays of DEFINITE VALUE have been selected. Only star directors, drawn from the entire field, will be assigned to the production of these plays . . . directors chosen for their particular ability to present a certain kind of story. Stars will be cast in roles they should portray, and supporting casts selected as individuals, not as mere names on a payroll.

Only CREATIVE BRAIN POWER can conceive great pictures. . . . Only CAREFUL, TIRELESS, INSPIRED SHOWMANSHIP can make them great attractions.

We are in Show Business just the same as YOU!

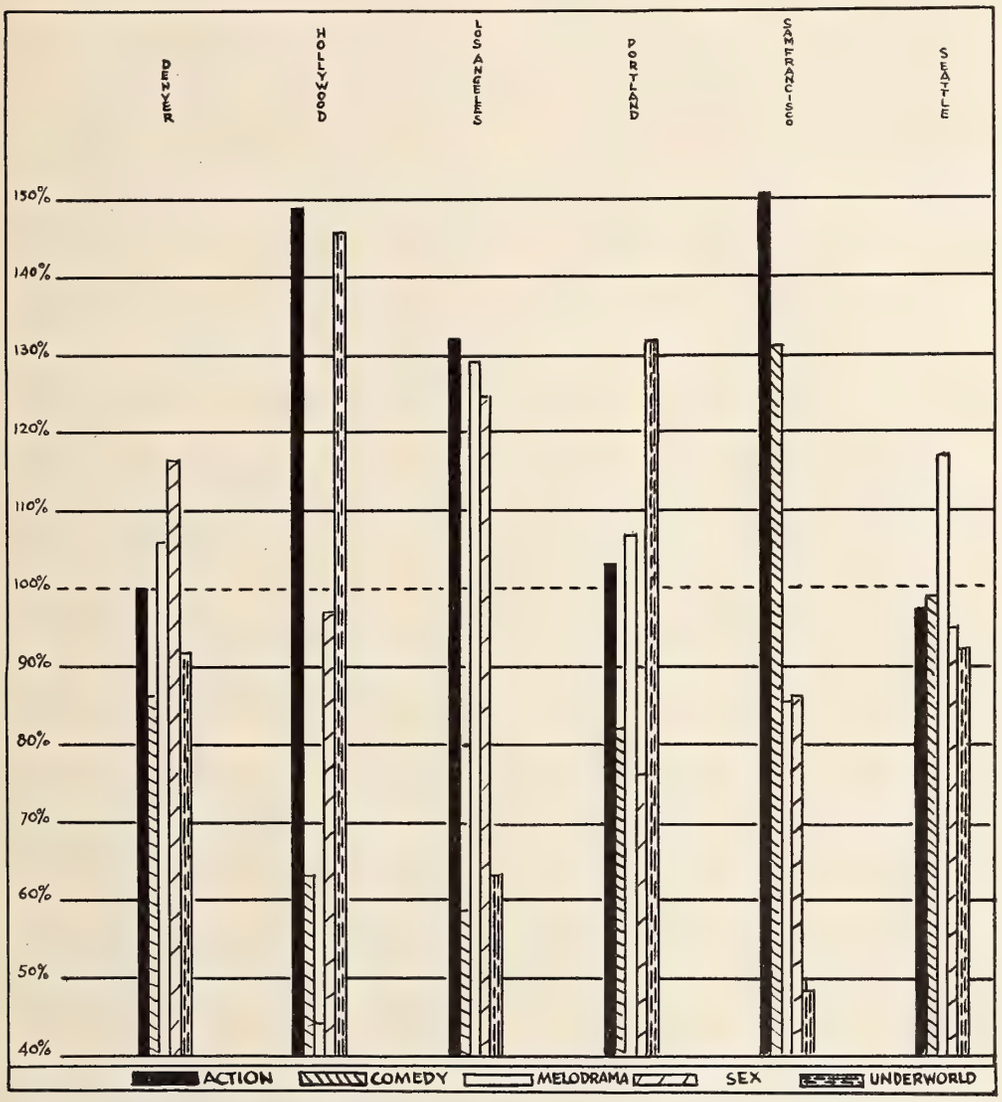
PATRIOTIC WEEK LAUNCHED BY RKO WITH COAST TO COAST SUPPORT



The West likes its action pictures, just as does the Middlewest, as shown in six Western cities in an analysis of Motion Picture Herald's survey of grosses and audience reaction. One hundred per cent in the chart represents the average gross for all kinds of productions.

Vice President Curtis Points Out Timeliness of Appeal to Confidence of Citizens

Patriotic Week is being celebrated July 3 to 10 inclusive throughout the entire RKO circuit in America, following reply by President Hiram S. Brown to a letter from Vice-president Curtis at Washington, expressing the wish that theatres, through screen, stage and radio, again be mobilized this year for extension of the observance of Independence Day into a full week of patriotic expression.

Hiram S. Brown

Organizations, national, state and city officials, merchants and citizens, are being asked to join the movement.

Vice-president Curtis, in his letter written from Topeka, Kan., said:

"The wholehearted acceptance of this suggestion and cooperation in the movement last year resulted in a tremendous demonstration throughout the nation. . . . The movement had a very salutary effect in widening and increasing public interest in this, the greatest of our national holidays and in stimulating patriotism.

"It occurs to me that a repetition would be most helpful. This is the time for an appeal to the patriotism and confidence of our citizens; it is a year when cheerfulness, loyalty and confidence in our great nation and its resources should be fostered and the youth of the land given every encouragement in loyalty and good citizenship. I should like to see flags flying all over the nation during the second 'Patriotic Week'."

In his reply of assurance to Vice-president Curtis that Radio-Keith-Orpheum would give Patriotic Week its fullest cooperation, Brown said:

"May I also add that we deeply appreciate the compliment to the theatre and its patrons in your suggestion that this campaign of loyalty, confidence and cheerfulness be given impetus through the medium of stage and screen."

Launching the movement is a broadcast over 47 stations Friday, July 3, from Maine to California over the NBC network, at 10:30 p. m., New York time. This special Patriotic Program will be sent from the SS. Leviathan, flagship of the United States Lines, with the RKO-lians added to 115 musicians under the leadership of Milton Schwarzwald. Curtis' suggestion will thus be announced to all parts of the United States.

Melos in Demand Instead of Gangs

The decrease in the number of gangster pictures is seen by independents who produce films of the Western and melodramatic action type, as lending fresh impetus to the demand for the type of picture they offer to exhibitors, in the opinion of an executive of Big 4 Film Corporation.

The point was made that patrons are still most drawn by pictures depicting fast action, and gangster films being no longer in demand, it is the melodrama which offers the most action to the patron, according to this executive.

Warner Boosts Fischer

Warner has placed Frank W. Fischer in charge of the circuit's Wisconsin theatres.

Tiffany Has Two in Work, Five Others in Preparation

The Tiffany studio on the Coast has "Morals for Women," with Bessie Love and Conway Tearle, and "The Monster Kills," starring Alice White, with Frank Strayer directing the mystery thriller, in production at the moment.

Adaptations are being prepared on "Left-over Ladies" by Robert Presnell, from the original by Ursula Parrott. Robert Lee is doing "Man of the Night" and others. Ken Maynard is starting on "Range Law," and the Tiffany Chimps are set for work on "Snippy."

Satz Starts Production

Ludwig Satz, Jewish comedian, has begun work on a series of Yiddish talking pictures for Film Exhibits' Corporation, under the direction of Sidney M. Goldin. Production will be at the R-L-A Studios, New York.

ing director. "This company was a pioneer in organizing a separate department to look after that business, realizing that it is a field by itself, demanding specific knowledge of requirements peculiar to the field and quite distinct from the theatrical business.

"The advent of sound did make great changes in the nontheatrical market, and materially reduced the number of available accounts. Equipment has been too expensive for the great majority of nontheatrical users. In spite of this handicap it has been apparent to us from the beginning that such a situation was only temporary, that conditions would adjust themselves, and the time would come when reasonably priced sound equipment, designed for and adapted to the needs of nontheatrical users, would be available.

New Columbia Department

"Recent developments among manufacturers of equipment show that they are awake to the potentialities of this market, and are now ready to cater to it," Mr. Allvine remarked.

Because of the great increase in the number of wired nontheatrical organizations and the rapidity with which other institutions are installing sound, Joe Brandt has inaugurated a department at Columbia to take care of the demands of this field. S. S. Liggett heads the new unit, with headquarters at the home office, distributing through company exchanges.

Due, principally, to a concentration of interest in stabilizing sound in the theatrical field, both picture companies and the makers of sound equipment have paid little or no attention in the past three years to the nontheatrical, but now that sound manufacturers have about reached the saturation point in wiring of theatres and distributors once again are working with sound on a normal basis, considerable attention is being given to the development of the nontheatrical market.

See Lucrative Returns

The nontheatrical field is recognized by the sound equipment concerns as offering unusually lucrative returns, and some authorities say that the possibilities for installations even far exceed those in the picture business. Estimates of possible nontheatrical sound users run as high as 100,000. This figure, of course, embraces practically every worthwhile educational institution in the land, and includes orphanages, asylums, medical centers, community houses, hotels, clubs and various other organization types.

RCA and Western Electric are now engaged in a race to market nontheatrical apparatus, which are of the regular small theatrical type, with terms nearly identical with those offered exhibitors. There are available, however, several models in regular 35 mm. portable type.

When sound finally came to dominance, practically all larger concerns discontinued nontheatrical units. Few, if any nontheatrical accounts were wired, leaving that branch of business in a temporarily dormant state. It has remained so until recently when the electrics, recognizing that their future rested in that field, ordered a diversion of sales effort to nontheatricals.

It has been apparent to some large distributing companies, however, that this phase of the business approached an awakening and so a few, including Fox, RKO-Pathe and Universal, have continued to serve nontheatricals on a limited scale.

The field is divided into four general classes: the use of industrial short subjects in the scheme of general business; theatrical films used by nontheatrical accounts (many thousands of which are listed on books of distributors), the home field, which is almost divorced from general nontheatricals; and the use of films in school, scientific and visual educational work.

E. R. Enlow, prominent educator and authority on school films, has completed a survey which shows that the cost to the city government for visual education should average 60 cents a pupil each year, with the range running from 30 cents to 90 cents a pupil for one year.

In an attempt to pry open the nontheatrical market, Erpi launched a vigorous sales campaign for hotel installation, which immediately, and only recently, was followed by a bid for the educational branch, in connection with which it was forced to produce its own subjects.

"A Day's Program of Educational Talking Pictures" is offered by Electrical Research as an enticement to schools and educational institutions to install sound. Twelve leading educators appear in the group, which was produced by Erpi and is said to have an appeal to classes in mathematics, music, physics, physical education, vocational guidance and elementary science. Twenty-three subjects are available.

Through another service, Erpi will rent to a school or other educational institution, a complete program, loaning portable equipment and trained operators.

William A. Johnston Says!

William A. Johnston, editor, writing editorially in "The Hollywood Herald," on the Los Angeles "Times" articles by Thomas G. Patten and Edwin Schallert, criticizing the industry, declared, in part, "As to how correct the criticism is and how practical the cure proposed there is open question but there can be no division of opinion over the seriousness of an open break between the Los Angeles 'Times' and Los Angeles' leading industry. . . . We are wondering how the dailies of other large cities will regard this peculiar situation. It should make all the enemies of the industry pretty happy."

Open Patent Pool May End Suit Against RCA

The Department of Justice has announced that the Government's suit against Radio Corporation of America and nine allied corporations, alleging monopoly through an exclusive patent pool, may be terminated as a result of the entering of a consent decree under which an "open patent pool" available to the "public generally" would be created.

year by the American producers, came in for considerable commendation and the delegates were urged to support pictures made under its provisions and to stay away from those which violated, in story and treatment, the provisions of this document. Offensive advertising, in poster and newspaper form, was condemned and the delegates agreed to urge their constituents to shun all theatres displaying this kind of advertising matter.

Senator Belcourt, who presided at the afternoon session on Monday, compared the cinema to "an incomparable psychological force."

According to this distinguished Canadian statesman, "the cinema in our day is practically monopolized by a nation foreign to us, with notions and principles frequently opposed to those of the Catholic population of Canada. It is inspired with a patriotism which is not ours and which, at times, is opposed to ours. Too often the producers of films reproduced in Canada endeavor to coin money by promoting love for the Star Spangled Banner, to the more or less detriment of the Union Jack or the Tricolor."

The senator suggested a federal board of censors for American films at the border, in addition to the censorship by the various provincial boards.

A resolution was adopted, however, in favor of federal "intervention for the prevention of the admission of foreign films likely to give offense to moral, or Christian sentiments, provided such action did not interfere with the present work of the provincial censors."

At the conclusion of the conference it was agreed that the Federation would endeavor to set up a working organization to function along the lines of the I. F. C. A. of the United States, as outlined in the paper of Mrs. McGoldrick.

Rejected Films Increase

Major J. C. Boylen, Censor Board chairman of the Province of Ontario, in talking to the delegates to the convention of the Canadian Catholic Alumnae Association, in Ottawa, stated that, whereas in 1930 his board had rejected 65 American films in toto, so far this year the board had rejected 63 of the same national origin. The increase in rejections is believed to be due to the increased production of gangster films and to the continued practice of resorting to sexy themes via the "eternal triangle."

Ask Ban on Divorce Films

The Association of Canadian Catholic Alumnae, meeting in Ottawa, passed a resolution calling upon the Provincial Censor Boards of Canada to "ban divorce pictures where divorce is shown as a desirable institution, an acceptable institution, or as a matter of course." Major Boylen, Ontario censor chairman, promised to "look into the question" of the advisability of barring all such films—and the conferees were happy again.

EDUCATORS' PREVIEWS PROPOSED

the theme of "How Motion Pictures Can Enrich Life," traced education through the elementary and industrial phases, leading up to what he calls the "cultural" era whose chief purpose is to teach people how to utilize leisure. Highlights of the address were:

"No matter what anyone may think of any particular picture, or of any particular type of picture, the enveloping fact remains the same—the people have selected the motion pictures for their chief leisure-time activity, and you can do nothing to alter that fact even if you wished to do so.

"There are two general ways in which you, as teachers, can utilize motion pictures. The first is by making the screen a tool of education—that is by using pedagogic pictures designed especially for classroom use. The second, and more immediately practical way is by directing school attendance to entertainment films showing in your local theatres which in themselves contain subject matter of educational interest.

"In this regard, two paths are open to you. First, you can get reports on pictures through the establishment of a previewing committee of the National Education Association. Second, you can make use of lists sent out by other previewing groups, or of the service in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, under the title of 'The School and the Screen.'

"As to the former, I suggest that while you are in Los Angeles you familiarize yourself thoroughly with the previewing arrangements which have been entered into by a half-dozen national organizations."

Milliken proposed that the National Education Association might set up a previewing committee, similar to those of the American Library Association, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, and other groups.

"The industry will be glad to have you join in this enterprise and will make available to you the same facilities now enjoyed by other groups," he said. "That is, we will provide the projection room, show you the pictures, and let you decide for yourself which pictures fit normally into your programs.

"To aid further in relating the current picture to the classroom, MOTION PICTURE HERALD has established 'The School and the Screen.' Through this department it hopes to bring to the attention of teachers each week current motion pictures which have educational significance. The thought is to utilize the entertainment screen as an outside aid to pupils in their classroom work.

"This work has been particularly valuable in view of the number of recent pictures which have lent themselves to the service—pictures like 'Byrd at the South Pole,' 'Abraham Lincoln,' 'Skippy,' 'Cimarron,' 'Connecticut Yankee,' 'Trader Horn,' 'Seas Beneath,' 'Dirigible,' 'Great Meadow,' 'Rango,' and 'Painted Desert.'

"Besides being a saga of courage and adventure, for instance, the Byrd picture of the South Pole expedition had scientific, geographic, and natural history value. A picture like 'Abraham Lincoln' serves to focus attention on one of the greatest characters in American history, and to inspire in students a desire to know more about the man, as well as about the other characters that appear in the picture—Lee, Jackson, Sheridan, Grant and others.

"Already a few teachers have brought these pictures to their classroom for discussion but there has been no general organized movement by the schools to make use of this material which must fit into the educational plan. You may wish to inform yourselves more thoroughly of the opportunity thus offered, with a view to taking advantage of it.

"With the coming of 'Cimarron,' which is the story of the rise of Oklahoma from the historic days of the land grants to the present period, more definite steps were taken under the influence of 'The School and the Screen' to bring the classroom into association with the picture.

"A questionnaire regarding the film and its historical significance was prepared for use by the teachers and in a number of communities actual theatre parties were planned and carried through with children from history rooms attending in bodies.

"Purposes of the School and Screen department, as set forth by Mrs. Thomas A. McGoldrick who conducts it, are:

"(1) To encourage children to see the best things of the screen, thereby leaving them less time and less money for the poorer things.

"(2) To have the entertainment screen contribute directly and constructively to their education.

"(3) To encourage producers to make more high type pictures by winning support for those already released.

"Increasing interest is being shown by teachers, Parent-Teachers' Association groups, as well as by producers and theatre managers. MOTION PICTURE HERALD has offered to send reprints of the service periodically to those persons who wish to make definite contacts between the school and the theatre.

"The second way by which schools may utilize the screen is by wider use of pedagogic pictures, made especially for the classroom under the supervision of teachers. The reason for pedagogic films is evident. Such pictures, planned and produced scientifically, psychologically, and pedagogically sound, can do much to illustrate and definitize the oral instruction of the teacher and to dramatize the printed words of the text books.

"There are many problems yet to be solved, however, before the pedagogic film comes into its fullest usefulness, and there is no point in blinking at these problems. In the first place, few schools at the present time are properly equipped for pedagogic films. Progress is being made, however, and it is interesting to observe that, beginning this fall, there will be available sound reproduction equipment for 16 millimeter film for classroom use, a fact which should incline many schools not already equipped with screen and projectors to give serious thought to installation of equipment.

"In the second place, there is the problem of finding out exactly what teachers want in the way of pedagogic films. This is a problem which you alone can solve. While the making of films for the classroom requires a special technique, the industry is keenly interested in helping to bring together the necessary pedagogic knowledge with the technical skill that is requisite. Until the present time it has been difficult for the producer of entertainment films to meet the requirements of the educational field. This is partly due to the fact that the practical demand for such films has been small while the cost of production is large.

"If some measure or standard of requirements is forthcoming, the application of equipment within financial bounds will follow.

"The motion picture industry is interested in children, of course, for it is interested in the character of the audiences it will command tomorrow. Better audiences mean better pictures.

"You must realize that however earnest the producers of motion pictures may be in their efforts to raise, continuously, the social and moral standards of motion picture entertainment, the most they can do is to set the minimum level of good taste. Above that it is the community itself which sets the fashion. Leadership, therefore, is the important element, and that leadership is now facing a test.

"While you are here I invite you to give careful study to the processes at work in the industry itself looking to higher and higher standards. You will find in the work that Mr. Hays is doing the outstanding sociological experiment of our times.

"During the last nine years we have been moving steadily forward towards a completely workable method of self-control in production. The latest and most effective effort in this direction is the Production Code, adopted last year. It voices the following general principles:

"(1) No picture shall be produced which will lower the moral standards of those who see it; (2) Correct standards of life shall be presented on the screen, subject only to necessary dramatic contrasts; (3) Law, natural or human, should not be ridiculed, nor shall sympathy be created for its violation.

"That there may be no doubt about a uniform interpretation of the Code by the various producers, machinery has been set up that makes available to every producer the knowledge and experience of the entire industry aided by the cooperation available from socially-minded groups and public leaders in the selection of the material for screen use and in the treatment of such material.

"It is to be expected that mistakes will occur in interpreting the Code, but the movement is in the proper direction and the achievements in self-regulation are already sufficient to justify the belief that ultimate success is possible.

"In carrying out its responsibilities, the industry must continue to look to socially-minded groups such as the National Education Association, for advice and suggestions. We desire to be called to account when honest differences of opinion arise and to be constantly informed of the likes and dislikes of the thoughtful persons in every community.

"There is no greater responsibility or opportunity for this educational association than to work constructively to make motion pictures the great influence that they may be. The industry has an open mind and solicits your help, not only in its self-regulation but in seeing to it that patrons of pictures derive from the screen the greatest amount of education and culture that is possible."

The individual who lives to be 71 years old has 25 years of free time and the people have chosen the seeing of motion pictures for their chief activity in leisure-time, Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the MPPDA, told the National Education Association convention in Los Angeles. Milliken quoted Dr. John H. Finley, saying:

"Dr. John H. Finley, an editor of the New York Times, not long ago estimated that the man who reached 71 years of age sleeps 21 solid years, spends 18 years doing his job, 3 years eating, 1½ years in sickness, and 2½ years in bathing, shaving and dressing, leaving him 25 solid years of free time in which to make the most of himself."

PASSING IN REVIEW

Murder by the Clock

(Paramount)

Drama

Although the acknowledged extraordinary work of Lilyan Tashman drew rounds of applause during the preview of this film at the Santa Monica Criterion, the picture itself was received with laughter during some of its alleged serious and thrilling moments and was sent upon its way with hardly a ripple from the audience.

"Murder By the Clock" is a story of a cruel and avaricious woman who entices her husband to kill his aged aunt for her money. She then, by subtle suggestion, induces her sculptor lover to murder her husband. Only hubby is brought back to life with a heart injection and so the lover attempts to stab him as he is about to come out of the coma.

A timely policeman prevents this with a shot through the lover's hand but a fog horn the aunt had concealed in the family tomb begins blowing just then and so frightens the husband that he dies of his own accord.

During all this Irving Pichel, as a convincing half-wit son of the aunt, is lurking here and there, attempting to strangle various characters and taking the blame for the old woman's death by strangulation. Of course, there's a secret door, a subterranean passage way and candle light.

William (stage) Boyd as the detective, Lester Vail as the lover, Walter McGrail as the husband, Regis Toomey and Sally O'Neil as the comedy relief and Blanche Friderici as the wealthy old aunt were accorded whispered praise by the audience which seemed to take the psuedo mystery rather off-handedly.

Director Edward Sloman obviously followed the stage play religiously in reproducing it on the screen.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. From the story by Rufus King and the play by Charles Beahan. Adaptation by Henry Myers. Directed by Edward Sloman. Photographed by Karl Struss. Release date, August 8, 1931.

Caught

(Paramount)

Drama

When "Caught" was seen recently at a theatre in Santa Monica, on the Coast, the audience reaction in general, was not highly favorable.

Failing to a certain extent, to hold the audience interest throughout, the film story, comment indicated, was too old-fashioned.

Richard Arlen, Louise Dresser and Frances Dee have the featured roles, and their work was on the whole, well received, though some comment was to the effect that they would probably have given performances more on a par with their usual standard if they had had more acceptable material to work with.

The theme of the story centered about events in the life of Calamity Jane, a role taken by Louise Dresser, as the woman of the old West who, as leader of an outlaw band, had terrorized the territory for some time.

Complications and action develop with the attempts of Richard Arlen, as a young soldier, to gather sufficient evidence to prove conclusively the sponsorship of Calamity Jane in the various deeds of outlawry, when he is sent to ferret out the people responsible for the bandits' widespread activities.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Story by Agnes Brand Leahy and Keen Thompson. Additional dialogue by Sam and Bella Spewack. Directed by Edward Sloman. Photographed by Charles Lang. Release date, August 8, 1931.

The Lawless Woman

(Chesterfield)

Drama

The New York audience which saw "The Lawless Woman," Chesterfield release, seemed fairly well pleased with a story plentifully supplied with action sequences, dealing with the murder of a gangster leader, and the efforts, and romantic entanglements of the young reporter to uncover the "inside" story of the murder and its surrounding circumstances, for his paper.

Carroll Nye plays the "cub" reporter, who attempts to get Vera Reynolds, as the girl in the case, to talk, the murder having taken place in the apartment. They meet Poker Wilson, played by Wheeler Oakman, who is knocked down by Nye when he insults the girl.

She, fearing for his life, rushes Nye to her apartment, after a successful effort to elude Wilson and his men. The gang leader forces his way into the apartment and forces Nye to accompany him. The girl slips a revolver in his pocket as he is led away, but Nye discovers the gun is empty after he makes his escape from the car in which he is held and attempts to return the fire of pursuing gangsters.

Believing the girl has played a double game with him, he plans with a detective to clear up the situation. In the meantime, Wilson had gone to June's apartment to force her admission that she had helped Nye to escape. The detective arrives at the right moment, and a concluding sequence brings out the truth of the murder, the round-up of the gang, and the satisfactory conclusion of the romance which had developed between Nye and Vera Reynolds.

Produced and distributed by Chesterfield. Presented by George R. Batcheller. Directed by Richard Thorpe. Supervised by Barney Gerard. Photographed by M. S. Anderson. Release date, June 15, 1931. Running time, 63 minutes.

Side Show

(Warners)

Comedy

"Side Show," Warner Bros.' latest vehicle for Winnie Lightner, drew an approving, if not a rousing, reception at its preview showing at a Coast theatre, last week. It seemed obvious to the audience, and they accepted it with good-natured complacency, that the circus background was the important thing, the love angle being merely incidental to establish a reason for the story having been written at all.

The vehicle, according to general comment, obviously was created for Winnie Lightner, to show her ability as a mimic and impersonator. She was given ample opportunity by being allowed to substitute for the various freaks in the side show of Colonel Gowdy's Big City Shows. Convenient disposals of the hula-hula dancer, the crooning cannibal and the high diver permit Miss Lightner to do her stuff, and the audience unmistakably approved. Two songs, with Lightnerian gestures and facial contortions, drew long rounds of applause.

The dramatic situation moves smoothly and hinders in no way the real action of the picture. The triangle involves Miss Lightner, Evalyn Knapp as her sister, and Donald Cook. When Evalyn enters into the circus life against the wishes of her older sister, she falls in love with Cook, already claimed by Winnie. The troublesome situation adjusts itself when romantic glamours vanish and real love finds its own way.

Charles Butterworth is the mouthpiece for the comic wisecracks and gags, and clicked heavily, judging from the reaction of the theatre patrons. The character portrayal of Guy Kibbe, as the owner of the show was typically of the circus.

Produced and distributed by Warner Bros. Story by William K. Wells. Screen play by Arthur Caesar and Raymond Enright. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Photographed by Dev Jennings. Film editor, Jim Gibbons.

THE CAST

Pat ..... Winnie Lightner
Irene ..... Evalyn Knapp

Glamour

(British International)

Drama

Reviewed in London by Herald Representative

If Seymour Hicks, very fine British stage actor, had taken the story of "David Garrick," advertised the fact and selected a good director in whose hands to place himself with the rest of his cast, "Glamour" might have been a British film with a real message for the motion picture industry throughout the world.

Instead Seymour Hicks, equally fine British actor, wrote, according to the synopsis, an original story called "Glamour," at the head of the cast of which, in big capitals, he put the name of SEYMOUR HICKS. He selected as "technical director" one Harry Hughes, British film director of long experience and some moderate attainment. The finished picture suggests clearly that Harry Hughes was such a good director that he submitted to the direction of Seymour Hicks.

It is a thousand pities that a delightful stage actor such as Seymour Hicks should invite comparisons in the way he has. The plot of "Glamour" shrieks "David Garrick" all through. It is a somewhat silly story of a middle-aged actor who has succeeded in fascinating a bright young maiden. She is already betrothed in her parents' eyes to a young fellow known as the Hon. Richard Wells. This youngster, however, seems hardly entitled to his Hon., for he is the outcome of an affair which the same middle-aged actor had with a society woman years past. The girl's father insists that to disillusion the bride-to-be, this middle-aged actor must turn up at a dinner party and behave in a most disgraceful manner. He does, and the trick works, leaving the girl, one imagines, free to marry the illegitimate Honorable.

This picture has been compared by Hicks with a previous British film of his called "The Love Habit," which, however, was Directed (capital D for emphasis) by Harry Lachman, American director.

Hicks thinks "Glamour" by far the better; the public evidently does not, because the picture has had a struggle to last through the week on West End pre-release. It has just one thing to sell it: Seymour Hicks' acting.

When Hicks is prepared to admit that all his vast experience of stage-craft goes into the melting pot again before he starts to learn about motion pictures, and when British International recovers from its habit of being entirely too modest to tell important people where they are making important mistakes, we shall doubtless get from Elstree some really fine British pictures in which Seymour Hicks, the actor, is starred under effective directors.

Three from Filling Station (Die Drei von der Tankstel

(Ufa)

Comedy (in German)

Called the comedy hit of 1930 in Germany, this picture, seen at the Cosmopolitan theatre in New York, drew the comment that it was rather bizarre than attractive.

The sound at times was not understandable, and comment was made that the dialogue in some places was trivial and unconvincing.

The music had two catchy themes, one of which would be recognized when heard without words as "Moonlight on the Colorado." A tricky love story with a happy ending provided the background.

Olga Tschechowa drew applause for her acting, though the role was not large.

The photography in general won favorable comment, a few scenes lacking depth and reality in the opinion of members of the audience.

Running time, 75 minutes.

Women Love Once

(Paramount)

Drama

This picture, despite a commendable stage-show supplementing the bill, failed to arouse any special enthusiasm among the Broadway Paramount patrons, who by no means filled the auditorium of the house. Comment was that there was lacking in the direction by Edward Goodman the spontaneity required for high-caliber entertainment.

The acting was considered only passable, even though the cast contains several well known names, among them Paul Lukas, Eleanor Boardman and Geoffrey Kerr. Little Marilyn Knowlden drew well with the exception that the dialogue written for her was adjudged too mature.

"Women Love Once" concerns an artist, his wife and child; a patroness of the arts; denizens of the Latin quarter in Paris, and a male friend of the wife.

When the artist goes to Paris at the behest of the patroness, who finances his trip, the wife forms a close friendship with Allen Greenough, although remaining loyal to her husband.

In the meanwhile, the patroness, Hester Dahlgren, follows the artist to Paris. On his return home, the artist, who has acquired the easy-going habits of the Latin quarter, refuses to work and lives on the small income his wife makes as a dressmaker.

Because of his continued attentions to Hester and to denizens of the Latin quarter, whom he has brought home with him, the wife continues her friendship with Allen, and as a result the breach between them grows wider.

It is only the fatal injury to their daughter that finally brings the two together again.

Hell Below Zero

(Talking Picture Epics)

Travel

A title obviously built for the marquee adorns a picture which the audience at the Cameo Theatre in New York found a quite harmless but interesting description of equatorial Africa. The closest application of the purgotorial epithet was unvoiced, but perhaps felt in the case of the giraffe pestered by birds swarming like flies about him and upon him. But Hell hath no terrors in this picture, particularly whenever the jungle of Uganda is described as a "public park," though abounding in wild game.

Gentle satirization of lion hunting was the introduction which met particular favor with the audience. "A pastime for Boy Scouts," was the comment of Carveth Wells, Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society and the American Geographical Society, who told in synchronization the story of the picture and of the expedition which he conducted for the Milwaukee Public Museum and the Geographic Society of Chicago. Lions retreating before the explorers—retreating to the next shady spot where they could sleep undisturbed; and embarrassedly the King of Wild Beasts lazily trying to save last night's kill from the vultures. The audience took to these scenes as among the best of the production, and with chuckles.

To attempt even to mention the many subjects covered in the picture would require pages, as the camera touches a constantly changing scene. The contrasts drew the greatest audience reaction, contrasts which the speaker summed up, in a meteorological sense, when he said that the natives on the Mountain of the Moon were "sunstruck at one end and frostbidden at the other." Striking shots included those of flamingoes with their heads scraping back and forth over the muddy river shallows in search of food, like "Hoover vacuum cleaners," as Carveth put it. There was the army of locusts, referred to as "baby Austins" in another allusion that was or was not an advertising interpolation.

Running time, 42 minutes. Release date, June 26, 1931.

Politics

(M-G-M)

Comedy

The new Marie Dressler-Polly Moran comedy drama, "Politics," received a vigorous welcome at its preview showing in Long Beach, California, last week, with the general comment of the audience being that it is one of the best performances of this pair, to date.

The great popularity of both Miss Dressler and Miss Moran was evident in the tremendous applause of the audience at the first glimpse of them on the screen, and, from first to last, their characteristic comedy was greeted by a riot of laughter.

The story is built about the uprising of the women voters in a city ruled by a group of politicians and racketeers. Miss Dressler, innocent of political aspirations, unwittingly becomes the champion of the women's cause. With home-bred sagacity and a will of her own, Miss Dressler succeeds in putting the men voters as well as the politicians in their places. This is partly brought about by her order of a general strike of all women from domestic and wifely duties. The result of such an order creates a comedy situation highly appreciated by the audience.

The supporting cast, which includes Roscoe Ates, William Bakewell, Joan Marsh and Karen Morley, drew a good share of the liberal praise. The romantic interest supplied by Miss Morley and Bakewell, was adjudged decidedly clever.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Story by Robert E. Hopkins. Continuity by Wells Root. Dialogue by Zelda Sears and Malcolm Stuart Boylan. Directed by Charles F. Riesner. Photographed by Claude DeVinna. Recording by Douglas Shearer. Art Director, Cedric Gibbons. Film editor, William S. Gray. Release date, August 1, 1931.

The Road to Hell

(Public Welfare Films)

"For Men Only"

Advertised and ballyhooed at the Central, on Broadway, as a showing "for men only," the film "Road to Hell," is accompanied by a lecture on sex hygiene, with the use of stereopticon slides and models on the stage, in the usual manner of such exhibitions. Booklets, purporting to be of value, are offered for sale in conjunction with the lecture.

The film resolves itself into a silent, produced by Orplid Films, German producer, which has for theme, the white slave traffic to Rio de Janeiro, and the complication by which, through a revenge motive, the daughter of the leader of the traffic, is shipped to the Southern port, not knowing for what purpose she is being transported, but believing herself a member of a theatrical troupe.

Incidental music is run in, and here and there, an interjected synchronized voice, which takes the form of a warning to parents against permitting their daughters to set themselves open to any similar danger, based on cruelty at home which forces the girl away at the first opportunity.

The film, its music, the voice and acting of the cast in general, was described by members of the audience to be one of the worst examples of motion picture producing and reproducing they had ever seen. They termed it propaganda, and several present, voiced their disappointment at having gone into the theatre.

Die Foerster-Christl (The Forester's Daughter)

(Trans-Ocean Film)

Operetta

Meyer-Foerster's operetta is revived in the production, "Die Foerster-Christl," directed by Friedrich Zelnick and distributed by Capital Film Exchange.

The forester's daughter, Christl, meets Joseph, the Emperor of Austria, while she is pinchhitting for her father, doing his daily inspection trips into the Vienna woods. She does not know who the strange huntsman is and he keeps his identity a secret. Immediate love is the result of this meeting. Domestic affairs compel Christl later on to journey to Vienna, where she meets the stranger again and now realizes it is the emperor himself. Love again blossoms, but comes abruptly to an end as the emperor hears about the whispering campaign led by his tongue-wagging court servants regarding his love affair with a commoner.

The emperor voids the death sentence, imposed upon a corporal because with his fists he defended Christl's honor, impaired by a "talking" lieutenant. Later on, H. M. promotes him. None greater than W. A. Mozart receives the command to compose the organ prelude for Christl's wedding with her childhood sweetheart, the pardoned corporal.

The photography was enjoyed, though there was comment of too much soft focus experimentation (the wood scenes, for instance), in trying to create artistic oil painting impressions.

There was a marked reaction of the public against the jazz tempo. Having forgotten what a good waltz or what Mozart music sounds like, the public is ready to acclaim whatever there is as a reminder of the old days.

Running time, 94 minutes. Seen at 8th Street Playhouse, New York.

The Great Lover

(M-GM)

Drama

With Adolphe Menjou fitting the title role as a 1931 model bathing suit fits a flapper, M-G-M presents the screen version of Leo Dietrichstein's famous stage success, "The Great Lover." A splendid supporting cast includes Irene Dunne of "Cimarron" fame, Ernest Torrence, Olga Baclanova, Neil Hamilton, Roscoe Ates, Cliff Edwards, Hale Hamilton and Lillian Bond.

In spite of this blue book of screen names, Menjou takes the show with superb and delicately balanced performance of the great opera singer. Much interesting backstage life of grand opera is shown and the introduction of pleasing musical numbers is logical. The adaptation and dialogue are skillfully handled by Gene Markey, Edgar Allan Woolf and John Meehan. Harry Beaumont handled the production without ever allowing the interest to lag.

Produced by Cohan and Harris. Distributed by MGM. Based on play, "The Great Lover" by Leo Dietrichstein. Adaptation and dialogue by Gene Markey, Edgar Allan Woolf, John Meehan. Directed by Harry Beaumont. Release date, July 18, 1931.

Today—And Yesterday

(Talking Picture Epics)

A News History

A disaster to the sound equipment, which necessitated several minutes of silent running of shots in "Today—And Yesterday," Talking Picture Epics' news melange, seen at the Cameo Theatre, New York, lent natural background to the showing of the three-reel production. But while the enforced period of silence during the showing of a number of oldtime events at Washington was appropriate, the old-time music presented while the sound equipment was functioning also produced the proper atmosphere.

Political changes at Washington in the succession of presidents played a large part in the production—or the assembled reels—and there were three of them. Then, too, there was much of King Edward, King George and the Prince of Wales. Likewise the World War was touched upon with several generally familiar scenes of the fighting on land and sea, including the spectacular sinking of ships by the German raider, the Moewe.

Running time, 30 minutes.

Blue Grass Kings

(RKO Pathe)

Sportlight

Strange As It Seems—No. 9

(Universal)

Novelty

Again a series of oddities, filmed in Multicolor, in this Universal group. Featured are a woman and daughter with 12 feet of hair between them; an attorney who swears he will not clip his beard until Prohibition is repealed; the cobra plant which eats vermin and mice; an East Indian who is buried for three hours and two women who operate a telephone company in Washington.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Monkey Business in Africa

(Educational)

Comedy

Here is a Mack Sennett job, in the form of a burlesque on African adventure films. Principal amusement purveyors are Andy Clyde, Marjorie Beebe, Frank Eastman, Luis Alberni, George Gray. Clyde is chief of a motion picture company which enters the jungle for local color, and gets into some tight and amusing situations with lions, alligators and so forth.—Running time, 22 minutes.

June First

(RKO Pathe)

Comedy

June MacCloy plays the lead in this comedy number which describes the adventures of three girls who decide the best way to gather money and the luxurious trip to Europe they want, is to garner what presents they can from various men, pawn them, and so have the wherewithall. June makes it a practice to acquire engagement rings, setting all the dates, each time, at June first. Speeding to the boat, they are arrested and driven to the church by the officer where they are greeted by a dozen men, each waiting for his bride. They stage a getaway with the officers, and date them for the next day before they are finished. Don Gallaher directed.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Fisherman's Luck

(RKO Pathe)

Cartoon

An Aesop Fable number which pictures the little animated fisherman indulging in the ancient pastime. Most unusual are the scenes under water when the fisherman meets the "one and only" in the form of a fish. Synchronized music accompanies the short.—Running time, 10 minutes.

The Albany Branch

(Educational)

Comedy

A Mack Sennett comedy number, in which five different writers are credited with the story. The audience did not take any too kindly to the more or less old lines which were spotted through the number. Among the players were Perl Kelton, Tom Dugan, Frank Eastman, Alice Mosher. Direction was the work of Mack Sennett.—Running time, 16 minutes.

Blues

(Educational)

Cartoon

A Terry-Toon number with a setting in the South. Human and animal characters indulge in song at every possible moment, which is quite frequently.—Running time, 6 minutes.

Younger Years

(RKO Pathe)

Novelty

This number of the Grandtland Rice Sportlight series is a pictorial record of youngsters engaged in what every man will never forget. The boys are caught by the microphone and camera, obviously not acting, while having the time of their young lives playing baseball, football, swimming in the creek, playing marbles, and those other things which make being a small boy worth while.—Running time, 10 minutes.

By the Sea

(Educational)

Cartoon

This is a Terry-Toon animated cartoon short, which was generally rated by the audience, to judge from reaction, as a presentable and satisfactory number.—Running time, 5 minutes.

Pale Face Pup

(RKO Pathe)

Cartoon

An Aesop Fable animated cartoon comedy number, with the pup on his elongated horse, making eyes at an Indian girl, trying to pass as an Indian and doing away, one by one, with his pursuers when he and the girl are chased by the Indian chief. On a par with the usual run of these in amusement value, was the comment.—Running time, 9 minutes.

TELL THE WORLD YOU'VE GOT McNAMEE!

(No. 722 Straight from the Shoulder Talk by Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation)

DON'T OVERLOOK THE TREMENDOUS PULLING POWER OF GRAHAM McNAMEE in your newspaper and lobby advertising.

EVEN THOUGH YOU ARE REGULARLY USING UNIVERSAL NEWSREELS — EASILY the most popular in the world—you should not fail to advertise them.

MILLIONS OF PEOPLE HAVE DEMONSTRATED THAT THEY ARE DELIGHTED WITH McNamee's manner of broadcasting over the radio as well as on the screen.

CASH IN ON THAT FACT WITH ALL THE POWER AT YOUR COMMAND—JUST AS you cash in on the star names in your feature pictures.

UNIVERSAL EXCHANGES CAN SUPPLY YOU WITH EVERYTHING YOU NEED FOR this purpose. They have a splendid de luxe art one-sheet, as well as a 22 by 28 lobby card, cut-out heads of McNamee and special sets of 8 by 10 portraits. In addition to this they can supply you with the regular bulletin of contents of each issue of Universal's Newsreels.

GET A SUPPLY OF McNAMEE NEWSPAPER CUTS AND USE THEM REGULARLY IN your advertising space.

WHAT OTHER STAR ON EARTH COULD STAND THE TEST OF WORKING EVERY week in pictures?

McNAMEE HAS BEEN APPEARING REGULARLY IN UNIVERSAL NEWSREELS AND instead of getting tired of him the audiences everywhere begin to applaud the instant his name appears on the main title.

IT'S A TONIC FOR ANY AUDIENCE. McNAMEE'S METHOD OF BROADCASTING lifts the people out of themselves and they respond by frequent and hearty applause or laughter.

UNIVERSAL NEWSREELS AND McNAMEE ARE FIRST IN THE NEWSREEL RACE AND there is no close second, third or fourth!

WHEN YOU'VE GOT A BET LIKE THIS—PLAY IT ACROSS THE BOARD. TELL your people about it!

YOUR PUBLIC

By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

It looks as if, at last, the short features are to come into their own, and by that we mean proper recognition on the program and regular space in the advertising. For the past several weeks the New York Times has carried Vitaphone's ad of the Bobby Jones Golf Series with a listing of the theatres in the city where these popular short features might be seen. On the heels of this significant step forward the Vitaphone publicity department is now sending out on regular schedule a mimeographed press sheet which tells where each of its shorts is playing currently in the theatres of New York, Brooklyn and surrounding territory. This is intelligent showmanship, for there is no longer any doubt about the increasing number of people who, glancing over a page of motion picture ads, will make their decision for the theatre announcing a short subject in which they are specially interested.

There is a very sound reason behind this changing attitude toward the shorts. One has only to glance over the preview reports of the reviewing groups in any one week to realize how much cleverness, consideration and genius is finding its way into the making of one and two reel pictures, and how distinctly the quality of these has improved. Within the past two weeks one national organization noted for its carefulness in the rating of pictures reviewed and reported in writing 62 short features, with the astonishing result of 59 endorsed pictures and only three discarded ones. Of the three, two were marked "Fair," and only one "Poor." In all of the sixty-two pictures there was not a single instance of vulgarity, suggestiveness, profanity, or disrespect for moral or civil law! This is the very best single proof that we have had in a year of the increasing average of decent pictures.

Cleveland Makes Suggestion

The Cleveland Public Library has been an outstanding pioneer in building up intelligent audience appreciation for the better pictures shown in that city, by linking up the picture with a helpful library reference printed on an attractive cardboard bookmark. The theatremen cooperating with the library share the expense of the printing. The Library distributes the cards, and features in its reading rooms an exhibit of posters, books and other material to draw attention to the particular motion picture. Now, more than 25 of the big public libraries in other states have taken up the idea and are engaged in preparing bibliography and listed references on endorsed pictures.

A letter this morning from the Cleveland public library addressed to this department, on the subject of short features, is therefore of particular interest. The librarian writes: "We were especially interested in the MOTION PICTURE HERALD release of May 28th, in which you talked of short subjects. For years we have tried to establish cooperation with our managers on the one and two-reel pictures, since these often tie up more directly with books than do the exploited features. The drawbacks have been: the usual lack of stills, which we need for our library purposes; and the fact that short subjects are not advertised. The stills are particularly important to us for they serve to separate the books and jackets in an exhibit from the mass of books that line our walls. The advertising of short subjects is necessary because without it there is little use in our posting our exhibits: our patrons, and the children would not know where to find the picture in question. We feel that a right handling of this situation would easily result in filling the theatres during the supper hours, for instance, for there are now so many people who prefer such subjects and would go at special times to see them."

Letter after letter addressed to this department by clubs and organized film groups all over the country are making the same appeal. Theatremen are responsible for the answer to this growing demand, by selecting high grade shorts and by advertising them!

July's Holidays

July is the patriotic month of the year. With Independence Day in the first week, it also boasts in its litany the anniversaries of the Battles of Bull Run, Gettysburg, and Chateau Thierry. While its famous birthdays include those of John Paul Jones and the Polar Explorer, Roald Amundsen.

A number of effective activities may be organized to make your theatre a dignified community center on July Fourth, some of which might be worked out in cooperation with local groups of Colonial Dames, Daughters of the American Revolution, Daughters of American Colonists, Daughters of 1812, American Legion, Boy and Girl Scouts, or any school or club group.

This day offers excellent opportunity for clever lobby display with war relics, flags, pictures, letters, colonial stamps or old costumes exhibited in the foyer. A prize might be offered for the best exhibit loaned for the occasion; and another, to the school children, for the best essay on "Looking back to '76." All performances should begin and end with stirring military music, and the flag should be displayed in a standard on the stage, as well as in a prominent position in front of the theatre.

A formal Salute to the Flag, the singing of the Star Spangled Banner and tableaux of episodes in 1776 would all be appropriate additions to an attractive program.

The following pictures are suitable for the occasion, and available:

FEATURES:

"America," United Artists, 11 reels, silent.
"Abraham Lincoln," United Artists, 8,280 feet, talking.
"Comrades," Cooperative, 6 reels, silent.
"Only the Brave," Paramount, 6,347 feet, talking.
"His First Command," Pathe, 5,965 feet, talking.

SHORTS:

"A Frontier Romance," M-G-M, 2 reels.
"Story of the Star Spangled Banner," Pathe, 1 reel.
"Two Americans," Paramount, 2 reels.
"A Yankee Doodle Boy," Paramount, 1 reel.
"Marching On," Fox, 3 reels.
"Trumpeter" (views on battlefield) Pathe, 1 reel.
"Independence Day," All Star, 1 reel.

Checking Children—and Umbrellas

Here is a story to make you smile—and then, to pause over. And in story book fashion it should begin "Once upon a time . . ."

Well, once upon a time a clubwoman in Maryland whose official title is Chairman of Film Information, Montgomery County, Maryland, sat next to a little family in her local motion picture house. The father and mother were enjoying the needed relaxation of their motion picture entertainment. The three small children apparently loved part of the program —the newsreels, the cartoon and the comedy, but became increasingly restless and bored as the feature unwound its serious and complicated way. They fidgeted and fussed. The mother was embarrassed. It became necessary for her finally to take the children out.

The thoughtful chairman observed, "It took the firm hand of my husband to keep me in my seat. I longed to take those blessed children out into the lobby, away from their tired mother, and play with them! When I told that story to the women in a neighborhood club, a mother immediately responded, 'I have often done that very thing; only sometimes my children cried and actually disturbed the audience. But mothers have to have some escape from the daily routine, if they are to go on with their mother's job'."

Out of this, a clubwoman dreamed a dream —fantastic, perhaps, but possible. Why should not the motion picture theatre in her community or yours, have a room set aside for the very small persons; for children too small to care for the longer programs; children with tired mothers entitled to their hours of illusion and freedom? This room of her plotting would have kiddie cars, an informal "shute the shutes," a merry-go-round, simple games, construction building blocks, indestructible books, ball games which all children love; a sand table—in fact, a Children's Room. There would be in attendance a "mother" for the day, a volunteer who would love and understand the children, and she would be assisted by a paid attendant who must have the gift of telling stories and playing games!

It sounds amusing, but strangely enough, it isn't. Out of the gossamer fabric of the day dream a most constructive reality has been born. The dream has come true in a number of theatres.

A real father who knew something of psychology as well as of the science of childhood applied his ideas to the needs of other families. He is a father-manager, Mr. Hardie Meakin, and his theatre is the RKO of Keith's in Washington, D. C. Not only has he provided for the needs of the little persons who are brought to his theatre by furnishing a children's room, but he has also made provision for the middle sized children by reserving special seats under competent chaperonage.

This is the story of a theatre manager who is determined that his theatre shall not be an ordinary showplace, but a community center definitely concerned with the best interests of the patrons whom he respects and whose interest he hopes to retain. It is not hard to believe that he will!

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

Answer to Question No. 84

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 89—If the exhibitor asked your advice in the selection of a screen, sound of course, tell us just what points you would give consideration. Watch your step here or you won't find your name among the successful ones. (B) Tell us just what is meant by "Absorption of light," "Actinic ray," "Angle of incidence," "Angle of reflection" and "Projection angle." (C) Tell us just what chromatic aberration is and describe its effects.

The question was: (A) What must be understood before the action of the disc records pickup system can itself be comprehended? (B) Describe the fundamental law upon which the disc record pickup system is based. (C) In just what manner is or may magnetism be altered in its action? (D) Tell us just in what way sound waves are recorded in disc record grooves. (E) What two things make the Western Electric disc record pickup possible?

The ones who were able to answer these five queries correctly were relatively few. With the comment that the first seven named gave answers indicating unmistakably that they understand the subject very well, here are the names:

A small list, but the total number answering was large. Some fell down on one thing, some on another. None failed entirely.

On the whole, I believe the answer of James McGuire fits publication needs best. He says:

"(A) The principles of magnetic induction must be understood.

"(B) The law of magnetic induction or action is based upon the fact that if an alternating current be passed through a coil of wire wrapped around a core of iron, the said core will be magnetized, and thus a magnetic field will be set up in and around the core. Now, if a second coil, in the form of a closed circuit, be placed in proper position in that magnetic field, an electromotive force will be generated therein, which same will change in strength as and whenever the density of the magnetic field is altered, and the change will be in precise proportion to the rate or amount of change in the magnetic field. The said alteration will take place only while the density of the magnetic field is changing."

Note. With the permission of Brother McGuire I believe I will substitute the reply of Evans and Rau to item (C), as it is very excellent, indeed.

"(C) One way in which the action of magnetism may be altered, as in the disc record pickup, is as follows: The pickup or electro-magnetic reproducer consists of a permanent magnet, a soft iron armature, and a small coil of fine wire. The soft iron core, which carries the needle, is pivoted in rubber, and its upper end is held in place by a small damping block, made of rubber. The needle and armature assembly can move slightly about the armature pivot, and with sufficient ease to prevent undue wear on the record. The armature swings back and forth as the needle follows the groove of the record, and the magnetic lines of force which pass through the armature change both in number and direction. Since a coil is wound around the armature an alternating voltage will be generated in it. Thus the magnetic pickup is a small A. C. generator. The voltage generated alternates in exact correspondence with the sound track on the record."

Please understand, McGuire's answer was correct, but that of Evans and Rau was in somewhat better form. Follows again McGuire's answer:

"(D) Sound waves are recorded in the side of the disc grooves. They are in the form of slight undulations in the groove set up by the swaying of the recording needle caused by magnetic action.

"(E) The two things which make W. E. pickup possible are really only one thing, and that is the action upon the magnetic field in the pickup apparatus set up by the swaying of the needle as it passes through the disc grooves. Answered as asked, however, the two things are the swaying of the needle and the action induced in the magnetic field and the closed circuit coil located therein by such swaying."

Gentlemen, certainly one cannot possibly study such answers, particularly in conjunction with study of the Bluebook, without having a better understanding of things, no matter how well informed one may be. I know that on many occasions I have myself been given a new and better viewpoint by reading the various answers to questions. Also in reading some of the answers which are wrong, or at least incorrect, I have been led to an understanding of how easy it is for men to receive a wrong impression, or receive erroneous understanding. I have often been impressed by errors of understanding undoubtedly set up by the reading of books written in too technical language. In many cases I have written correspondents, asking from what book they got the impression leading to their error, only frequently to find it was a technical work which, while perfectly correct in its statements, still those statements were by no means clear to the nontechnical reader.

On the whole, I can assure you that while this "School" imposes a heavy burden of work, it nevertheless is both interesting and helpful to your friend editor.

ASTOUNDING MEASUREMENTS

I have been reading "Why We Behave Like Human Beings" by George A. Dorsey, Ph.D., LL.D., formerly associate professor of anthropology, University of Chicago, and curator of anthropology, Field Museum of Natural History. One finds oneself just plain obliged to give credence to men of Professor Dorsey's standing, else I would find myself unable to believe some of the things he sets forth. For example, you and I think we have at least a wee bit of electrical knowledge. Listen to what the Professor says, page 84 of the book named:

"The unit or smallest quantity of an element which takes part in a chemical reaction is an atom (uncutable). Recently the atom has been 'cut.' It consists of unit charges of positive and negative electricity called electrons. * * * An atom, then, says Millikan, consists of a heavy core or nucleus of free positive electrons about which are grouped enough negative electrons to render the whole atom stable or neutral. * * * The atomic number of hydrogen is 1. Its nucleus carries one electron of positive charge; outside that nucleus is one electron of negative charge. The two electrons thus neutralize each other; the result is a system, an atom of hydrogen. The heaviest known element is uranium; its atomic weight is 238. Its nucleus must therefore contain 238 positive electrons. But as its atomic number is 92, its nucleus must carry, in addition, 146 negative electrons in order to neutralize the 146 positive electrons over and above the 92 positive electrons free to neutralize the 92 negative electrons outside the nucleus.

"The result is a system, an atom of uranium. Remove one free positive electron from the nucleus of that atom; it is no longer an atom of uranium. Remove 10 free positive electrons; it is an atom of lead. Remove 13; it is an atom of gold. Remove 91; it is an atom of hydrogen gas. * * * Magnify the nucleus of an atom one billion times; it is still too small to be seen in a microscope. Multiply that nucleus ten billion times: the outer electrons are now three feet from the nucleus, but the nucleus is not yet as big as a pin point. * * * When matter in the form of an electron moves, there is an electric current. Which means, says Milliken, that electricity and matter look like different aspects of one and the same thing. There is proof that electricity is material; there is evidence, but not yet proof, that all matter is electrical."

Which last conclusion would mean that in the last analysis you and I, friend reader, are both really one form of electricity. But on that point we will not debate—yet. My reason for setting this before you is to point to the incredible lengths to which friend scientist is going. He gravely tells us exactly what a point which is smaller than a pin point after it is magnified ten billions of times, is composed of. He assumes to actually count the number of things—invisible things still, mark you well, were they large enough to be seen—contained in that understandably small thing. He proceeds exactly. He don't tell us there are "about 140." He says there are 146, which really seems utterly beyond human comprehension.

Incidentally I might say that the book named is intensely interesting. In another place, page 93, it tells us: "The smallest known molecule—hydrogen—weighs a three million-million-million-millionth of a gram. It travels one mile a second. An electron is smaller and travels faster!" Which I think you will agree is getting right down to brass tacks in weighing things!

Virginia Censor Cuts Three Of 46 Pictures in Two Weeks

The Virginia censor board bulletin reports fewer films being received for examination, with the coming of summer. Of 46 films, comprising 165 reels, examined in two weeks, eliminations were ordered in three films. Fewer cuts than in previous months are recorded.

The pictures which came under the censorial knife were "Gold Dust Gertie," Warner; "The Good, Bad Girl," Columbia and "The Maltese Falcon," First National.

Recent Charters Filed

Charters recently filed in the State House, Dover, Del., included the Arc Products Corporation to operate talking pictures; Royal Television of America, Inc., dealing in television devices and M. H. S. Productions, Inc., Ltd., to deal in motion pictures of all kinds.

RCA Issues List Of Tube Patents In Adjudication

Radio Corporation of America has prepared for its licensees a list of radio tube patents which are in process of adjudication at present, and a supplemental list of additional tube patents included in its licenses, following numerous inquiries concerning the patent situation.

Tube patents now in process of adjudication are those involved in patent infringement suits brought by RCA against Gold Seal Electrical Company, Inc., filed September 10, 1928; the Dale Company (Arcturus distributor), filed May 28, 1930; Majestic Distributors, Inc., filed September 5, 1930; Duovac Radio Tube Corporation, filed October 17, 1930.

RCA has recently added to its rights in the radio tube field by the acquisition of a group of circuit and tube patents and applications formerly held by the Radio Frequency Laboratories, Inc. Rights under these patents and applications are automatically extended to RCA's licensees by terms of their present licenses, including the right to use inventions newly developed or acquired by RCA.

Pulverman Buys Safety Projector Plant at Duluth

Acquisition of Safety Projector Company's plant at Duluth, Minn., including the entire business, is announced by Pulverman Corporation, manufacturers of Royal Amplitone sound equipment, coincidentally with the statement that Pulverman's new "5S" model sound-on-film equipment for 500-seat houses will be covered by a guarantee of a refund of the exhibitor's money within 10 days if he is not entirely satisfied with performance of the apparatus. The announcements were made by J. V. Cremonim, vice-president in charge of sales.

Pulverman Corporation already has increased the output of the Duluth factory of the acquired Safety Projector Company, which has been making the Zenith portable and professional projectors for sixteen years. The silent projector recently was converted into a complete sound-on-film apparatus with the sound-on-film mechanism an integral part of the projector itself. The Zenith projector in the future will be known as the "Royal Z," and Joe Granz will continue in charge of production as well as engineer of the Duluth plant.

The Royal "5S" is offered to exhibitors for two Simplex projectors at a price of $1250 complete, including latest type Racon exponential master horn and unit. For Powers and DC equipment, it is stated, there is a slight additional cost.

Publix-Wilby Raises Stock

Recent announcements from Dover, Del., indicate Publix-Wilby Theatres, Inc., New York, has increased its stock from 1,000 to 2,000 shares, no par value. Electrical Industries Corporation has changed its name to Radio Television Industries Corporation of Boston.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

New high box office grosses do not seem to be the order of the day in the picture business. None registered for the current week, a condition which prevailed last week. Nineteen theatres again reported new low grosses for the current week, as against 20 for previous week. Executives feel, however, that should President Hoover's debt moratorium plan be successful it will react in better business generally.

SWAT THAT SUMMER SLUMP

KEEP YOUR EYES ON TIFFANY

KEEP YOUR EYES ON TIFFANY

KEEP YOUR EYES ON TIFFANY

It's easy to sit back and let summer walk away with part of last winter's hard earned profits. But it's just as easy to swat that summer slump with better programs. Book these specially selected productions by Tiffany—available NOW and just the kind of fine entertainment people want—and "Keep Your Eyes On Tiffany" for a big 1931-1932 announcement.

SHORT FEATURE

Vitaphone Is Searching for Penrod and Sam for Shorts

Warner executives at the Brooklyn Vitaphone studio are still searching for the two juvenile characters who will portray the Penrod and Sam of the Booth Tarkington series of 13 shorts on the 1931-32 schedule.

One has already been selected, after 300 had been examined. Another 150 aspirants for the roles will be examined this week.

Paramount to Do 12 Shorts Based on "Movie Memories"

Paramount will release during the 1931-32 season a series of 12 one-reel "Screen Souvenirs," based on the "Movie Memories" idea, which featured the Paramount sponsored reel series, recently declared off the schedule.

The reels will be issued once a month, and will embody a slightly new departure from their predecessor, "Movie Memories." Humorous dialogue will accompany the films.

Tax Judgment on Spoor

George K. Spoor in Chicago has been named in a county court tax judgment for $165,683.49, with reference to an apartment building of which Spoor is principal owner.

Name Newsreel Assistant

Allyn Butterfield has been appointed editorial assistant to Sam B. Jacobson, editor of Universal Newsreel.

KANE

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Detroit Lakes, Minn.

DEAR HERALD:

If business gets any tougher up here in Minnesota than it is right now they will have to write home to their wife's folks for money, and what's worrying them is to know how their wife's folks are fixed.

It's plenty tough, Abner, it's plenty tough, and it seems to be getting tougher all the while, and they say North Dakota is worse yet. Oh me, oh my. Where's that "prosperity" the producers have been promising? If they cut film service 50 per cent it won't save some of 'em if these conditions continue. The big houses are losing money faster than the little ones, and the Lord knows that's going plenty fast enough.

A Slight Error

We called up Crockett Brown at Nashwauk the other day and told him we wanted to come up there and buy one of his bull-foundland pups, and he replied, "I'm sorry, mister, but he haint that kind of a dog, he haint got no pups," and then he continued, "Say, you old moss-backed pelican, what are you doing up in this country? Now you come on up here and we'll run that old cement mixer of yours in the barn and I'll take my limousine and drive you up in the Vermilion lake country and down the north shore of Lake Superior where you can meet some exhibitors you have neglected every time you have been up here, and they are getting pretty sore about it."

We replied, "Crockett, that's the most sensible proposition we have ever heard you make, and we will forgive you for not having any pups and for calling us an old moss-back pelican, so you can look for us next Monday."

So now, folks, maybe the next time we will have a jungle story for you, for we are going right into the jungles of northeast Minnesota and possibly part of Canada, and what we mean is "jungles" with cougars and polar bears 'n' everything.

"NEVER THE TWAIN SHALL MEET." If there was a good reason for making this one neither the billing nor the picture disclosed it.

Fugitive from Justice

When we called on H. E. Simon of the State theatre at Walker he said to us, "Say, do you know that the state game department is looking for you?" and we replied, "How come?" and he said, "Well, you remember when you were here two years ago you told about running over a polar bear and killing him out here on the highway?" and we said, "Yes, we remember telling about it but what business has a bear blocking traffic, let 'em keep their durn bear off the highway, have you any more bear around here?" And he replied, "No, you killed the last one we had, but we have something else that will interest you." We said, "What's that?"

And he replied, "It's an educated muskie. We've got a muskie down here in Leach lake by the park that is six feet and three inches long and weighs seventy-eight pounds and nine ounces." "How do you know he does," we inquired. And he said, "because he carries the scales on his back all the time. (This is an old one but the boys are still using it) and, you can believe it or not, but he is educated and dearly loves music." And we replied, "Thanks for giving us the option, but go ahead with your story."

"Yes, sir, we call him old Mose, and our orchestra goes down to the lake three or four evenings every week and serenades old Mose and he will come up to the shore and seems to enjoy the music as long as they play overtures, but the minute they start playing jazz he gets furious and churns the water into foam and splashes water all over the boys with his tail, it makes him so mad, and another strange thing about old Mose is that he dearly loves hoarhound candy and huckleberry pies. The kids go down and feed him hoarhound candy and I feed him pies three or four times a week."

"Say, Simon," we said, "let's get a couple of pies and go down and feed Mose, we want to get a look at him." And Simon said, "Let's see, what day of the week is this?". And we said it was Tuesday, and he said, "Well, it's no use to go down today because Mose has had a habit for years of going away Tuesday mornings and he doesn't come back until late Wednesday night." "Where does he go?" we asked. "Well," he said, "Nobody seems to know, but we presume he has a family somewhere he goes to call on and possibly two or three lady friends on the side, but if you will come back here Thursday." "Say, wait a minute, we can't come back Thursday," we said, "but we've got a couple of fellows down in Nebraska we'd like to match you against. One is Elmer Gaily of the Gay theatre at Wayne, and the other is Sherm Fitch, branch manager for RKO at Omaha, but we want to warn you that they are both professionals." Then as he poured some more ginger ale in our glass he said, "Well, all professionals look like amateurs to me." Gosh, but that Leach lake country is SOME country.

"THE RIGHT OF WAY," with Conrad Nagle and some other folks. Another case of using up seven reels of film that they didn't know what else to do with.

On Drawing Flies

Some exhibitor out in Long Beach, Cal., has just mailed us a copy of a Long Beach paper with admission prices of the various theatres marked, and we note that several of them are running double programs for ten and fifteen cents and one vaudeville house is running two features and eight acts of vaudeville for fifteen and thirty-five cents. This doesn't indicate that business is very rosy in old Cal. It all comes back to the same old proposition, if you give the public what they want they will go back and see it, but you can't draw flies with asafoetida.

If producers would stop trying to corral the market and would produce FEWER and BETTER pictures this business would right itself. Wherever we go exhibitors tell us that they can do business if they have a good picture but they starve to death with the poor ones, and just so long as they continue to flood the market with wishy-washy, just a picture, stuff, thus business will continue to wear patches on the seat of its pants.

We have just wired Crockett Brown that we'd be there Sunday night and for him to get himself in shape for that lake Superior trip, and for him to kiss the girls goodby for both of us. We are a little sore at those girls anyhow, and that ought to settle 'em.

A Pretty Cartoon

We saw a pretty good cartoon in the Minneapolis paper. Uncle Sam had Al Capone by the collar, and Chicago's chief of police, district attorney and judge, were up in a tree and they yelled to Uncle Sam "Arrest that man for murder." As a travesty on justice, Aly's case takes the whole bakery, and if we ever go down to Chicago and kill fifteen or twenty people we are going to plead guilty to running a red signal and take our medicine.

And now there is more trouble brewing for Chicago. Johnnie Torrio and Jack Guzik are both contenders for Al's throne as king of gangland while Al is away on vacation for a few months. The Chicago police force ought to take this matter up and determine who is entitled to the throne, and if they can't agree, they should call in Mussolini. We MUST protect our "citizens" rights, for where would we be if we didn't have a king.

We went out last evening and played in a foursome at the Country Club golf course and Andy Anderson pitted us against a kid 14 years old and the kid beat us two strokes. That's the way with that doggoned Andy. He knew we wouldn't try to beat a kid, and he knew it wouldn't do us any good if we did, and we know it now, too. All right George, cut us off if you want to and see if we care.

MUSIC AND TALENT

MUSIC ACTIVITIES BEING REVIVED

Predict More Competitive Field Shortly

Forecast Is Based on Reported Disposal of Three Concerns By Warner Brothers

By ED DAWSON

Music men, in the unconfirmed reports relative to Warner Brothers unloading a number of their publishing companies, see a renewal of better times in the business, better, they believe, than at any time since 1928 or 29.

The Warner subsidiaries which, it is reported, will go on their own are Remick's, DeSylva, Brown & Henderson, and Harms.

M. Witmark & Sons, it is said, will remain under the Warner banner.

One positive result of such a change in lineup would be, according to music men, the return of a more competitive field which, they contend, is vitally important.

Music men are now viewing the situation more optimistically than they have in some time because of these reports, and because of the statement of the American Federation of Musicians that employment among their members has increased 50 per cent.

It appears also that fewer theatres will adopt a straight sound picture policy, as many did last summer. This means additional employment and the more widespread use of music.

Returns to Vaudeville

Al and Loie, vaudeville pair, have been booked for the ace spot on the Oklahoma City Warner bill. Al has been making Tiffany shorts and Loie has been on the Kansas City stage.

Oscar Straus on Air

Oscar Straus, noted composer, directed a large symphony orchestra over an NBC-WEAF network on June 28, the program bringing together several artists formerly with the Roxy Theatre broadcasts.

Broadcast Damrosch Concert

Walter Damrosch directed members of the San Francisco symphony orchestra in the second of a series of concerts, broadcast over an NBC-WJZ network June 28, from the Woodland theatre, Hillsborough, Cal.

JULIA DAWN

After having been featured organist in many of Paramount-Publix's deluxe houses, the adventuresome spirit of Julia Dawn was awakened by her assignment to the Paramount Prince Edward theatre, in Sydney, Australia. She was stationed there for over a year and during that time she added to her accomplishments, that of being a huntress. She is not only a good organist but also a great sportswoman. Deep sea fishing and hunting big game are her hobbies and she has many trophies to show for her skill. Julia is back in America now, and is making her home in the film capital, Hollywood, until she receives a reassignment. Meanwhile it is rumored that Julia has had offers to go into pictures. She should do very well, with her looks and ability.

Flies to Broadcast

Ken Murray, vaudeville player featured on RKO Theatre of the Air program June 28, flew from St. Louis to New York to keep the engagement.

Orchestra in RKO Broadcast

An orchestra of 115 pieces will be heard rendering patriotic music over an NBC-WEAF network during the RKO Theatre of the Air program Friday, July 3, from New York.

Installing Orchestra

Fred Schmitt, Denver orchestra director, is installing a 14-piece orchestra in the Newman, Kansas City.

STAGE SHOWS

Brooklyn Paramount

Week ending July 2

Individually produced stage-shows for this house are now in the vogue here. Harry Gourfain is producing and doing a good job of it. Currently, "Ridin' the Waves" is playing here, with Charlie Davis and Gang, and Chilton and Thomas headlining. Gourfain filled the show with entertainment value and entertaining talent, placing it in a class far superior to any that have played here in a long while. Opening effectively with a film of battleships riding the waves, which smoothly fades out to that of a battleship facing the audience, on the deck of which Davis, as captain, his band as sailors and the Bobby Sanford Sailorettes stand at attention. After a bit of laugh-getting gags, Cecelia Blair offers some original and extremely difficult acrobatic dancing which features progressive splits and a jumping split for the finish. She surely earned the good reception accorded her. Fred Sanborn, "nut" zylophonist, did well with his routine of clowning and good playing, the audience getting considerable entertainment from his laughable antics. Gertrude Niesen, a comely miss, is cleverly brought on for her singing of "Love for Sale," by an M. P., who brings her to the attention of Capt. Davis, with the remark that she's "just a dame." Miss Niesen has a pleasing voice and plenty showmanship and she would, if billed here with Davis' gang for a run, undoubtedly earn a great popularity. Chilton and Thomas, late of Al Jolson's "Wonder Bar" musical, present a round of good tap routines and also their own elaboration of the Charleston, stopping the show with it and earning their encore.

Charlie Davis brings the boys downstage for their specialty, this week's being that of their own conception of a small-time circus, offering them the opportunity of showing their individual comedy and musical abilities. This first bit is straight hokum, but this audience loved it and applauded for more, until Davis told them that Frankie Parrish would sing, as a special request, "In Your Arms." He did, and to hearty applause. Phil (Tubby) Davis, "Dizzy" Williford and Carl Vandiwalle follow by singing "A Crazy Song," the remainder of the band coming in on the chorus. This was very well done. This is a great gang and Brooklyn audiences love them. The answer to their success here is that they are showmen, good musicians and have a leader that is full of personality. For the finale, the Sanford sailorettes, carrying sparklers, climb about deck and form effective poses.

Rubinoff this week leads his fine orchestra in an overture of "French Echoes," entering to good applause and finishing with a tremendous hand.

Head Roxy Orchestra

Maurice Baron and Mischa Violin have taken over direction of the New York Roxy orchestra. Max Fleischmann has been named assistant conductor.

UNIFORMS FOR HOUSE ATTACHES COSTUMES FOR STAGE PRESENTATIONS BROOKS 1437 B'way N. Y. City

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Herr Louie, the Weazel, and the rest of the little German band are back on station WGN, broadcasting every night in the week except Thursday. Ted Pearson, youthful production manager of the Chicago NBC studios, has some very definite views on art. One of his strongest obsessions is that there should be more landscape and still life painters and fewer portrayals of the human form. But there is a very good reason for all this. For three years, while Pearson was attending school at Minneapolis and in Chicago, he modeled at the Art Institute of the two cities. Ted has not forgotten the cramped, aching muscles from hours spent on the modelling stand.

Lee Sims' recent gift to his beautiful and talented wife, Illomay Bailey, the lyric contralto, who sings to the popular pianist's unusual arrangements over KYW, is a penthouse apartment on the roof of a 16-story building on the near north side. Sims gave his wife the new home because many NBC and KYW programs will prevent their taking a vacation before fall.

Clyde McCoy's orchestra, which built a tremendous following through its rendition of the "Sugar Blues," have returned to the Terrace Gardens. McCoy's orchestra is an organization of youngsters, all less than 30 years of age, the majority under 24, and many in their teens. Practically every member of the popular band was recruited by McCoy from musically inclined high school friends in Ashland, Ky. The orchestra is not only famous for its rendition of "hot" numbers, but has an even greater reputation for its syncopated arrangements of classics and old favorite ballads.

Not all Kentucky colonels wear white goatees and sip mint juleps. Jack Brooks and Don Ross, the new harmony team heard from the Chicago studios of the Columbia network thrice weekly, have received their colonel's commissions from Gov. Flem D. Sampson of the Blue Grass state, and they don't even say "you all." Brooks and Ross received the honor on a recent southern trip, as a tribute to their entertaining efforts. Not so many years ago Brooks and Ross started blending harmony in the campus entertainment at the University of Ohio, where they were both studying law. Their success was so great they were persuaded to abandon Blackstone and try their luck on the stage. Both boys are Kentuckians, Brooks coming from Georgetown and Ross from Covington.

Abe Lyman and his orchestra will be heard each night over WBBM.

Internationalism in music holds a greater meaning for Josef Koestner, director of the Armour Hour orchestra from the Chicago NBC studios, than it does to many musicians. Koestner was born in Bavaria, studied French, German, Spanish, Russian and Italian composers under French and German instructors, and has members of 13 different nationalities and races in his orchestra.

Downey at Paramount

Morton Downey will appear for one week, beginning July 3, at the New York Paramount, heading the stage revue, "Rio Rosa."

First "Our Gang" on Stage

Three members of the original Hal Roach "Our Gang" group are appearing in person at the New Plaza, Milford, Del., on July 3 and 4, in a playlet.

STAGE SHOWS

New York Paramount

Even though this is Rudy Vallee's farewell week and he is billed all over this house, it apparently meant nothing unusual to the box-office. The house, of course, was full, but not unusually so. The Frank Cambria-Publix production, "Little Revue," is the unit show here this week and it opens to a well-routined song and dance by the mixed line of Merriel Abbott girls and boys. The four Mullen Sisters prove entertaining with their cycle of songs, sung harmoniously, and their instrumental playing, both, earning them a good reception at the show caught. The three Rio Brothers offer a good act of comedy and dancing, though most of it is from other well known acts. The boys have added a third member to their team since they last played here, and his work is good. It seems a shame that boys with ability, such as these have, should find it necessary to take most of their act from the work of others. The audience did not know this, of course, and gave them good applause. Abbott dancers on next for an exceptional routine of adagio dancing, which they performed in pairs, earning them a bigger hand than is usual for line dancers. Vallee came on next and, after an appealing speech, went into the singing of a medley of songs he had introduced from the stages of this and the Brooklyn Paramount, and closed with the singing of "Toodle Oo, So-long, Good-bye." This is one of his own songs.

Nan Halperin, in one, offers for the first time to picture-house audiences her own conception of a sophisticated child telling all about herself in story and song. Miss Halperin makes two quick changes after doing the child bit; first she changes to grown-up attire and sings a number, and then for closing changes to a bridal gown, and her final song blends into the finale in which the entire company perform. A good show and enjoyed by the audience.

Wisconsin Milwaukee

Week ending July 1

A operatic selection by Leo Rossi, tenor, accompanied by the Wisconsin theatre orchestra under the direction of Don Wilkins, precedes Fanchon & Marco's "Carnival" Idea.

The Idea opens with the Carla Torney girls attired in varicolored pantaloons doing their stuff before a carnival background. Their number includes a make-believe merry-go-round. Raynor Lehr acts as chief ballyhooer in connection with the Idea.

Cropley & Violet stage an excellent lariat act. The young woman member of the duo is very apt at keeping the lariat twirling in a host of various positions.

A medley of popular selections is offered by the band, including "Mine, All Mine," "Smile, Darn Ya, Smile," and "Two Hearts in Waltz Time."

The Carney Torney girls in black costumes stage a tap toe dance which goes over big. They give way to Raynor Lehr, who has livened up the Idea between episodes with wisecracks and whip snapping. He now engages in a number of fast stepping dances called for by persons in the audience.

Billed as Strange Man, a young colored lad, sings "Singing in the Rain," and then proceeds to dust the boards with some hot stepping.

Goody, Oro and Smith, with "Teddy" the bear, stage an interesting wrestling act with plenty of comedy thrown in for good measure. The bear is a real one and behaves in an engaging manner.

The Torney girls' next number carries with it a military atmosphere and the girls sport batons which they twirl in an official manner.

The Andresens wind up the Idea with some fast twirling and balancing acts. The feminine member of the duo performs atop a pole held on the shoulders of her partner. In the finale he twists this pole at a furious rate with the young woman taking the corners at a fast clip.

Week ending June 24

This week's stage act at the Fox is prefaced by an unusually effective concert by Walt Roesner and the Fox Concert Orchestra made up of Russian composers' selections in which the Volga Boatman" and "Dance of the Flowers" figure prominently. Joaquin Guaray, tenor of the organization, offers "Ho Hum," and, as an encore, "When Yuba Plays the Rumba on the Tuba."

The stage act is Fanchon and Marco's "Three Big Figures," originally staged at Grauman's Chinese theatre as a prologue for "Dirigible." It is an act sharply divided into three parts, each made distinctive with a drop curtain on which enormous figures appear.

Haline Frances, comedienne, acts as mistress of ceremonies and turns out a splendid performance. She first tells how the song, "The Peanut Vendor," originated and the curtain goes up on an enormous figure of a peanut vendor and his roaster. Harold Stanton, tenor, in costume, sings the air and the Sunkist Beauties, garbed to represent peanuts, come out of the roaster and dance.

Haldine next makes her appearance in the dress of an old-fashioned lady and is joined by Harold Stanton in attire of the same period. They sing "The Same as We Used to Do," and the Sunkist Beauties do an old-fashioned dance, with Muriel Gardner offering a lively toe and acrobatic dance.

The mistress of ceremonies presents her inebriate number, which has been seen before but which is about as inoffensive as a number of this kind can be, and the act goes into "The Orchid Lady" number. The backdrop represents a modern miss, smoking her cigaret, with a great bouquet of orchids nestled on her shoulder. The orchids come to life and troop down to the stage and put on a highly colorful flower dance, assisted by Muriel Gardner.

The real punch in the show comes with the presentation of the Five Jansleys, who are risley experts of the first water. They put on a whirlwind performance after the order of that usually expected only of Japanese, and win round after round of applause.

Breaks With Publix

Castro Carazo, former musical conductor at the New Orleans Saenger, will not handle the special presentations to be featured at the house. Terms could not be satisfactorily reached with Publix.

Warner Drops Vaudeville

The Warner in Oklahoma City has discontinued RKO vaudeville for the summer. The stage presentations will be resumed in the fall.

Fourth Fox House Closed

The Fox Senator, Vallejo, Cal., closed for the summer on June 13, to be re-opened after acoustic and sound readjustments are made. This is the fourth Fox closing in the region in the past few weeks.

ORGAN SOLOS

FRANKLIN BENTEL (Beaver Falls, Pa., Rialto) offered for his week's organ solo a cleverly presented novelty for which a novel background was set. The organ-logue has turned pianologue for this week. Using the piano on stage back of the sound screen, Bentel presented the idea of radio broadcasting through the "mike." Entitling this entertaining presentation "Singing Jubilee," the novelty opened with a special lyric chorus to the tune "Sweet Jennie Lee," inviting the audience to sing. Cleverly worded gags and introductions were "broadcast" by Bentel before each song was played and sung. The program this week included "Springtime in the Rockies," "My Ideal," "Whistling in the Dark" (one chorus of the last named number was sung by the audience, the second chorus, the organist whistled), and closing with "Please Don't Talk About Me." A white spot thrown on pianist back of screen during the singing of last song, revealed the secret of the broadcasting from a studio. The novelty received favorable comment and good applause.

KEN WRIGHT (Green Bay, Wis., Orpheum) recently used a community singing novelty entitled "Number, Please," which had all of the audience singing. The solo was presented in comedy form and was a takeoff on delinquent telephone operators and service. Comedy gags fitted to "Blue Again," "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver," "My Love for You" and "Cheerful Little Earful." The organist this week introduced but one new number, "Two Little Blue Little Eyes," and two requests, "Everything Nice Belongs to You" and "If I Could be with You." Two cleverly worded boy-and-girl repartee choruses to "Something to Remember You By," "Betty Co-ed" and also a parody to "Shade of the Old Apple Tree" came in for their full share of singing. Even when the organ was back in the pit they wouldn't stop applauding. Hence, there was nothing to do but take another ride to the top and let them sing "Walking Baby Back Home."

EGON DOUGHERTY (Astoria, L. I. Triboro) presented a community songfest of "Broadway Melodies" this week which had all of the audience singing from the first note to the last. This solo consisted of straight singing of popular numbers, with a few gags interspersed between songs, but the main thing is that this audience has been taught to sing, and not just listen to a hard worked over solo. This, consequently, has made it an easy task for Dougherty to supply their wants. Songs this week consisted of: "I Wanna Sing About You," "Clowning," "Blue Just Thinking of You," "Love Is Like That," "Wrap Your Troubles in Dreams" and a final chorus of "Roll On, Mississippi."

"MAC" BRIDWELL (San Antonio RKO-Majestic) recently offered a singing-bee "idea" entitled "A Singing Party," and made a big hit with the following late song slides: "For You"; a special oddity on "Ro-Ro-Rolling Along"; "Smiles"; and another snappy version to the tune of the above and closed with a parody on a smile song. Bridwell is well-liked here and his popularity is growing.

As an added attraction, Manager Raymond B. Willie presented his singing usher, Joe Bell, who was accompanied by "Mac" Bridwell at the console, and the youngster did real well with "By My Side," displaying his skill on a guitar. The singing usher is on the program for two weeks, according to the house management.

BERNIE COWHAM (Flushing, L. I., RKO), for his midweek program presented his original and very popular "Illiterate Digest." The audiences here have learned to look forward to Cowham's weekly efforts to give them something novel and entertaining. For the Wednesday, Thursday and Friday program, Cowham goes to the trouble of clipping out of the newspapers anything timely and interesting, and making parodies to the tune of some popular song that fits the clippings. Often the newspapers are so full of news that it is necessary for him to make an entirely new set of slides from one show to the next. This week Bernie opens with an oral explanation about each of the newspaper clippings as they are flashed on the screen, his smart chatter leading the audience to the singing of "Smile, Darn Ya, Smile," "Heart of My Heart," "Just a Blue-Eyed Blonde," "Take a Walk," "Down by the Winegar Woiks," and "Betty Co-ed." Bernie wrote special lyrics to the baseball scores and played them to the tune of "Down by the Winegar Woiks." As his closing number, Bernie wrote special lyrics to "Betty Co-ed" and dedicated them to the graduates of the local schools. To keep right up to the minute on current topics, many of the special lyrics are written between shows and the audience gets the latest news, in the Cowham manner, which is distinctly entertaining.

REX KOURY (Troy, N. Y., Proctor's 4th Street). Troy's "Titan of Melody" offered for his presentation this week "A Battle Royal," which is a community singfest between the boys and girls, and consisted of four amusing parody choruses written to popular tunes. The girls sang the red lines, and the boys, the white. By "mike" Koury stirred his audience to battle—and battle they did. The final set-to was in the singing of "Whistling in the Dark."

This presentation, though not original in idea, proved the popularity of the free-for-all when it is presented in a showmanly manner. On several performances, this 19-year-old favorite was forced to encore with a short "potpouri" of popular hits.

ADA RIVES (New Orleans Loew's State) has a rolicking solo for the current week entitled "Happy Home" and built about the marriage theme with songs and gags. The opening number is "Whistlin' in the Dark," followed by some appropriate remarks, "We Can Live on Love," which tickled the audience, "The Little Things in Life," followed by some cheerful comments on the matrimonial estate and a closing "At Last I'm Happy."

No Depression at Warner's Beacon, Thank You

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO EVERYBODY

The weekly statistical report from the Roxy theatre concerns the inter-theatre romances of that huge organization. . . . A survey of the romances which have blossomed and culminated within the ranks of the performers and the employees reveals that the unit which is the most acquisitive in the matter of obtaining helpmates is the Roxyettes. Within the past, six of them have acquired husbands from the projection, engineering and house staffs, respectively. . . . The wedding bells, which have been chiming intermittently ever since the Roxy was opened, were first used to celebrate the union of Josef Stopak, concertmaster of the Roxy Symphony Orchestra and Celia Branz, contralto of the Roxy "Gang." . . .

Nat. Feist, manager of the special service department of Leo Feist, Inc., says these songs are the "Real McCoy," and from the way bands, organists and others are playing them, they sure are. . . . "As long as You're There" is another "Blue Heaven," it sounds great. . . . "I'm Gettin' Superstitious About Delicious You"—that "delicious" describes it perfectly. . . . DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, Inc., Warner music unit, announces through its president, Bobby Crawford, publication of a new song by Little Jack Little, radio star. . . . It is entitled "Let Me Hum a Hymn to Her Tonight" and already is becoming rambunctious enough to give "Nevertheless" and "Smile, Darn Ya, Smile," present DeSylva catalogue leaders, a tough battle for top honors. "Hum a Hymn" is an unusual ballad, exhibiting Little Jack Little's melodic versatility. . . .

Charlie Davis, master of ceremonies at the Brooklyn Paramount, is plenty happy these "hot" days. . . . The heat doesn't bother him; he's too busy giving audiences good shows, and, another thing, he's so darned proud of the new addition to the Davis household, a great big baby girl, the third one. . . . Baby and Mrs. Davis are doing fine, and because they are out in Indianapolis, Charlie is going around singing "In My Indiana Home." . . . Oh, yes, and he and his gang have just successfully completed the filming of their first Paramount Short, which is entitled "The Jazz Reporter." It carries a rhythmic theme and the boys play but one number, "Deluxe," one of their own conceptions. . . . Johnny Perkins, that jovial and rotund comedian and m. c. at Warners' Stanley, Jersey City, has the distinction of playing to capacity audiences for the past 15 weeks and still doing it . . . but Johnny needs a rest, so he and Mrs. Perkins, known intimately to her friends as "Mac," intend to vacation in Europe until the fall, when Johnny is slated to return to the Stanley. . . . Ted Mack, that personable young chap, who had the hearts of the flappers fluttering when he m. c.ed at the N. Y. Paramount last year, is back there again after "wintering" at the Palace, Dallas, Texas.

MANAGERS' ROUND TABLE CLUB

CHARLES E. "CHICK" LEWIS
Chairman and Editor

An International Association of Showmen Meeting in MOTION PICTURE HERALD
Every Week—for Mutual Benefit and Progress

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

Lend Me Your Ears!

SOME division managers in their anxiety to show the home office that they are economizing have gone to such extremes that the houses under their supervision are becoming more like funeral parlors than theatres. One "smart" d.m. ordered all flashers discontinued during the summer months. There's hot efficiency for you! One of the bits of life which the public has always associated with the theatre is stopped because of someone's damnfoolishness.

Other orders include turning the front lights on at a later hour and off a little earlier, than usual.

Then they accomplish far-reaching cuts in the overhead by salary-slashing the ushers and cleaners.

We could honestly mention some districts and divisions where the most sensible cut in the overhead would be the elimination of the d.m's. All those saying "Amen" will please keep a straight face.

Analyzing what overhead cuts have accomplished for some theatres would reveal the following: A theatre front "dead" in appearance and uninviting; a doorman who can't force a smile to his face when he realizes that his slim pay envelope is now thinner; ushers who don't care a darn for their jobs because their meager salary has been cut; poor projection because the operators are afraid they will lose their jobs if they don't cut down on carbon consumption; etc., etc.

Supposing we all stop this ridiculous slashing, not of overhead, but of commonsense theatre operation and get back to earth? For an industry that has suffered less from the so-called depression (according to those who are supposed to know), we, in the theatre business, appear to be acting worse than those who were sunk deep in the red.

How in hell are we going to sell the public entertainment if we and our employees are going to walk around the town with long faces. And you'll never be able to wipe that woeful look off your face until there is some good reason for it. That reason can only be "back to theatre operation" and forget the silly economies, most of them brain-children of a few incapable executives who are making the industry the laughing stock of the country.

It is certainly gratifying to note the fine reaction to the advertising series which started in last week's issue. Despite the fact that the HERALD has has hardly had time to reach thousands of exhibitors west of the Mississippi, those who have read the opening articles are loud in their praises.

Don't miss the batch in this week's issue. They are just as important and contain many more interesting slants on this old, old problem.

As a word of advice to those fortunate boys who will get vacations with pay this summer, may we suggest that you put your house in order before you start out. Don't leave too many things undone or any angles requiring your decision undecided. Whoever must look after the theatre in your absence should not be burdened with details.

And then again, you will enjoy enough peace of mind to make your vacation really worth while if you know that everything is O. K. back at your amusement factory.

While it may be true that there is little or nothing new under the sun as applied to exploitation gags, enough variety should be injected into what you are doing to make your theatre's activities interesting and not monotonous.

Old or new, there are plenty of different angles to show selling to make each one stand out from the other without repetition over a period of ten or twelve weeks or possibly longer.

Dress some of the older ideas in modern clothes or add a new slant all the time.

Local Orchestra Proves Good Draw For Monty MacLevy

A local interest stunt that boosted receipts 100 per cent over normal Friday business was recently engineered by Monty MacLevy at the Fox-Hempstead Theatre, just prior to this manager's transfer to the Fox Theatre in Lynbrook, L. I.

At no cost to the house, it was arranged to present on the stage a local nine piece orchestra, general favorites in the locality by reason of a regular broadcast over a nearby radio station. All Monty did to repay the orchestra for its services was to make an announcement on the screen, program and a lobby ad. They were more than satisfied with the publicity received. The local paper gave the house a fine break when they published a large photo of the orchestra, mentioning the theatre in the story.

That's getting away with an added attraction that meant something, Monty. Now that you've left the Hempstead and gone to Lynbrook the Club would like to know what you're doing to sell shows to your latest group of Islanders.

Rosenthal's Heavy Campaign On 'City Lights' A Knockout

An account of how Jake Rosenthal, enterprising manager of the Iowa Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, put over a rousing campaign which sent "City Lights" 'way over the top, is sent to us by Virgil L. Lewis, also of the Iowa. Echoes of the strenuous work are still resounding in and around the house, says Virgil, to the extent that Jake has promised to play a return engagement of the Chaplin film.

From what we glean in the letter Jake exploited everything from waitresses to flivvers, using 200 tire covers with Chaplin signs; 500 Chaplin buttons; 500 Chaplin hats; generous advertising in local papers, with systematic distribution of ads in leading community papers; Chaplin chops in meat stores; Chaplin sundaes at soda fountains; theatre ushers wore Chaplin aprons, and so did waitresses in many restaurants. In fact, even the cows were giving Chaplin milk and the hens laying Chaplin eggs—so says Jake.

We would also like to call attention to the Iowa's front in a photo on this page. That it's attractive we're sure you'll all agree. Good art work is one of his pet hobbies—so much so that Iowans are getting a kick from looking at both outside and inside of the house. Note the attractive marquee lettering and cut-outs at entrance. The Club thanks both of you fellows for sending this along, and is sure that with such a display of enterprise you'll soon find a chance to contribute further accounts of Waterloo show selling.

Striking Window Display By La Bar For Fairbanks Film

Tying up with a prominent clothier who had never before shared his windows for any advertising purpose outside of his own wares, was the highlight of a campaign put over on "Reaching for the Moon" by F. La Bar, manager of the Publix-Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C.

The clothier sent out a letter to many of his customers and prospective customers telling about the picture, playing up the modern-dress angle, the giving away of a $50 suit—and also enclosed a single ticket with each letter. The ticket was a regular theatre admission ticket which the store purchased from the theatre at the regular price. Four hundred and fifty-two tickets were used in this manner.

On Sunday before picture's Monday opening, a two column 12-inch ad appeared on Fairbanks, the picture, name of theatre and copy relative to the suit to be given away. This ad also played up Fairbanks in modern dress. And on day after picture had concluded its run a 24-inch ad appeared on the suit which was to be given away. This was done purposely with the idea of getting in a few extra sheckels on the next picture; the suit being given away from the stage on this night. Both of these ads were paid for by the clothier. Both ads called attention to the fact that the suit was on display in the theatre lobby and asked that persons go there to see it.

The reproduced photos with this contribution from Manager La Bar show the striking and well arranged clothiers' windows. Note the generous space alloted to exploitation of the film. Also the attractive lobby display frame displaying the suit of clothes. Winning over a store in this manner is no easy task, La Bar, and we congratulate you. We are sure that it will not be so hard the next time. Since you are an active member of the Club we know that you will continue to pass along the highlights of your campaigns.

If Picture's Big, Play It In A Big Way, Says Cassin

When he plays a BIG picture he tells his public so in a BIG way, says F. J. Cassin, manager of the Grand Theatre, Lancaster, Pa., and if you think he's spoofing his brother Club members take a look at the reproduction of his broadside on "Trader Horn" which appears on this page. It measures about 16 inches by 16 inches when open and, naturally, half that size when folded. The copy on front when folded reads: "The Most Important Announcement in Lancaster Theatrical History." On the back: "Supreme Achievement of 1931." You can read for yourselves the message that greets the holder's eyes when the broadside is opened. Yes, Cassin, that's telling 'em about it, alright. And why not, we ask you? When you have the goods, sell them! Right, boys?

Another gag, a character analysis card, he tells us was the means of arousing interest when he played Ann Harding in "East Lynne." On the card, which measures about 4 x 9, is a photo of Ann Harding with her character analysis noted below. The copy at top reads: "Your Face and What It Reveals." The copy at bottom requests reader to compare facial points with those of the star's. The theatre ad and playdates appear on the reverse side.

The Club appreciates the fact that you are keeping it in mind, Cassin, and here's luck to you with that new promotion from the Rialto, in York, to your present post. We will expect to hear further in reference to activities on the new job.

Cline Gives A New Twist To Co-op Ad; A Local Resident Gag

A new twist is given the well known co-operative ad page, judging from a glance at samples sent the Club by Burr W. Cline, manager of the Metropolitan Theatre, Mitchell, S. D.

Instead of blanks for guessing merchants' names or trademarks or identification of screen stars clipped off portraits, he is inserting the names of residents in his city and surrounding territory. The gag is to find your name and receive a complimentary ticket. His city, he says, is not an ideal one for the promotion of co-op pages, both merchants and editors being exceptionally hard-boiled when it comes to tying up with a theatre. But, Cline tells us, he finally put three of them across to very good results at small cost.

Cline is making quite a program drive throughout his territory, having a 3,000 mailing list on a monthly assortment of attractions as a plug for the rural districts and a semi-monthly program which is passed out at the theatre. From the photo on this page, note the attractive front he recently constructed for "Dracula."

Next time we hear from you, Burr, we hope that you will have been able to tame those editors. Editors won't bite, although they make a noise like it sometimes. Keep right after them and we'll venture to say they'll turn out to be your best friends in the long run. Likewise the merchants. The Club appreciates your contributions and wants to hear from you regularly.

McNeill Informs Club He's Plugging Away In Smith Falls

A short account of how he exploited "Check and Double Check" is contained in a recent letter from "Stan" McNeill, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Smith Falls, Ontario, Canada.

McNeill not only hooked up with all the drug stores for a tooth-paste plug but covered his entire territory with a truck carrying two fellows made up in blackface. He also used banners on transfer trucks and, of course, had a Fresh Air Taxi parade the streets. It got the people talking, writes Mack, and business was excellent considering local business conditions and the inclement weather.

Keep plugging away Mack, as you acknowledge you're doing, and keep the Club posted from time to time on your work. We note that you are using a mailing list on coming attractions instead of a regular program and are glad that this scheme is working out so nicely. Our regards to Regional Chairman Jack Allen when you see him.

DO OTHERS FOLLOW ROUND TABLE TIPS?

Here's the Answer:

Murphy's Throwaway Is Effective Ballyhoo For Circus Picture

The old S.R.O. sign was taken down and dusted off as a consequence of wide distribution of a throwaway announcing the opening of the serial "Spell of the Circus," Walt Murphy, manager of the Roky Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J., informs us.

Murphy's throwaway was regulation old-time circus size and the copy was written in the familiar circus ballyhoo style with no mercy on adjectives. Both sides announced the fact that everything spectacular and sensational could be seen in the picture. One side was printed in blue and white and the other in red and white. The name and ad of the theatre was imprinted in black. 3,000 of these were distributed on opening date to both adults and kiddies. Two boys were also dressed as clowns and passed them out.

Believe it or not, Walt tells us that the local police had to be called out to keep the crowd in order and if a throwaway will do this we certainly recommend this member's method. Keep up the good work, Murph, and continue to let the Club know what's new.

Banniza Using A Variety Of Show Stunts Down South

North Alabama is again on the Club map on receipt of a spirited letter from G. P. Banniza, manager of the Princess Theatre, Decatur, Ala., who assures us that while he's recently been laying down on the job of making regular contributions to this department, it will not happen again.

Banniza encloses what he terms a "little bit of everything that has been going on around the Princess Theatre for the past few months." After a glance over the contents of his envelope we must conclude that he has been trying a variety of gags—teaser ads, doorknob hangers, dodgers and a different kind of newspaper advertising—different in that it gets away from the stereotyped form so long in vogue with most managers.

The ads we refer to are the kind consistently plugged on these pages for some time—that of obtaining endorsements from prominent citizens of your town; also, the personal endorsement of the theatre manager. In another ad Banniza does not deal directly with current attractions but tells his public that the Princess has played three of four pictures which earned the annual award of merit from the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences. He further quotes a Hollywood dispatch concerning the awards.

That Banniza is doing some fine work with cutouts will be noted by the photo on this page. Take a look at the size of the one on the sidewalk in front of the theatre; also, the airplane idea in connection with Barthelmess in "Dawn Patrol." Striking effect, say we! Alright, Banniza, the Club knows that it can depend on you and friend Oscar, of Athens, to keep your brother showmen informed on what's doing in North Alabama. But how about the rest of you managers down that way? Are you going to let these two shoulder all the load? How about it, boys?

Sherred Ties With Veterans For Week Of Brisk Business

Splendid response attended a tie-up recently made by Carl B. Sherred, manager of the Mishler Theatre, Altoona, Pa., in connection with Veterans of Foreign Wars Week in his town. The picture selected was Jack Oakie in "June Moon" and the stunt proved a big draw for the house during the entire run.

Sherred arranged with a local newspaper for the publishing of an eight-page tab size insert to be distributed in the daily issue. This insert contained only news calculated to interest the Veterans and to stimulate attendance at the benefit performances. The advertising secured by the paper through the tie-up more than covered printing costs.

A corking good stunt, Sherred, and we'd like to be able to pass along more details to your brother members as to just what percentage all concerned gained at the close of the week. But you neglected to inform the Club just how you worked this out so we'll have to ask members to drop you a line for further information in case they wish to try a similar gag. Righto? And let the Club know what else you are doing down in Altoona.

Allen Gardner Busy With Three Houses; Fine Gag on "Skippy"

A collection of live-wire stunts is sent the Club by Allen E. Gardner, owner manager of the Granada Theatre, Stuart, Neb, who, although a recent member of this organization, has contributed indirectly through division managers for the past three years. He now has three houses of his own and admits that keeping busy is the one thing he does these days—but not too busy to let his brother showmen know what's going on.

How Gardner obtained a general pulpit endorsement on "Skippy" is interestingly told in his letter. For five days prior to playing this picture it steadily rained, his front was ruined, other advertising was out of the question, so he took the bull by the horns and called on every preacher in town with an invitation to attend a special showing. School professors were included as guests and every invitation was accepted. The ministers were so impressed with the picture that all of them made mention of it in the Sunday sermon and as a result Gardner had people at the show who had never before entered the theatre. As evidence he encloses a Mother's Day bulletin issued by one of the churches, and as it was written by a preacher we are quoting it:

SKIPPY

We desire to have every parent in this community see this picture. It is the cleanest and most instructive of any we have seen in years. The crying need in America, too, is the need of parents to know their children. No matter how hard boiled you may be or think you are, you'll feel a pull at your heart strings. Truly a picture of the average family life. A man wakes to the fact that he has been too busy to know his own son. Until he lost him. . . . Almost.

Boys, there's some catch lines in the above that would do credit to a p. a. and we believe you'll all agree that an endorsement of this kind, along with other mention made, went a long way toward helping Gardner over the top. And all because of a five-day rain. . . .

Al also stresses the magic connected with a cigarette gag he used when playing "Dishonored." On the Sunday prior to the showing he had a good-looking, well-built girl dressed in evening costume, with black mask stand in the lobby and pass out a cigarette-attached card to adults at the end of each show. The copy was built around: "What secret does the daring woman spy, X-27, find concealed in a cigarette. Learn the answer in ——." Copy at bottom of card credited a tobacco manufacturer with whom the tie-up was made at no cost to the theatre, except printing.

Gardner tells the Club that out his way heralds appear to have reached a stage of uselessness, that Rotos are oke, but that a novel assortment of throw-aways have proved the best selling power he's used in a long time. He blames chain store wide distribution of heralds as the means of lessening public interest in this form of advertising. All of which is very interesting to us, Al, and to your brother showmen.

BEST FORMS OF THEATRE ADVERTISING!

Bunny Bryan Carefully Analyzes His Views on the Subject!

Chick requests an article on "What You Consider the Most Valuable Form of Theatre Advertising and Why" and I suppose I could say in so many words "Newspaper advertising and publicity because this medium reaches the same constant readers day after day, constantly hammering home the message PLUS the many new readers the live or even average coverage newspaper must have to maintain its general advertising pull" but trailers and fronts and lobbies play such an important part in actual ticket selling, we trust you'll pardon our elaborating and qualifying our statements.

Successful Seat Selling

I believe most seasoned showmen agree that newspaper advertising and publicity is the very backbone of successful seat selling. That depends, of course, upon the territory, the newspaper or newspapers available, the type house or show being sold, the advisability and necessity of mass or class appeal and a dozen more facts that must be analyzed before the campaign or campaigns are definitely decided upon and set.

You may be operating in a resort section, where the year 'round residents are great newspaper readers in the off-season, but find very little time to either read newspapers or patronize your theatre in the season because they must "make hay while the sun shines" and work long hours, leaving them very little time for thorough newspaper reading or theatre-going. A quick analysis of a resort section would lead one to believe that newspaper advertising and publicity were the backbone of all theatre advertising in the off-season, but worth considerably less during the season. That's where Mr. Quick Analyzer would be slightly in error.

Suppose, for example, you were managing the Long Branch, N. J., Paramount, Long Branch, N. J. Long Branch is a popular summer resort with a year 'round population of 22,000. Sea Bright, Rumson and other nearby resorts and year 'round communities increase this population to approximately 35,000 (off-season). During the summer, the population of this territory increases to approximately 200,000. The local daily newspaper has, we'll say, a 10,000 circulation.

On the premise that many of this paper's readers are seasonably occupied and so neither newspaper readers nor potential theatre-goers, we will for the summer cut this 10,000 circulation in half, because of these lost readers BUT what about that 165,000 increase in population?

Let's be conservative, suppose we say that only twenty-five per cent of this population increase are potential theatre patrons. How are we going to reach them. Many of them will continue to read their hometown dailies, others will refrain from reading any newspapers while vacationing, but there must be at least twenty per cent or 33,000 vacationists interested enough in the national and local doings to purchase or pick up and read the Long Branch Daily Record, and if the theatre advertisements and publicity have sufficient appeal, the Paramount manager will not feel the Daily Record's loss of circulation but will, instead, benefit by the natural increase in circulation and reader interest resulting from this seasonal increase in population.

Now you're, in all probability, saying, but how does this manager reach the non-newspaper readers? By a campaign, that must be supplementary to his newspaper efforts. There are a thousand and one ways of getting your message across to the newcomers, practically all of them are tried and proven and known to all seasoned managers and publicity men.

I have deliberately selected a resort town condition to make my point because of the apparent weakness of newspaper effort in resorts at first glance. If newspaper advertising and publicity is the most valuable in resort towns with their constantly shifting population and changing newspaper pull, it certainly must be far in the lead in industrial, farming or year 'round communities. Here's why, and this is all based upon the average newspaper premise, the newspaper with the average make-up and reader interest and the average circulation, for after all, there are many exceptions to any rule, and we must discuss anything on the basis of the average.

The newspaper goes into the hands of its readers with a maximum amount of reader interest. It is news of the happenings, the comings and goings, the possibilities, the realities of life in that community and a hundred more, for the A P service encircles the globe. The on-the-job theatre manager can, with the proper co-operation on the part of the newspaper, make his advertisements and his publiicty so interesting that it will sell more newspapers and so sell more seats.

The morning newspaper is read by the man and woman, boy and girl when they are going to work. That theatre ad or publicity can be made to start its pull right then. Mr. A can be sold strongly enough to invite Miss B to attend the theatre that night with him. Miss B can become so interested in, we'll say Maurice Chevalier in "The Smiling Lieutenant" coming to the Staten Island Paramount she will suggest a show to her boy friend. Mrs. C, sitting at home, will hurry through her household duties in order to be able to see "The Perils of Pauline" at the Mayfair.

The afternoon newspaper starts its pull with the first edition and continues on through until the last extra. It goes into the home and into the hands of many readers when they are still endeavoring to formulate their plans for the evenings. It can have a definite, right now pull.

Teaser Campaigns

So much for the right now pull of theatre advertising and publicity in newspapers. I've said nothing about the advance interest possible to arouse by clever teaser campaigns or publicity breaks planted far enough in advance to arouse interest and create desire. The American public was hungry for Marlene Dietrich in her first American made picture, mainly because of the reams and reams of newspaper publicity they had read about her. She was sold before "Morocco" was released.

No maximum box-office pull can be obtained by the average show in the average town without a good newspaper campaign, in the writer's belief.

Did I hear someone say "Suppose you have no newspaper available, what then?"

Very few towns are so small as to be without, at least a weekly newspaper, and, by the way, don't ever discount the value of a good weekly, as they are read from cover to cover. However, should you have no newspapers, then, you must, of necessity, rely upon your screen, your front and exploitation suitable to your community.

Aside, from the newspaper, the writer would be rather inclined to give the screen preferance over all other media. You are selling to an amusement conscious type when you sell properly from the screen. You are not, however, reaching out and creating new theatre-goers, as you can do with newspapers and good fronts.

Having glanced over this "Additional Epistle to Those Anxious to Sell More Tickets" the writer wonders if he will not be accused of press agenting newspapers. Maybe so, but, at any rate, you've got an elaborated opinion based upon actual experience.

After last week's start, we follow this discussion right up with two more able showmen viewpoints. Jeff Lazarus, publicity director for the new Hughes-Franklin Circuit on the west coast and formerly affiliated with Frank Whitbeck at Fox W-C. Then we also give the floor to Bunny Bryan, publicity director for the Jersey-Publix theatres.

Jeff surprised us by coming back with one of those "short and snappy" articles, while Bryan went to the trouble of setting forth certain examples of what he wanted to get across.

Both of these slants are valuable and should make important contributions to the series as a whole.

Next week we will continue with several more views on the subject.

Jeff Lazarus Is Another To Place Faith in Newspapers!

I have a request from you asking that I put on paper what I think is the best form of theatre advertising, and why. This is not so easy to answer as might appear.

A theatre can advertise in newspapers, over the radio, via billboards, on its screen and on its "front." All of these have their particular purpose and unquestioned circulations. Each one requires its own treatment, and in turn, entails a different cost. The resulting variant of price per prospect makes the value question difficult, both to distinguish and determine . . . Personally, I would try to use them all in any operation I might have.

If, however, by some freak of circumstance, I was forced to select one of them and at the same time sacrifice all others, I believe I would pick newspapers. Newspapers have a maximum circulation at a minimum price; they have the weight of accepted authority behind them; they get into the homes; they await the reader's leisure, unlike the radio which one must catch at its convenience, or not at all; they are the accepted source of information in the sense that the average person, desirous of learning what picture is where, will peruse the drama page of his daily newspaper; and by grouping the general information about all the shows in a given town on that drama page, in the company of interesting copy, photographs and feature columns, they have the acknoweldged Forum on the subject of what's going on in the amusement world.

In the advertising budget of almost all advertisers in this country, newspapers come first. Radio is pressing them hard in some instances and we have all of us occasionally done things on our screens or in show windows of co-operating merchants, with ballyhoos, or elsewhere, which created temporary sensations; but the one best day-in-and-day-out opportunity to send a changing and current message to a cross-section of your public, with a fair expectation of having it seen by a maximum number of people, remains the columns of local newspapers.

There are some newspapers so badly edited, or so poorly circulated that they do not deserve to be included in the above category. Fortunately they are so far in the minority that, in this analysis, we can ignore them.

THANK ORLOVE FOR THIS ONE!

You can work out all the queer twists in the world to get the kids into your theatre, but when it comes to starting the kids, and the whole darn town, too, gabbing about YOUR theatres, then you can strut around with your chest stuck out a mile and crow as long and as loud as you wish. It will be coming to you, and how.

Louis Orlove, energetic manager of the Uptown Theatre in Milwaukee, Wis., pulled one of the real nifties of the year by erecting a shower alongside of his theatre so the kids can come 'round in their bathing suits and cool off.

His theatre could never afford to spend the money for paid advertising that they secured through free publicity by reason of this timely and showmanlike stunt. And the way the whole community has been talking ever since he started the kids' free shower is again worth the weight of a couple a dozen of those youngsters in gold.

We'll tell you more about this latest Orlove idea in the next issue, providing it arrives in time. But take our word for it, it's a corker.

Splendid Work Done By Harry Gammett Boosts His Receipts

The splendid campaigns, one on "Front Page" and one on "Indiscreet," were recently made by Harry Gammett, manager of the Globe Theatre, Bethlehem, Pa., which went a long way toward making the box office of this house hum with activity. Harry does not claim any originality for any of the stunts he employed but we believe the angles by which they were handled prove very interesting to all Club members.

With "Front Page" Gammett made a successful tie-up with his local newspaper and a number of merchants, getting a full co-op page gratis to the theatre. Each merchant gave a limited number of passes to the first purchasers of "Front Page" bargains. In addition, he had the front page of one issue, imprinted in red with "Don't Miss Front Page at the Globe . . ." delivered in all surrounding towns; also, copies of a regular evening edition with the same imprint, were delivered house to house and store to store in the city. Three sandwich men were also sent out, each with one word of the title on the front of sign and catchlines, date of show and name of theatre on rear of board. Advertising was also arranged for tire covers on taxis and private cars. The newspaper generously co-operated with readers and a cut showing how front of New York Rivoli appeared when the picture played that house. A novelty ad, in the form of a sensational front page make-up, was also run in advance of the showing.

On "Indiscreet" Harry secured a window in a leading department store at one of the principal intersections in the city, this store having never subscribed but once before to this type of exploitation. It was a tie-up with photos of gowns worn by Miss Swanson and the paper gave Gammett a fine break by reproducing a photo of the window, together with a story which brought out the fact that the star was making a screen appearance at the Globe. The cut and story ran three columns by 6 inches. Readers will note the attractiveness of the display by the accompanying photo. The photos used in the window were colored ones obtained from the New York United Artists office and he had them mounted in the frames.

We are also reproducing on this page a photo of a stunt which Gammett tells us attracted plenty of attention when he played "Dracula." The figure you see in the photo appeared on Bethlehem streets with green grease paint on his face and green powder over same. His lips were painted red to carry out the vampire theme. From time to time he would spread the wings of the cape and display the lettering. It made them talk, says Harry, and as a result "Dracula" had a very successful opening. Three days preceding the opening of this picture one of the loud-speaker calliopes was employed for another street ballyhoo.

Good work, Harry, and it is the Club's sincere wish that the Summer be as productive of good business for you as has this Spring. Continue to keep us informed about show-selling down your way and give the Club's regards to Frank Mickley when you see him. We know that you are both busy managers but we're going to count on support from you both for future contributions to these columns.

Return Of "Name" Attractions Seen; Some Publicity Tips

The build-up of an orchestra leader and orchestra when billed at the World Theatre, Omaha, Neb., and the attendant sell-out of the attraction, is interesting in view of the fact that there appears to be a return of the "name" movement on at this time. In this instance, credit is bestowed upon Manager William Miskell and District Advertising Manager Irving Waterstreet. It is a splendid example of what advertising and publicity will accomplish in the way of putting over a comparatively unknown personality.

Outside of a few night-owls who sat up late enough to hear Duke Ellington broadcast from the Cotton Club in New York City, practically no one in Omaha ever heard of him. For the first move a publicity tie-up was made with a leading newspaper to sponsor the orchestra's appearance at a Milk and Ice Fund benefit. This netted a total of 1,610 lines and eight-column heads in preferred positions. Other stunts included the analyzation of Ellington's handwriting; the placing of a bet that Ellington would make so much money he couldn't carry it off the stage (the gag being that he was paid with a sack full of pennies) and as a forfeit he played a piano on a flat truck at a busy street intersection; 9 music store tie-ups and a 72 x 33 foot banner, and the advance showing of a talking short made by Ellington.

The above is just a tip-off of what can be done to build up an unknown name and it is the Club's belief that if this return-of-the-name-movement gathers sufficient headway a few of these gags may become useful to its members. For this reason it is set forth at this particular time. The Club would like to hear of more experiences along this line, so shoot in your ideas, boys.

ED. J. CANGLEY Says:

"Have been a member of your 'ROUND TABLE CLUB' practically since its inception, am a constant reader of other managers' ideas, and have derived much pleasure and many workable ideas from same."

Kerasotes Stages Chaplin Ballyhoo That Made Record

At a total cost of but twenty-five dollars Gus Kerasotes, manager of the Senate Theatre, Springfield, Ill., staged a Chaplin ballyhoo on "City Lights" that helped this house hang up an attendance record for the week's run. And while the Club is on this particular subject it wants to mention that credit is also due Dave Jones, the above-named manager's able assistant.

With a local newspaper sponsoring the event Kerasotes put on a Chaplin make-up contest that had the entire downtown section of the city laughing their heads off. On Saturday, at noon time, the kiddie contestants gathered at the newspaper office just before the opening of the theatre. They were then formed for a single file parade and preceded by motorcycle police escort marched through the business district during lunch hour, just when everyone was quitting work for the day. A ballyhoo car was placed between the marchers and the police escort and Gus states the sidewalks were lined with circus day crowds. The parade then marched to the theatre where they were lined up on the stage for judging the best make-up. The prizes were turned over to the newspaper and each day during the week the paper carried generous readers to build up interest in the coming event. In addition to the prizes, all boys who marched received a free ticket to the show. The accompanying photos will give you an idea of the large number of contestants and how the winners looked on the stage.

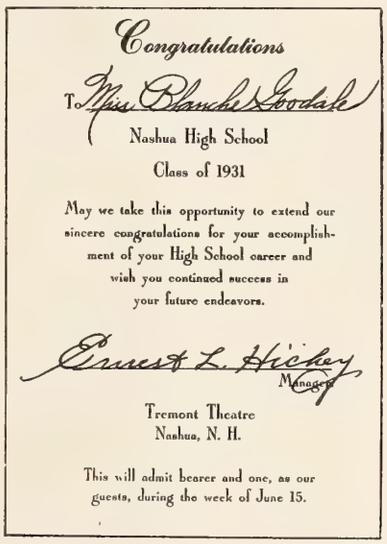
We also want to call attention to the type of newspaper advertising being turned out by Springfield theatres. Note the copy at top of one ad reading "Go to Church This Morning—and Take Your Entire Family. This Is Easter." And in another: "Chicago Is Not the Only City that Knows a Good Picture When It Sees One." The record Chicago gross on "City Lights" is boxed in the upper left of the ad. This is corking copy in both of these ads and the Club takes pleasure in presenting it to its members.

Ballyhooing, according to many uninformed experts, is a dead issue in show-business, yet if those experts were to go through the experience of running a theatre in an average small town or city, they would be surprised to learn how much strength is placed in these novel interest-attracting gags when they are pulled at intervals. It is the constant plugging of time-worn gags that takes the kick out of them.

HICKEY'S GRADUATION CARD!

Ernest L. Hickey, manager of the Mort Shea houses in Nashua, N. H., never yet let an opportunity slip by to capitalize on a timely situation, and this graduation stunt is typical of his usual activities.

Every member of the graduation class at high school received one of these neat invitations and congratulation cards. The general layout, as well as the text, were all befitting of the occasion. Ernest certainly knows how to surround his ideas in the proper dress. The reason we make mention of this is because so many other managers have used ideas along these lines, but, unfortunately, the invitation card was poorly laid out or printed and therefore detracted from the success of the stunt.



Congratulations

May we take this opportunity to extend our sincere congratulations for your accomplishment of your High School career and wish you continued success in your future endeavors.

This will admit bearer and one, as our guests, during the week of June 15.

We have published many forms of cards for graduation purposes and this one should be "clocked" in your ticker file for future reference. Those who make it a point to keep records of this odd slant on showmanship always know where to find an idea when they are in need of one.

Laby Used Crying Towels For Patrons To Plug 'East Lynne'

A couple of weeks ago your chairman wrote a letter of thanks to G. Laby, Washington St. Olympia Theatre, Boston, Mass., acknowledging a new members drive he recently made which netted the Club about twenty new names. But while we were writing him we couldn't very well tell his fellow members that he very effectively used a neat little red-bordered "crying towel" when he played "East Lynne." The towel was enclosed in a transparent paper envelope and the latter carried the message: "Weep With Ann Harding In the Screen's Supreme Success" —with theatre ad at bottom. The Club can put you in touch with the source of this kind of material if you care to know, or drop a line to Laby and he'll tell you.

Pay Day Letter Gag Proves a Good Trade Boost For Alexander

Pay day in department stores and among the several shoe factories in his community was used to good advantage in exploiting "Honor Among Lovers" by L. Alexander, manager of the Rivoli Theatre, Roxbury, Mass.

On the pay day before the play date arrangements were made to hand each employees an envelope containing a copy of the letter we are reproducing. The envelope was addressed in large type "GIRLS," and in smaller italics, "Suppose Your Boss Dictated This Letter to You." Heading the letter is: "And If Your Boss Were Young, Wealthy, and Handsome . . . Would You Believe There's Honor Among Lovers?"

The letter went on to state that the writer was not the marrying kind and that his code was to be true as long as love lasts. It ended with a refusal to marry the girl but intimated willingness to continue the affair even after the girl was married to another.

Alexander also had a cut-out made in the shape of a bottle with a still of Charles Ruggles, calling attention that Charles Ruggles was not interested in Lovers, but in something else. Both went over big, he tells us, and helped put the house over the week he played this picture.

Good work, Alex, and the Club hopes that you will continue to let it know all you are doing in the way of boosting receipts at the Rivoli.

DON'T DELAY TOO LONG!

"In time of peace, prepare for war" someone once chirped, so we'll chirp along and suggest that in slow, summer days, prepare for the busy fall and winter season.

Wouldn't it be a good idea to look the house over during July with a view of possibly improving its appearance when your new season gets under way?

Planning on changes for the front, the marquee, the lighting, the lobby frames, and so on right through from front to back. Why let it go until late August when you may be rushed on preparations for opening the greater movie season through extensive publicity and advertising campaigns.

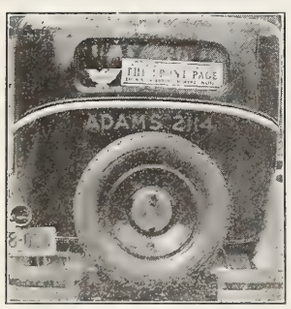
Your janitorial crew can be used to good advantage during the warm weeks to come while the furnace and boilers are off their shoulders. They could be spending some time on cleaning old bulbs, redipping, painting and touching up display frames, etc. Or a complete relamping of those hard-to-reach coves. Lower the hanging fixtures. Waterproofing the marquee roofs, going through the hanging ceiling for a complete clean-up.

The coal storage bins must be put in shape to receive the winter's supply of fuel. Boilers should be cleaned out and conditioned for service before cool weather arrives.

The alert manager NEVER leaves these things go until the last moment, that's why he's alert. Any manager who neglects his house or waits emergencies to prove how fast he can attend to them will never make a district or division managership. To be one of the latter you must be an executive, and executives know how to plan their work in advance and to anticipate trouble before it gets them into a jam.

Taxi Banner Plays Important Part In Caldwell Campaign

We don't know how many taxi-cabs are in his city, but it is a fact that 100 of them recently assisted Wally Caldwell, manager of the Valentine Theatre, in a part of his exploitation campaign on "Front Page." Wally made arrangements with one of the big fleet owners to carry a streamer, such as you will see in the accompany photo, on the rear window of each cab. The sign announced to all Toledo that the picture was playing at the Valentine NOW. The strips remained on the cabs during the entire week's engagement of the picture.



Taxis do circulate, Wally, and circulation of your message was what you wanted, wasn't it? Glad to hear that the gag helped swell attendance at your house.

Taxi tie-ups, like most everything else, cannot be used too often. You know you would soon tire of ham and eggs if you had it fed to you every other day. The same applies to exploitation and tie-ups. Taxis used for this sort of co-operative advertising should not be utilized for any one theatre more than about once in a month. Then it can be emphasized.

Ewing Gains New Patrons Through Use Of Novel Gag

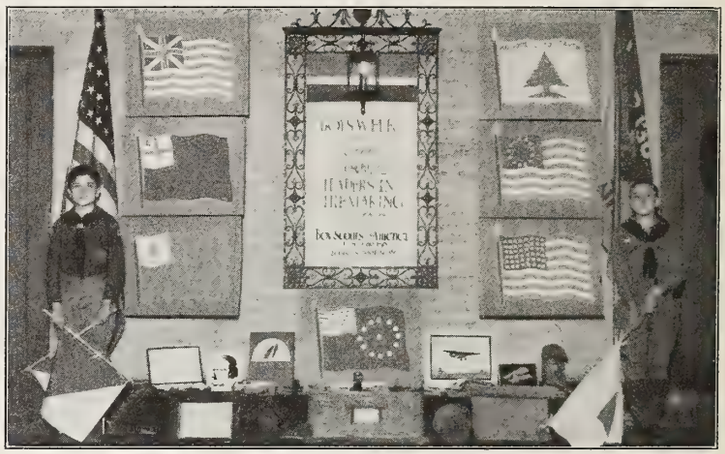
During Anniversary Week the stunt which proved most productive in the way of city-wide publicity for J. C. Ewing, manager of the Colonial, Watertown, S. D., was a story in the paper calling attention to the fact that any citizen who had never seen a talking picture would be admitted that week free of charge. This also applied to the Lyric in Watertown, managed by Percy Long. Both houses entertained over a hundred potential new patrons during the week.

Ewing also used a co-op truck on "It Pays to Advertise" to excellent returns. Copy tie-in was the filling in of slogans used by the merchants whose ads appeared in the truck. Ewing is also using a "railroad" herald for mailing outside the city which is going over well. It is in the form of a railroad ticket and is given circulation within a radius of 35 miles. Courtesy of a free "excursion" ticket is extended through a written notice on back of the herald. Percy Long is responsible for the copy on herald calling attention to "points of interest."

The Club is glad to hear that the above worked out so nicely for you and Long, J. C., and thank you for passing them along. Let us hear from you again in the near future.

Bill Brown Makes Successful Tie-Up With Local Scouts

In conjunction with Boys' Week, William Brown, manager of the Fox-Marboro Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., arranged with a local troop of Boy Scouts for the loan of a complete set of Scout artcraft for a foyer display when he played "Leaders In the Making," a picture of Scout life at camp. Two Boy Scouts were detailed to act as guards and stood on each side of the display during both matinees and evenings.



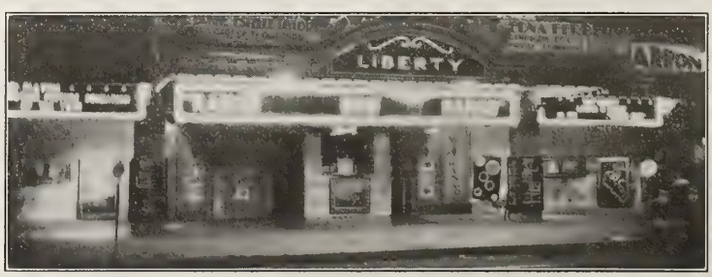
Boys' Week ran from April 25th to May 2nd and we think that this one will serve to file away for future use inasmuch as Brown tells us the display was used the entire week and attracted considerable attention. We are reproducing a photo of the artcraft collection so that you may see how it was arranged. Thanks, Bill, for your contribution.

J. J. Dempsey's Dog Contest Good Stunt On "Devil To Pay"

Much interest was taken in a recent newspaper contest arranged by J. J. Dempsey, manager of the Strand Theatre, Lowell, Mass., which turned out to be a real trade puller for this house. Ronald Colman in "Devil to Pay" was booked for the Strand and Dempsey seized upon the idea of giving away a brother of the wire haired fox terrier owned by the star. Any boy or girl under 16 years of age could compete for the dog by writing a letter to the theatre on "Why I Would Like to Own a Dog," the animal to be awarded to the writer of the best letter. To the writers of the next twenty best letters the Strand stated that it would award two guest tickets good for the following week.

The Club has Dempsey's newspaper clippings at hand and believe us when we tell you that the papers splendidly co-operated in the matter of publicity for the stunt. There are several two-column stories, photos of Colman and his dog and as a wind-up, it published the story and photo of the winner and his dog. The wire hair fox is a popular pet these days and a stunt of this kind is bound to get public interest. And what youngster isn't interested in owning a good dog? Thanks, J. J., for remembering the Club.

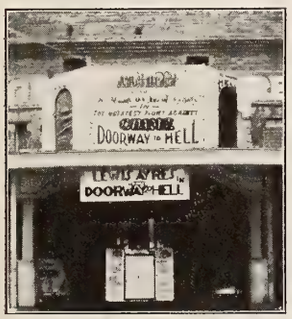
AN ATTRACTIVE FRONT ON "RANGO"!



One of the last of many successful campaigns put over by Ed C. Schmadeka before he left his post as manager of the Liberty Theatre, Lewiston, Idaho, was in connection with the showing of "Rango." Note the effective marquee sign and attractive lobby displays.

Oliver Arranges Atmospheric Set On 'Doorway To Hell'

His conception of what "The Doorway to Hell" looked like aroused a lot of public interest when Charles J. Oliver, manager of the Gem Theatre, Prescott, Ark., played the picture bearing the foregoing title. You will note by the accompanying photo that a stone work-effect set was built on top of the marquee, with doors at both sides. The doorways were covered with red crepe paper and for night display a red light was placed at the back of each entrance. We don't know whether the photo is clear enough for you to see the devils, but there's one at each door, painted red and made from compo-board. The banner-cloth sign reads: "Lew Ayres, Star of 'All Quiet' in the Greatest Fight Against Crime, the 'Doorway to Hell'."



Oliver tells the Club the above worked for him so he's passing it along with a hope that some other member will want to use the gag.

Did you, or did you not send in that membership application, Charles? We cannot seem to locate same in our files. Next time you write, will you let us know? And thanks for the above contribution.

Louis Stein Sends A Dandy Stimulant For Summer Season

Promotion of a club whereby members become entitled to free lessons in dancing or musical instruction is proving a corking means of sustaining attendance through the summer months for Lou Stein, manager of the Ritz Theatre, Newark, N. J.

He has made a tie-up with a local school of recognized importance in the teaching of dancing and music, whereby the kiddies who attend Saturday afternoon performances are entitled to take a free lesson. They are given a card, which bears numbers from 1 to 12. These are punched each time a theatre admission is purchased. Every punch permits the holder to receive a free lesson. The school pays the entire cost of the stunt, including printing cost of cards and leaflets. Incidentally, a statement on the card reads to the effect that members must attend ten out of the twelve Saturday matinees in order to participate in a free matinee. It also states that it is not necessary to own an instrument at time of entry and calls attention to choice of lessons.

The school accepts the tie-up chiefly because it keeps the ball rolling through the dull season, gives it publicity and a future opportunity to obtain permanent paying pupils at the start of the September season. This looks like a corker, Lou, and we are cheerfully passing it along for the benefit of your brother Round Tablers. As you state, the kid actually gets a dollar lesson in lieu of a kiddie admission, and that ought to prove interesting to the musically inclined. And what youngster isn't interested in some kind of musical instrument, or dancing? Don't stop with this one, Lou, but shoot some more along as soon as you can get to it.

A MIDNIGHT PREMIERE IN CLEVELAND

M. A. Malaney, of the Loew-Cleveland forces, engineered the Midnight Premiere of "City Lights" at the Loew-Stillman Theatre. It was attended by an elaborate campaign which included many novel stunts such as the impersonator shown in the above photo.

COUNTRY CLUB TIE-UPS!

Although every other source has been contacted and re-contacted time and again, the golf and country clubs have been a little outside the usual line of theatre exploitation.

Now along comes the golf shorts which opens up this angle to theatre, and as to be expected, they are taking full advantage of the situation. Here it is but a short time since these golf subjects were released and we are swamped with country club-golf tournament tie-ups of all sorts. And the best part of it all, is the fact that they work out well for everyone concerned.

Charlie Carroll's tournament for the Stanley Theatre in Jersey City has gone over with a bang. We told you about the event prior to the actual tournament some time ago. Now we hear from Ralph Cokian, youthful, but dynamic advertising director for the Fourth Avenue Amusement Co. of Indiana, who, with the aid of tear sheets and clippings, proves how effective a similar tournament was for their Indiana Theatre in Marion.

He worked his tournament campaign in conjunction with the Junior Association of Commerce, a live-wire body of business men, and between them they work up sufficient interest to bring every golfer (and near golfer) out on the course for the qualifying round. After turning in their score cards they were made up into foursomes as equally matched as their qualifying round indicated.

This stunt had the entire county talking and proved an exceptionally fine plug for the Bobbie Jones series. As for the free publicity secured through the local papers, a rough estimate from the clipping sent us shows about 1700 lines of reader items pertaining to the tournament. Now "ain't that sumpin'?"

Other theatres showing, or expecting to show, the Jones or other golf series should give this slant plenty of serious thought. It certainly opens up a new avenue of exploitation to the live-wire manager who wants to capitalize on a short subject well worth the effort.

More information and details about this form of tie-up will be made available from week to week as we recount the activities of those showmen who are putting them over successfully. Don't pass up this angle.

Thanks a lot Cokain for passing along the clippings, etc., on your great tournament. If any of the members write direct for further dope, please oblige by helping them out.

Kelly Ballyhoo On "Charley's Aunt" A Great Help, He says

The man dressed up in woman's clothes gag was an excellent helpmate for S. R. O. business on "Charley's Aunt," writes James A. Kelly, manager of the Smoot Theatre, Parkersburg, W. Va. Kelly tells us that he worked this ballyhoo on the Saturday before playing the picture, especial attention being given to all five and ten-cent stores and other busy merchandising centers. It proved a hilarious laugh-getter and James uses the personal pronoun when he says: "I clowned it quite extensively." Now we ask you, Kelly, is the accompanying photo one of yourself? If so, tip off your brother members so they'll know what a good make-up artist you may be when they see another photo which you have in mind to send the Club for its files.

Just as we said a few pages back in the Kerasotes story, this kind of theatre ballyhooing is going strong for many a theatre and will continue to do so as long as the showmen keep on originating new and novel ideas to keep up the patrons' interests in what is going on theatrically in the town.

Small town and city situations cannot be compared to big city conditions. The larger city grows blase, it is true, and street ballyhoos are not taken any too seriously or otherwise. But in the smaller communities, there are few things in the course of a day to attract any too much attention, that is one of the reasons why these laugh-provokers click most of the time and really attract business to the box office. We should hate to see the day when theatre exploitation ends up in lobby displays and programs. It would be like taking the life-blood from the institution of entertainment to deprive it of the many odd twists which come through exploitation and ballyhooing and we feel sure that certain publics would miss the stunts to the same degree that the loss would be felt by the theatre.

AND NOW IT IS — COWS!!!

We've all heard about popularity contests, kiddie contests, dancing contests, singing contests and other varieties of contests, but it remained for Manager L'Esperance of the Fox California Theatre in San Diego, Cal., to put over a cow-milking contest.

Yep! Them's what we said. A cow-milking contest. And with real honest-to-goodness cows, too. Then to make it still more entertaining and novel, L'Esperance restricted the contestants to women only.

A tie-up with a local dairy farm turned the trick and besides the dairy outfit ballyhooed the town and suburbs with a fleet of their trucks led by a big van containing several live cows. Also, a peach of a lobby display in which they faithfully promised "real, live cows" for the contest.

Need we add that they received some great publicity breaks, plus a packed house? You figure it out for yourself.

Archibald Plugged Produce Dealers On "Lemon Of Orange"

In order to build up additional interest in his attraction, "Mr. Lemon of Orange," R. E. Archibald, manager of the Fox Orpheum Theatre in Pocatello, Idaho, made an arrangement through the local produce dealers for an orange-lemon week in which all of the grocers were given a discount on such produce providing they featured this particular week in connection with the showing of the picture at the theatre.

He cemented the tie-up so strongly that it was the topic of conversation throughout the town for not only the run of the picture, but for several weeks after, which constitutes mighty good plugging for any house.

As far as the theatre end was concerned, we show you here the photograph of how he dressed up the front which is quite limited in space and must therefore be arranged to fit the small confines of his entrance. In addition a most attractive display on the inside of the lobby consisting of neatly arranged crepe paper banners, tinsel, the word "Sunkist" on the oranges and a display of the fruit itself.

We get quite a kick out of broadcasting Mr. Archibald's activities because they carry such a decidedly novel slant and this one is no exception.

It might also be well to keep in mind that these produce dealers are just as anxious for a tie-up as the drug store on the corner or the ice cream parlor up the street, but if you pass them by, you are passing by a great bet and you ought to dope out some ways and means of getting them interested in the theatre's activities. In fact, any plans which direct attention to the theatre and its attractions is good merchandising in any man's town.

We'll be telling you more about R. E. Archibald in early issues of the Club pages and we feel certain that he will continue to keep us posted on his fine show-selling.

Foster Remembers Mother's Day And B. O. Reaps Reward

Just to let the Club know that he's taking advantage of every opportunity which presents itself to promote good will and publicity for his house G. H. Foster, manager of the Kenton Theatre, Kenton, Ohio, sends along a clipping from his local newspaper giving an account of a Mothers' Day observance. The account goes on to state that twenty-two mothers, 70 years and over, were guests of Warner Bros. Kenton at the Second Annual Mothers' Day observance. Names of those who attended the showing were published. Good work, G. H., and we note that the paper nicely played up your work on the above. Just another example of free space plus good will, boys, so go to it! Get yours.

Hobby Puts Over A Tough One And Wins Out at B. O.

Booked during Holy Week and offering but little in the way of exploitation values, "The W Plan" was put over the top in corking style by Jack L. Hobby, manager of the RKO Victory Theatre, Providence, R. I., after thoroughly dissecting same for possible angles to sell to his community. The sum total of his efforts will be seen in his statement that despite the off-week, business developed to an extent that was gratifying to all concerned.

The campaign consisted of the following items:

200 one-sheets (illustrated) sniped in prominent windows throughout the city; 10,000 exchange heralds, given careful distribution house-to-house; two large 10 x 20 feet banners, hung from the upright sign in front of the theatre; one 24-sheet head over entrance of theatre at sidewalk; five American Legion Bugle and Drum Corps, appearing and performing on theatre stage (two of them composed entirely of women); newspaper publicity in connection with the appearance of drum corps, and the running of a novelty ad, giving a personal endorsement to the picture.

Otherwise, says Hobby, very little was done; but, from what we learn, plenty to bring a very satisfactory return from this foreign-made picture and this Club member is to be commended for putting it over. Incidentally, Jack, accept the Club congratulations for winning that $50 check and trip to Boston on the "Dirigible" contest, and be sure to keep us posted as to what you are doing over in Providence.

Schlatten's Finger Print Club Boosts Trade For A Serial

The kiddies literally swamped the lobby to join a "Finger Print Club" which was used to boost business for the serial "Finger Prints," writes M. Schlatten, manager of the Majestic Theatre, New York City. And believe it or not, he states, after this manager thought up the idea he saw the same plan outlined in a press book.

At any rate, the idea behind the Club is to promote kiddie attendance on Saturday morning matinees throughout the ten episodes of the picture. A card is issued to each kid and bears a print of the fingers as a supposed means of identification. Schlatten also ran a trailer in connection with the Club idea which stated that all children attending the first nine episodes would be admitted free of charge to the tenth.

Alright, Schlatten, we'll let you and the press book wrestle for honors on this one and will pass the idea along for some other member to use. Press book or otherwise, as long as it got the business it rates space in these columns. Let the Club know what else is doing on show-selling up your way.

COVERED WAGONS IN ALABAMA

When Earle Oscar played the "Big Trail" at the Ritz Theatre, Athens, Ala., a street ballyhoo consisting of a covered wagon, five riders dressed in regulation Western style and a lone dog proved an effective means of arousing public interest.

Hillyer's Campaign Builds Up Theatre Held In Disrepute

Building up patronage of a theatre held in disrepute is a subject which has come in for considerable discussion on these pages, but as it is one which will continue to arise just as long as a situation produces the combination of an incapable manager plus the booking of inferior entertainment, the Club will continue to consider a condition of this sort vital to brother members—for who knows just when the word will come: "You are to be transferred to such and such a house. It's run down and we want you to build it up."

The case we have in mind at this writing is related to the Club by M. N. Hillyer, manager of the Downs Theatre, Downs, Kan., who, seeing the house for the first time took over the entire responsibility of film buying, booking, advertising, exploitation and house management—all in a single day.

It did not take Hillyer long to discover that business was terrible. The house had been brutally run down and townspeople nursed a long-standing attitude that good entertainment simply couldn't be presented in the local theatre. Concrete roads, autos, and better shows were luring them to other theatres as far as twenty miles away. And these houses had superior sound equipment and circuit connections. Moreover, Hillyer found that among his handicaps there existed among a certain element in the community an almost unbelievable attitude of opposition to all motion pictures, a feeling of such force that it presented a real problem. It was a situation which demanded diversified treatment of exploitation ideas in a limited field.

As a part of a campaign to break down opposition to the notion that "no pictures were worth seeing," Hillyer presented "Outward Bound," a picture which members will recall as having a distinct appeal to a critical element. In a generous three-column ad he signed a personal endorsement of the film, outlined the plot and also featured excerpts from reviews of well known first-night critics. Prior to the ad a series of teasers were spotted a week in advance on every page of the local paper. A herald was also treated in the general mood of the campaign. Especial attention was given to personal messages directed toward the so-called "reform" element.

Some of the above may sound trite to some seasoned showmen in the big cities, but the point we stress here is that Downs is a small community—less than 2,000 population—and Hillyer's methods plus the generous space used in newspaper advertising in a community of this size, appear worthy of comment. We are reproducing some of the ads which accompanied his letter. Thanks, M. N., for sending this in. We are sure that the enterprise you are displaying will put you over the top. And let's hear from you some more.

Material continues to reach Club headquarters without proper identification, especially photos and newspaper tear sheets. PLEASE make it a point to write your name and theatre address on such material so as to help us keep it from being lost.

Photos to be returned, must be marked accordingly. They will be mailed back as soon as cuts have been made and the story prepared for publication.

Your co-operation on these matters will be appreciated.

WEATHER NOTE

When the thermom hit 93 on Saturday an enterprising movie house owner on 8th Avenue had a signmaker rush over a sign reading: "It is 40 degrees cooler in here!"

The sign enticed Lou Holtz, who ankled into the theatre only to be struck in the face by a rush of hot wind. On his way out he saw a prostrate man on the floor.

"Who's that guy?" asked Holtzie.

"That," was the reply devastating, "is the theatre owner!"

Yearning For Radio Set Brings 20,000 Ballots To Yurman

A tie-up with a neighborhood home furnishing store, with a modern radio set as the stake, netted an excellent return at the B. O. for Jules Yurman, manager of the Manhattan Theatre, New York City.

The stunt was put under way four weeks prior to making the award and at the time it closed Yurman tells the Club there were 20,000 participants, or, at least, that many ballots to testify to local interest in the possession of the radio. But one condition was imposed—that of attending the theatre on the night award was made. The store donated the set.

Well, Jules, that's a lot of votes, say we. It almost makes us want to get in the radio business. The Club is glad to know that this gag went over so nicely and thanks for passing it along to your associates.

It's a hard proposition to put over exploitation in a city like New York, as any local showman can tell you. That is why we grasp every possible opportunity of passing along the activities of these city managers. Let's hope we get lots more, not only from Yurman, but others as well.

MONDAY and TUESDAY, March 16-17.

OUTWARD BOUND

Heavenly Picture of a Heavenly Hell

TO OUR PATRONS.—

Last fall, I saw "Outward Bound" at the Warner Theatre in New York City. I left the performance conscious of having witnessed the most moving and powerfully significant thing the present generation has brought forth. It stands as a triumph of screen drama.....sincerely and sensitively produced..... a film play above criticism or reproach. It represents a challenge to people of all classes and creeds, for tolerance, sympathy and understanding.

We present "Outward Bound" in Downs in a spirit of keeping faith, and urge every man and woman who believes, or doesn't believe, that the motion picture can achieve true greatness, to see this masterful drama. Its sheer simplicity of production, characterization and story is beyond description.....something to remember for weeks.

M. N. Hillyer, Mgr.

Mordaunt Hall, famous critics of the New York Times:—

"When the picture came to an end, there was a genuine outburst of applause.....It was a memorable evening, a picture that sends one away deeply moved.....One felt that the men and women present were more kindly on leaving the theatre than when they entered."

Solley And Hart Turn Out A Novel Front On "Trader"

It's so easy for the average big theatre to turn out something unusual in an atmospheric front that it is almost monotonous to talk about it any longer—even though we are still anxious to encourage such activity, BUT, when a small theatre can do a job like the one pictured with this story then it IS time to stand up and shout about it.

This "Trader Horn" front was built entirely "home-made" by none other than the theatre's projectionist and manager; unaided or assisted by outside help. Now, ain't that sumpin'? We'll say it is, and then some. The operator, Bill Hart, under the supervision and assistance of Mr. C. M. Solley, the manager, worked in the spare time between and after regular shows to turn out this fine piece of work and they certainly are to be congratulated on the results.

The Rose Theatre is located in Bastrop, La., and is typical of the average run of theatres in that section with the added edge that they are go-getters in exploitation and other activities. There seems to be little or no reason for their patrons to go elsewhere out of town for their entertainment with live-wire methods keeping them—and gladly—right in town to patronize their own theatre.

We are grateful for this opportunity of showing what these boys are doing and hope it sets an example for other showmen in small towns to get out of the rut of "just a picture show" and inject some real showmanship into their methods and theatres.

Midnight Preview Revived In Elyria By Tommy Wear, Jr.

Inauguration of special Midnight Preview showings on Saturday nights is apparently proving a popular innovation at the Capitol Theatre, Elyria, Ohio, a house managed by Tommy Wear, Jr.

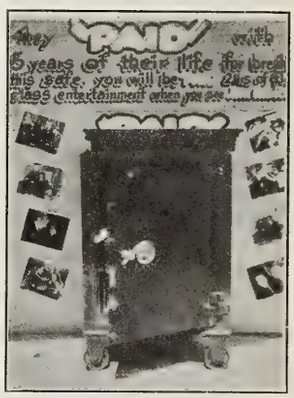
Tommy bought generous space in the local daily to tell Elyrians all about the new schedule and issued a two-color herald on the occasion of the first performance, "Svengali." As a further booster for the midnight show he has adopted a policy of allotting a section of seats for local organizations or any special delegation that happens to be visiting his town during the week-end.

According to Club observations, Midnight shows have been up and down as far as popularity is concerned for several years. At one time they were all the rage, particularly in the smaller cities where there appears to be a certain set who get a great kick out of making plans to stay up for a late show. There have also been cases where they have been tried for a while, then abandoned, only to be revived as a welcome change of amusement diet. As far as pursuing a policy of this kind is concerned, it is obviously a matter which local conditions must decide. We are glad to hear that the revival of the idea is working out nicely for Tommy Wear and hope to hear more of his activities out in Elyria.

Popham Cashes In On House Robbery With Cracked Safe

A robbery which occurred at his theatre and apprehension of the thieves furnished a corking publicity gag on "Paid" when this picture was played by W. A. Popham, manager of the Starland Theatre, Winnipeg, Man., Canada.

Popham took the cracked safe, which bore mute evidence of burglar's handicraft, and placed it well in front of the ticket booth for a lobby flash on the above named picture. Three of the burglars were caught and for catchlines he used: "They PAID with 5 Years of Their Lives for Breaking this Safe. You Will Be Paid With Two Hours of First Class Entertainment When You See Joan Crawford in 'Paid'."



Three sandwich men and the unemployed gag were also used for the above picture, the copy reading, "I Am Being 'PAID' by the Starland Theatre to Help the Unemployed. You Will Be 'PAID' With Two Hours of First Class Entertainment, etc."

Popham sent along evidence of the cracked safe and we are publishing a photo on this page to back him up. Now don't some of you fellows arrange to have your safe cracked just because this manager got a break this way because Popham is not recommending this as a general procedure; and, neither are we. But the two events dovetailed nicely and Popham did cash in on something which can be termed "just one of those things." We are also in receipt of photos which show that a very attractive general front was used but the photography is so faint that it cannot be accurately reproduced. In the meantime, watch your safe, W. A., and don't let burglars steal any of that material you've stored away to send the Club.

Vest Pocket Size Programs Popular In Wellsville, N. Y.

A vest pocket size booklet containing a list of attractions for the month has proved a means of keeping his patrons informed on shows, writes Orestis Macris, assistant manager of the Temple Theatre, Wellsville, N. Y. The booklet measures about 2 x 4 inches and bears the name of the house on the cover. There is enough advertising distributed through its leaves and on back cover to fully cover the cost of printing. Macris tells the Club that they are being carried around and that there is much less 'phoning in to find out what's playing and when.

Give the Club's regards to our old friend, Tom Roberts, Mack, when you see him and continue to keep us posted on Wellsville show business.

Seeking Advancement On The Right Track!

AL STODDARD is the manager of the Rex Theatre in the city of Madisonville, Texas, and his application justifies a statement that this Club is extending greetings to new members from the Southwest every few days. Let us know how show business is going along down your way, Stoddard, and why not send along a photo of yourself so we can show other members a sample of your looks?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

BURT COUGHLAN is in charge of the Peoples Theatre, Maynard, Mass., and upon receipt of his application it is the Club's hope that it will be able to count on hearing all about what this new member is doing to boost business for his house. What was that last good stunt you put over, Coughlan? Let's know next time you write.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

P. A. BOONE is the manager of the Grand and Broadway Theatres, Mount Airy, N. C., and while he admits that he hasn't been in show business many months it is our opinion that he already knows his way around. He states in his letter that he hopes to find time to get photos of lobby displays, tie-ups, etc., being used with different campaigns in order to pass them on to his fellow members. While on the subject of photos, why not also send one of yourself, Boone, so we can properly introduce you?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

OLLIE MENKE is the manager of the Cinderella Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., and is recommended to Club membership by Fred Wehrenberg, well known Round Table Booster in his section of the country. We shall look forward to hearing from this new member on what he's doing to sell shows at his theatre.

FRED NAIFY is in charge of the Senator Theatre, Chico, Calif., and he is another West Coast manager to join the ranks of this Club. As first evidence that this new member is on the job he sends along a two-column head and story describing a theatre-wedding tie-up he recently made in cooperation with his local newspaper. Well, you're in the Army now, Fred, so let some more samples of your work follow right along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

WALLACE NORDBY is the manager of the Ritz and Indiana Theatres, Indiana, Pa., and his name is now listed along with the large number of Club members in his State. Even with two theatres to look after this new member has signified his intention to let his brother members in on some of the stunts he's using to put shows over the top in his town so we will look forward to receiving his first contribution.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ARTHUR C. STOCK is the manager of the New Royal Theatre, North Bay, Ontario, Canada, and the Club herewith extends a welcome to this new member from the Dominion. Right off the reel we can see that he's a live-wire showman, according to a couple of press notices he encloses with his application. Stock recently rushed out to get a close-up shot of a local fire and almost lost his camera in the blaze. We'd like to hear more from this Round Tabler. And why not send along a photo next time you write?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

J. WARREN SEVER is in charge of the Hamptonian Theatre, New Hampton, N. H., and with the receipt of his application the Round Table ranks are again boosted in the New England States. your way, Warren, and you'll have to step along some to keep up the pace they've set in the way of making contributions to these pages. So let's hear what you are doing in the way of showmanship over in your town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

T. H. WHITTEMORE manages the State Theatre, Auburn, Calif., and is right now elected a member of this Club, with the understanding that he will take it upon himself to keep his brother members informed on all constructive show stunts he puts over to boost business at his house. And how about a photo, Whitt, next time you write headquarters?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

FELIX MAYER is in charge of the Fox Supreme Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., and we are glad to welcome this new member from the big borough across the river. Keep up the standard many of your brother members have set, Felix, and let us hear from you regularly on what's doing around Livonia Avenue.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY W. PAUGH is in charge of the Fox Strand and the Fox Webster Theatres in Ottawa, Kansas, and was recently transferred to this city from the Fox Theatre at Baxter Springs. Welcome to the Club, Paugh, and we know that as soon as you get both feet on the ground in your new surroundings you'll find time to give an account of yourself.

KERMIT H. BALLARD manages the Rialto Theatre in the city of Arkansas Pass, and is another new Club member from the Southwest, now that we have his application at hand. How about a photo next time you write, Ballard, and also an account of what you are doing to sell shows down in your section of this country?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

HARRY NAT WITT is the manager of the American Theatre, East Ninety-second street section of Brooklyn, N. Y., and from all indications the Brooklyn membership is not only running neck and neck with New York but shows definite signs of getting out in front. Keep up the good work done in the past by members in your city, Harry, and let us hear from you regularly. And how about a photo of yourself?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ELLIOTT FOREMAN is a member of the publicity department of Loew's, Inc., 1540 Broadway, New York City, and is proposed for Club membership by Wally Allen, well known Round Tabler whose contributions have often appeared on these pages. With Allen sponsoring you, Foreman, we believe that we can look forward to receiving some interesting contributions on your show activities.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

ARTHUR K. DAME is the assistant manager of the Palace Theatre, Penacook, New Hampshire, a house where Manager Irwin holds the helm. Dame states he is new to the show business, having been in it for only six months. It has, however, captured his undivided attention and with Irwin's able instruction he will undoubtedly soon be in charge of a house of his own. We note that he already has an assignment of getting out the weekly heralds, a sample of which he encloses, and we would like to hear more about what's doing at the Palace.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JAKE ROSENTHAL is the owner and manager of the Iowa Theatre, a 1,100 seater in the city of Waterloo, Iowa. Jake forwards his application for membership in the Club, declaring that he stands ready to swap show-selling ideas with his fellow Round Tablers. So let's go, old timer, and we'll be looking for a letter in the near future.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

GEORGE HOSTLER is the assistant manager of the Warner Theatre, Altoona, Penna., and his membership in the Club is sponsored by his manager, Alvin Hostler, whose name many members will recognize. George has been with this house for one and one-half years, starting in the service department, and certainly won't be long before he will be managing a house of his own. Keep the Club posted, G. H., as to what you are doing to help put shows over in your theatre.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

THOMAS CLEARY is the manager of the Princess Theatre, Montreal, Canada, a house belonging to the Consolidated Theatres, Ltd., circuit. Tom, we are happy to add your name to this list of new members and here's hoping that you will prove as steady a contributor as many brother showman up in your city.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

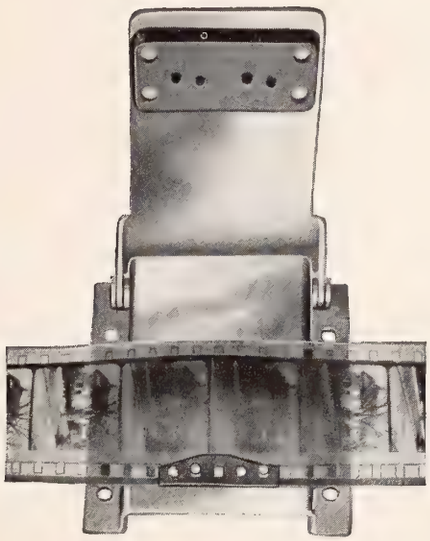
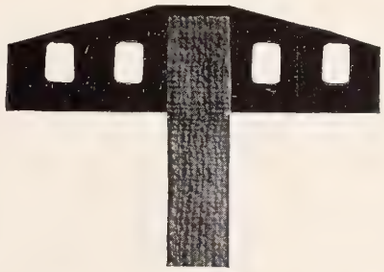
An improved method of blocking out splices in sound film





Now the sound track need no longer be painted out at the joints to silence splice noise. The Eastman Sound Film Patch enables the laboratory worker to block out joints with greater ease, speed, and uniformity.

The patch is made of light-weight, opaque film. For convenience in handling, it is provided with a quickly detachable finger tab. With the aid of this tab, a simple but accurate registration block, and cement, the patch is quickly applied to the film.

Because of its design, the patch is practically inaudible in projection. At the same time it obscures a minimum of the sound record, and assures fast, accurate treatment of all splices. These factors make the patches and the block a valuable feature of Eastman Service.

When Warner Brothers

install Mohawk carpets they are assured of the three factors which every motion-picture theatre must demand of its floor coverings: blending beauty, restful quiet and a construction that will stand up under the daily scuff and grind of thousands of feet.

Two views of the interior of Warner Brothers' Palace Theatre in Orange, New Jersey—showing the Mohawk Scotia carpeting.

A WORD ABOUT MOHAWK SCOTIA CARPET

Mohawk Scotia is a carpet specially designed and woven for theatre service. It is an excellent grade of Velvet which, as veteran carpet men well know, is a weave exceptionally strong and long-wearing. Soft and pleasing under foot, Scotia is offered in more than 20 figured patterns and in a wide range of plain tones. It lends itself ideally to special designing.

YOU'RE MORE THAN PAYING for CORRECT ACOUSTICS

WHY NOT HAVE IT?

THOSE empty seats—in your theatre, are they caused by poor hearing conditions? Empty seats cost money and the money you are losing would soon pay for the best acoustical correction.

Treating your theatre with Insulite Acoustile is not expensive nor is it a difficult or complicated task. Costly remodeling and closing the house for an extended period are unnecessary, as the tile-like units of Acoustile are easily, quickly, and permanently applied directly to the existing surface in new or old buildings.

Insulite Acoustile is scientifically designed to meet the requirements of theatre acoustical correction. Acoustile is a superior material for this purpose because it has a more uniform sound absorption efficiency throughout the entire frequency range than any other material. In the Acoustile treated theatre, the true tones of both voice and music carry to every part of the house without distortion—echoes, reverberations, and dead spots are eliminated.

If you have an acoustical problem in your theatre, let us send you a copy of our new booklet, "Facts You Should Know About Acoustics". The data contained in this booklet will convince you that the use of Acoustile is the efficient and economical method of treating the theatre showing sound pictures. There is no charge for this booklet and you are under no obligation.

USE THIS SERVICE

If you have an acoustical problem in your theatre, let the Insulite Engineering Department assist you. These experts on Acoustics will gladly analyze your trouble without cost to you. You may be sure their recommendations will be the most practical and economical method of securing the results you desire.

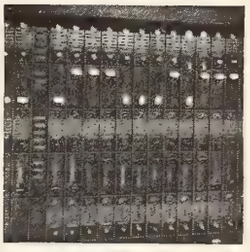
"It takes good Dimmer Plates to give the Stage Director the effects he wants" says Harry Peters, famous for his stage lighting work at the Paramount, New York

"NOW that lights are being used throughout the performance in so many theaters, it takes good dimmer plates to stand up and give the stage director the effects he wants," says Mr. Harry Peters, Chief Electrician in charge of stage lighting at the Paramount Theater. "Unless you have exceptionally good dimmer plates in the dimmerboard there is danger of spotty lighting, over-heating and burn-outs.

"Because dimmer plates are so vital to the smooth operation of my lighting system I check up on the plates I install. Only the best plates can stand up under service and take an occasional overload and come up cool and smooth as velvet."

These are the reasons why C-H "Simplicity" Dimmers have been preferred by showmen for 30 years! Cool operation—freedom from burn-outs! The heat absorbing qualities of the resistance material in a C-H Dimmer keep it cool and long-lived. Double the usual number of contacts make your dimmerboard more compact, more easily adjusted to your changing requirements.

Read the stage history of C-H Dimmer Plates in "Illumination Control for the Modern Theater." Your copy of this book is free. CUTLER-HAMMER, Inc., Pioneer Manufacturers of Electric Control Apparatus, 1254 St. Paul Avenue, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.



C-H "Simplicity" Dimmer Plates are supplied by leading dimmerboard manufacturers with the board they install. Here is shown (1) the front of a typical dimmerboard, (2) the rear of the dimmerboard with the compactly mounted C-H Dimmer Plate and (3) the complete C-H "Simplicity" Dimmer Plate with the direct rack and pinion drive which prevents play or "back-lash." Insure velvet-smooth lighting in your theater by specifying "C-H" Dimmers.

. . . and wear

. . . that's why leading THEATRES choose BIGELOW-SANFORD

Carpets are an important "part of the picture" in decorating your theatre. Hundreds of theatre owners have found it pays to buy Bigelow-Sanfords because their beauty lives as long as the fabric.

Colors and shades of extraordinary brilliance and permanence are assured by the Bigelow-Sanford dyeing processes — the last word in the dye-makers art.

And that soft, luxurious feeling under-foot promises better acoustics too — for thick carpets naturally help to deaden echoes.

Bigelow-Sanford style experts are always ready to create special patterns to meet your decorative scheme. Vast mill resources insure prompt delivery. A wide range of fabrics enables you to get exactly the right carpet at the price you want to pay.

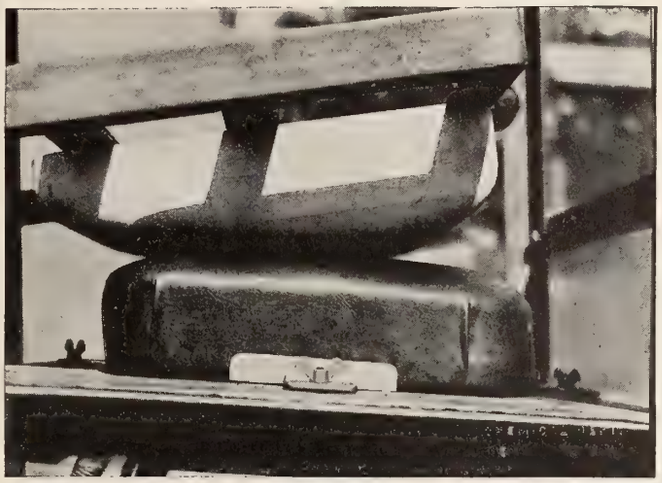
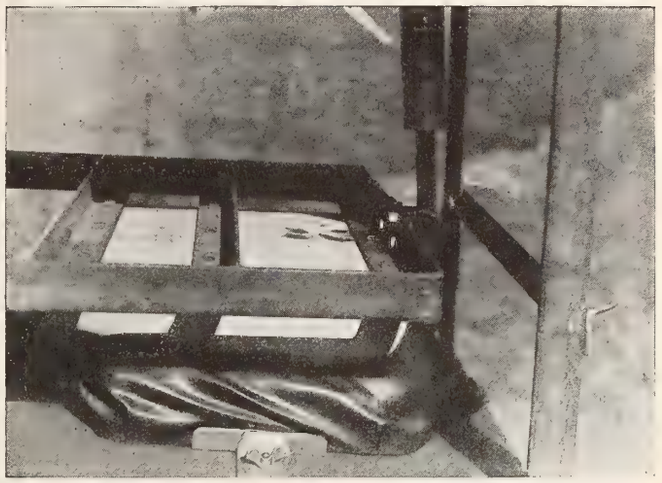
Here's The Proof



Here's the torture chamber ! This special flexing machine was developed by DuPont Company and Heywood-Wakefield to test out the wearing qualities of the new fabrikoid used on H-W chairs. It creates a "bellows action" similar to that caused by patrons in sitting and arising from chairs. The seats tested were kept under a constant pressure of 200 lbs.!



Crushed 1,000,000 Times ! The seat in the picture is upholstered in the new fabrikoid used on Heywood-Wakefield theatre chairs only. It was crushed, squashed, twisted, and distorted (as shown above) more than 1,000,000 times, yet it did not crack, chip, peel, or break. Seats upholstered in other materials of this type were unable to withstand one-sixth this amount of crushing!

Note the terrific abuse handed out by the machine pictured above. It demonstrates how thoroughly every material which enters the making of H-W chairs is tested. NOW—theatre men are offered a new upholstery material on Heywood-Wakefield chairs. It is a new, high quality DuPont fabrikoid which will outwear all ordinary materials from 4 to 6 times. The new fabrikoid has a clean, dry-feeling, sanitary surface; it may be washed with soap and water; and it has better acoustical properties than any other type.

More than 1,000,000 Crushings — yet it will not crack or chip

The special machine pictured above crushed and distorted seats in this new material more than a million times per test, yet it did not crack or chip. Ask your nearest Heywood-Wakefield Sales Office about the new, long-wearing fabrikoid. Remember —it is available this year on Heywood-Wakefield theatre chairs ONLY.

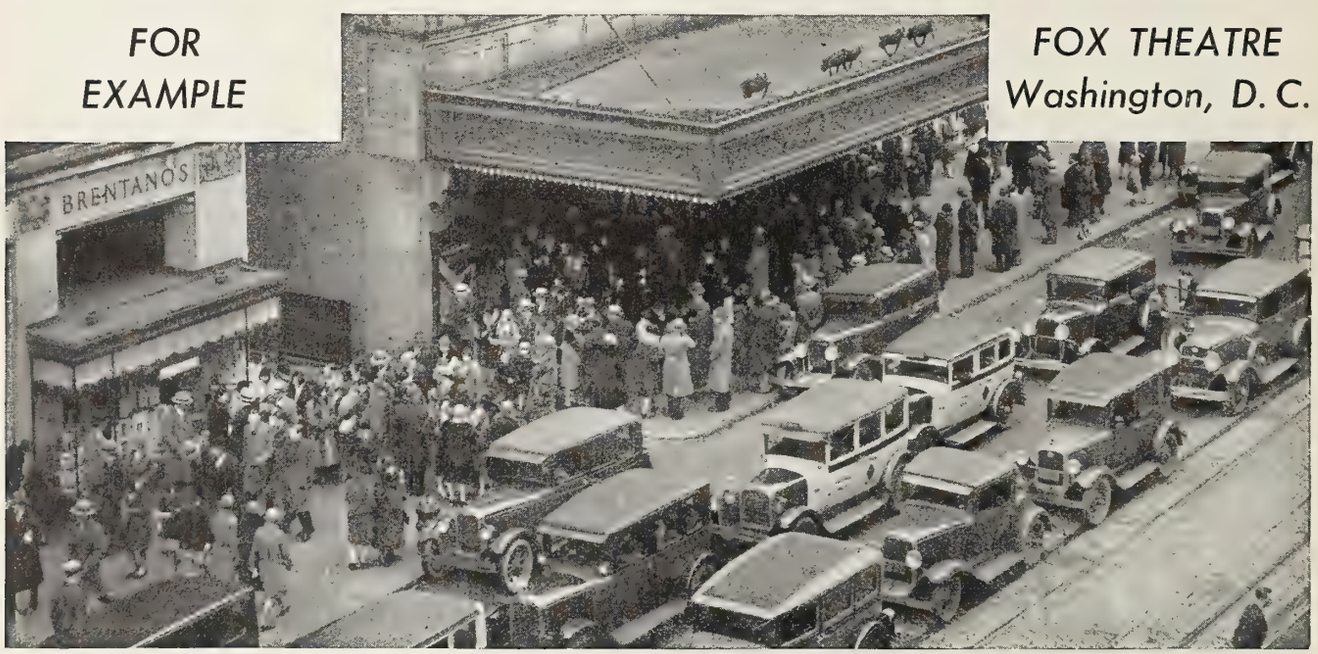
IT MAY BE ONLY COINCIDENCE—but many of the country's most successful theatres use Alexander Smith Crestwood Carpet

FOR EXAMPLE

FOX THEATRE
Washington, D. C.



Before you carpet your theatre make this test: Compare Alexander Smith Crestwood Carpet with any other carpet at anywhere near its price. Compare the wool from which it is made; the depth of pile, density of weave; richness of colorings; acoustical properties; and attractiveness of patterns. When you have made this comparison decide for yourself whether it is coincidence that so many of the country's most successful theatres use Crestwood Carpet or whether it is, as we believe, because Crestwood offers you more for your money than any other carpet made. ALEXANDER SMITH CRESTWOOD CARPET

THE LARGEST SELLING GRADE OF CARPET IN THE WORLD

¶ Perhaps the most widely discussed paper read before the 1931 Spring convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was that by Architect Ben Schlanger of New York on his proposal to reverse the incline of the orchestra floor so that instead of walking down toward the stage, patrons would be walking up toward it. Rather a novel experience, after these many, many years of accepting the slope toward the stage as the established one. The paper was received with much acclaim and some dismay. The significant thing is that it was received at all, since the acutely interested attitude of the S. M. P. E. indicates that it is temperamentally equipped to sit in with the architect in at last getting at the motion picture theatre, to find out how it can be divorced from its old-fashioned traditions and revalued anew in accordance with the newness and distinction of the entertainment form to which it is devoted. As a matter of fact, the reversed slope is not without actual existence, its application in a Paris theatre, described in a recent issue of BETTER THEATRES, having been one of the most interesting developments of the past six months in theatre architecture. However, the history of Mr. Schlanger's idea takes one back quite a long time prior to the Paris innovation, and so far as we know, Mr. Schlanger has contributed a truly original idea to architectural form. It seems also that he has also gone more deeply than the other effort into the scientific readjustment of sight lines and seat installation. It is even beyond these considerations that the discussion of the Schlanger plan (Reversing the Slope of the Main Floor) endeavors to take us, for upon examination, the proposal seems to have great potential effect on many phases of the theatre. The spring meeting of the S. M. P. E., was by the way, the first time an architect had been invited to read a paper before it upon some scientific development in theatre architecture, and following that meeting, the society formally arranged for a program of constructive cooperation with the American Institute of Architects, a definite sign that the motion picture theatre has just begun its most important period of development.

¶ Among the theatres described in this issue, two naturally join each other through their contrasts as much as through their likenesses. They are the Warner theatre in San Pedro, and the Arlington, a Fox house, in Santa Barbara—both Spanish, but oh, how differently! The one is as Spanish as the elements of modern design could make it, the other as Spanish as Spain itself could make it. The one the result of straight adaptation that brings up the old "period question" again. The other the result of an attempt to assimilate the decorative values of period styles (so enthusiastically adopted by the theatre!) into the modern spirit. Two distinctive methods, distinguishingly employed.

¶ The systematized manner of seating patrons evolved at the Fox Strand in Milwaukee, analyzed in Seating Patrons According to Sections, has been in operation there for about three months, long enough to allow some appraisal of its value to other theatres. The verdict of the Strand management is that at least so far the system has realized its purpose, which is to eliminate confusion and interference, and also to get the most from available seats during peak attendance. J. E. Taugher, who discusses it, is himself an observer of theatrical affairs in Milwaukee, and a writer on them for the trade and other publications.

¶ While continuing the series, What the Manager Should Know About Sound, this issue inaugurates another series of practical articles on sound (The Prevention of Interfering Noises). System and other noises have offered new problems to the sound engineer since the establishment in the studios of "silent recording," and the three articles are aimed at helping each theatre's projection staff and manager to help themselves in getting the most benefit from this advance in talking picture technique. The author, P. T. Sheridan, is equipment manager of Electrical Research Products (Western Electric).

¶ W. H. Mooring (Two New British Theatres) is the editor of The Bioscope, leading British film trade journal, and also representative of the QUIGLEY PULICATIONS in England. . . . Leo T. Parker (The Law of Contracts and Copyright) is a Cincinnati attorney who contributes regularly to BETTER THEATRES on legal developments of special interest to the motion picture theatre field.

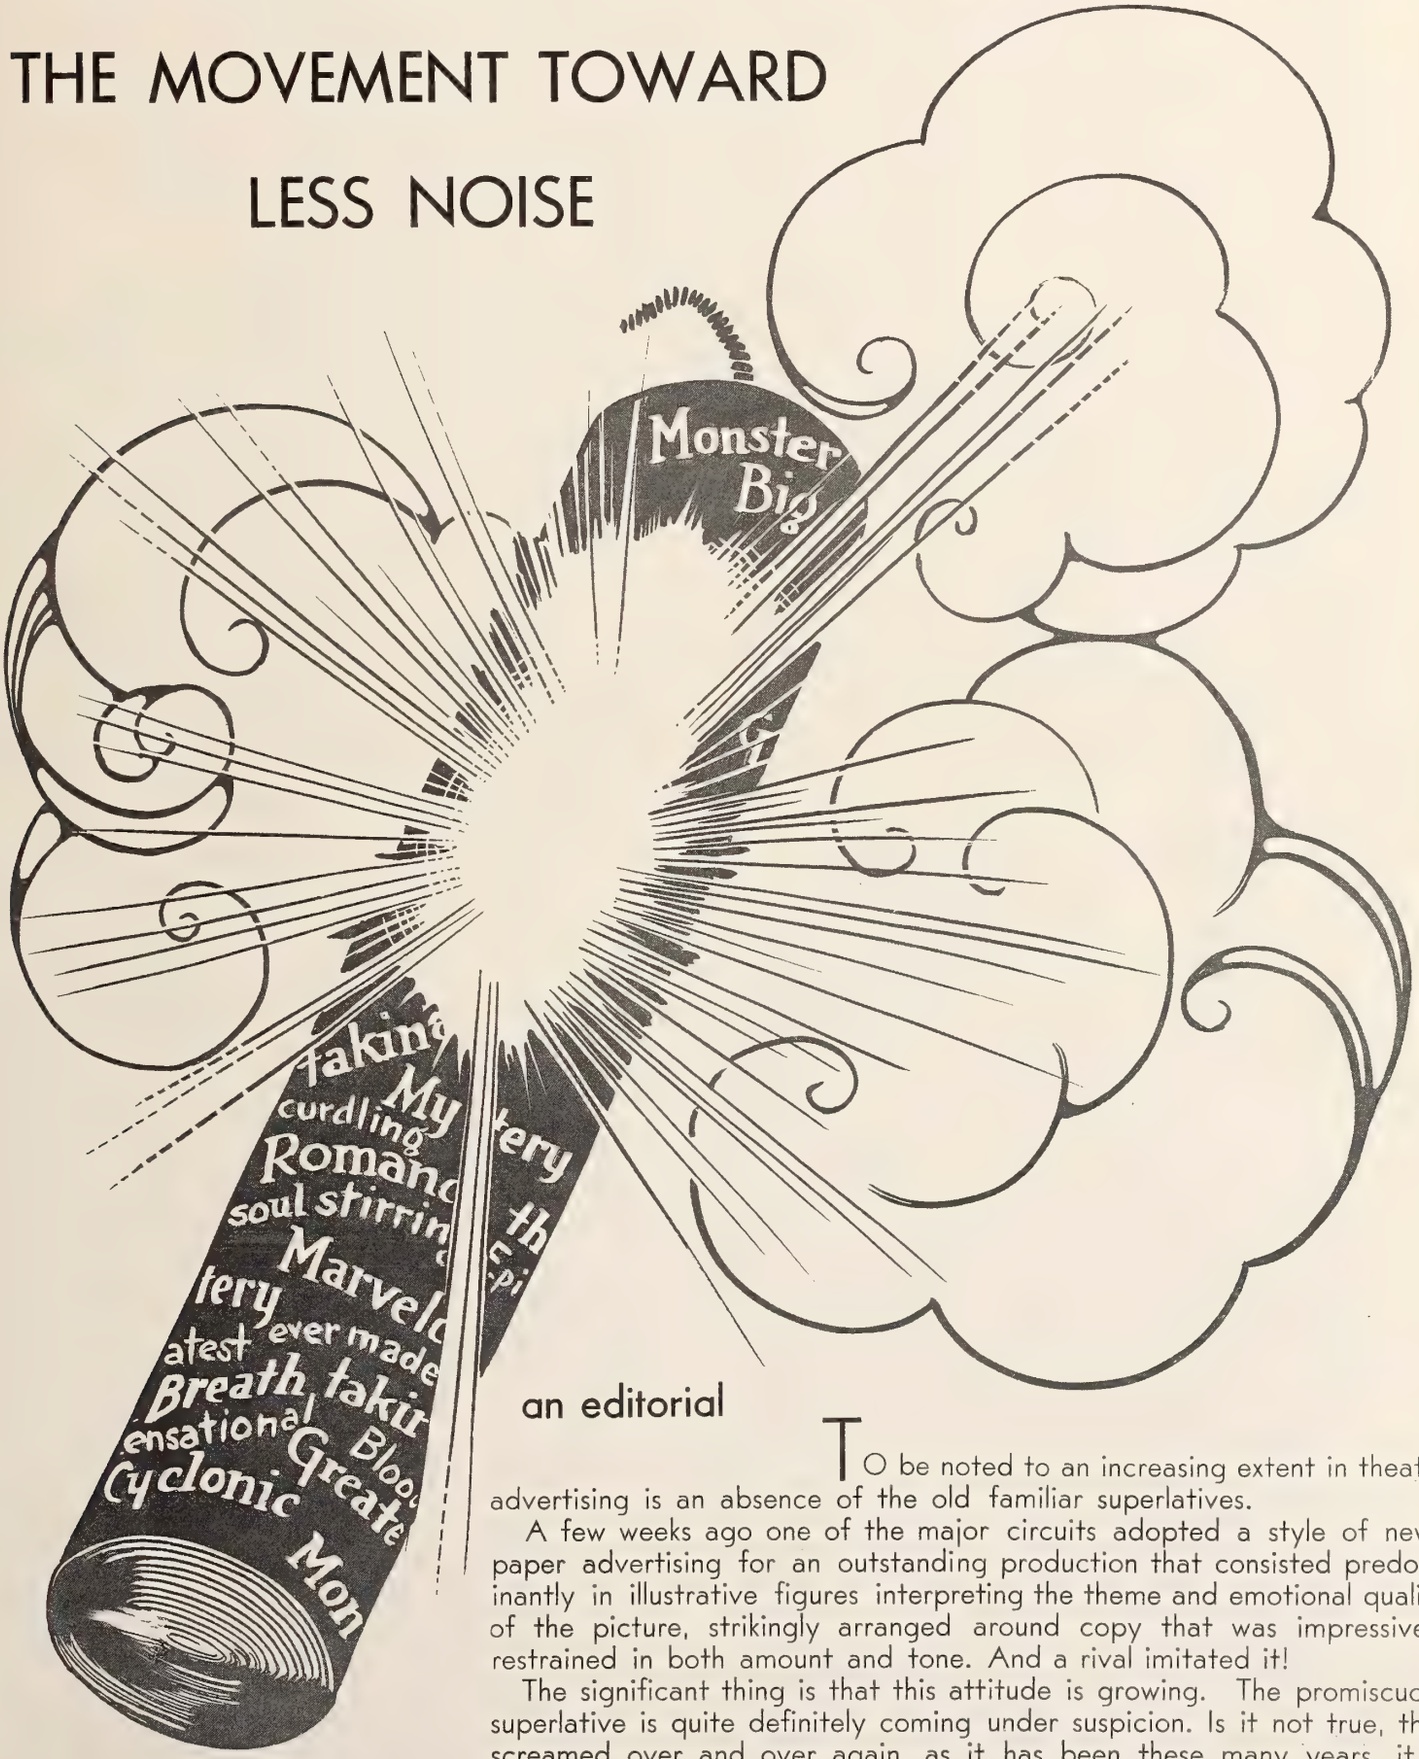
THE MOVEMENT TOWARD LESS NOISE



an editorial

TO be noted to an increasing extent in theatre advertising is an absence of the old familiar superlatives.

A few weeks ago one of the major circuits adopted a style of newspaper advertising for an outstanding production that consisted predominantly in illustrative figures interpreting the theme and emotional quality of the picture, strikingly arranged around copy that was impressively restrained in both amount and tone. And a rival imitated it!

The significant thing is that this attitude is growing. The promiscuous superlative is quite definitely coming under suspicion. Is it not true, that screamed over and over again, as it has been these many years, it is today so often mere noise? A new picture. But the same old shouting. This trend toward more originality and sincerity, and less noise, may be what the box office needs.

REVERSING THE SLOPE OF THE MAIN FLOOR

an examination of the Schlanger plan

By GEORGE SCHUTZ

A CONTRIBUTION to motion picture theatre design that is so basic as the "Schlanger plan" to make the main floor slope toward the rear of the auditorium, instead of toward the stage, requires the attitude of one sincerely interested in the improvement of theatres for motion picture exhibition and willing to give patient consideration to anything that is brought forward for the purpose.

The idea was presented for the first time formally by Ben Schlanger, New York architect who conceived it, before the last convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, held in Los Angeles in May. It calls for a complete reversal of the slope of the main floor and an attendant revaluation of all sight lines, those of the balcony as well as of the orchestra level. (See diagram and explanation.) But although the plan itself is confined to this essential purpose, reflection upon its possibilities lead one into many phases of the auditorium, both functional, aesthetic and fiscal.

An interesting topic of discussion is always "how to increase box office receipts." Of all the attempts that have been made to this end, one means that has not been exploited to the full extent of its possibilities is that of the comfort of the patron. The cathedral, palace and outdoor garden type of motion picture theatres has lost a great deal of its effect on the theatre going public, and showmen speculate on what will be the next novelty that will encourage theatre attendance. But must it be mere novelty? The motion picture industry, like many other lines of endeavor, is destined to move ahead with a surer and more basic reason for each step that is taken. Comfort for the patron is a "box office attraction" that does not lose its effect, because it is not a novelty. It is an absolute necessity.

Ordinarily, comfort of the patron is interpreted by most of us as a well upholstered seat, comfortable lounges and the like. Now we have an entirely new meaning to attach to a phrase so often used. This time it involves a science of making the patron extremely comfortable, not while resting in a lounge room for a few minutes, but for the duration of two hours, the time needed to view an entire screen performance. In addition to answering this consideration of comfort, the Schlanger plan makes it possible to reach any seat in an auditorium with a minimum of walking and stair climbing. There is no doubt that these considerations just mentioned are not only directly beneficial to the patron, but that they are a distinct improvement from the standpoint of simpler seating control achieved by using one admission price throughout the entire theatre.

One of the aims of this new type of motion picture theatre design is to do away with the idea that a certain group of seats in a theatre are better than the rest of the seats, thereby demanding higher admission prices for one seat than for another. It calls for all seats to have practically the same accessibility and comfortable view of the screen. It would be a decided advantage to break down the idea of the balcony being less desirable than the main floor.

IT IS hardly conceivable that theatres built for motion picture entertainment will continue to be built like our present theatres. Originally they were never meant for screen performances, and as a result of using an old form that was really designed for the actual performer, the patron of the screen theatre has to sit with much bodily discomfort, and in many cases, with a distorted view of the screen.

The reversed orchestra floor type of theatre has been designed to correct these faults and to accommodate properly the enlarged screen. Although these faults are prominent in our present type of theatre using the small screen, the introduction of the enlarged screen would greatly amplify them. This really is the first attempt that has been made to consider seriously applied optical principles in theatre design, fitting the theatre around these principles instead of designing the theatre and inserting the optical factors afterwards. Recognizing the fact that the eye can comfortably see only within certain angles, both horizontally and vertically, it follows naturally that if the eye is not within comfortable range of that which it is viewing, an adjustment must take place. Instead of moving the eye itself, which would cause an unbearable strain, the spectator distorts a part or all of his entire body in order to see the entire screen. It is Schlanger's theory that this is caused by the improper location of seats and the lack of a method of tilting the backs of the seats, in accordance with the position of the seats in relation to the screen. In the present type of theatre, the spectator sitting in the orchestra has to raise his head up, causing a strain in the back of the neck, while if sitting in the balcony, it is necessary to pitch his body forward and look down. These uncomfortable positions are more uncomfortable when he has sat through a two-hour performance.

The reversed orchestra floor slope and the modified balcony pitch correct these faults by arranging the seats and adjusting their backs so that each seat is within comfortable view of the screen, permitting comfortable posture.

It is possible to demonstrate the position of the body in the various parts of both the reversed floor and present type of theatre, and also how the applied principles of optics affect the design. A consideration worthy of special notice is the need of a balcony in the planning of a theatre to accomodate the enlarged screen. As the screen becomes larger, more space is needed between the screen and the first row of seats. Therefore the remaining space must be used to the greatest advantage possible. It becomes necessary to use a balcony for two reasons: First, because of the position it holds in the most desirable area of seating, as described in the accompanying diagram, and secondly because of the economical utilization of space, which is most necessary because of the distance needed between the screen and the first row of seats. It is therefore inadvisable to use a one-floor, or stadium type of plan when a maximum screen size is desirable, because either would require too much ground area, and the seats in the rear of the auditorium would be out of range of co-ordination of vision and hearing.

Although the problems of good acoustics in theatre design seem to be of utmost importance at the present time, they are no more important than establishing good vision lines. As a matter of fact it is possible to correct an acoustical condition after a theatre is built, yet the disposition of the slope of the orchestra floor and the pitch of the balcony is practically unchangeable once the structure is completed. While a great many shapes of structures simple in form, and a variety of building materials for various wall treatments may be found acoustically suitable, there is a limit as to what forms must be resorted to in the seating arrangement to permit good vision and comfort. There is, of course, nothing to prevent shaping the side walls and ceiling, in connection with the reversed floor slope, so that the completed form is acoustically good. Certainly the elimination of the excess height of the auditorium in the present type of theatre, caused by the steep pitch of the balcony and the projection room over it, is desirable. These high portions are of no real practical or aesthetic value and are usually the cause of all kinds of sound pockets.

The above diagram shows a screen 22 feet in height. The line A-A, which is drawn at a level one half the height of the screen, indicates where the eye is chiefly focused. If that point on the screen is not within the direct range of the eye of the spectator sitting in an absolutely natural position, an adjustment takes place in the posture of the spectator. In the present type of theatre note that the angle, which is 90°, is formed by the sight line to point A-A, so that the back of the spectator is adjusted to ease the eye strain, which in most cases causes the spectator to lean forward in the balcony, or to slump down in his seat in the orchestra. Note that these 90° angles formed in the same manner on the reversed floor and new balcony pitch are so developed as to allow not only for constant support of the back of the spectator, but also eliminate the need of adjusting any part of the body to relieve eye strain. Area A is the most desirable area. Note that the reversed floor type of theatre causes more seats to come within that area and the next best areas. Note that the areas close to Line A-A and directly beneath it are more desirable because it is more natural to sit back and look up than it is to lean forward and look down.

IT IS interesting to note how the Schlanger attack of the problems of vision and good posture effect other things. The angle of projection is much decreased, eliminating the problem of distortion. This new type of design proves most economical to build because of the ability to keep the balcony low also and of a slight pitch, which in turn permits a lower projection room and thus requires a minimum of structure height and area. This means that there could be more desireable seats per cubic foot of building than is now possible.

The reduction in height naturally means less side wall treatment for the interior finish effect. Some of the theatre architects are finally insisting on a simpler, less ornamental theatre. Now, it would not be an easy matter to strip our present theatre of all of its ornamentation. It has a form that is too basically unstudied and awkward in appearance. All the modernistic ornament that can be created would not give a real change from what we have now. But a form that deals with the more physical characteristics of an auditorium serves as an inspiration for a better interior form that in its shape and outline would be more pleasing.

To consider this new type of theatre design a radical departure from that which is in use now is, I believe, not only to a certain extent incorrect, but is also somewhat misleading. The main elements of the structure are retained unchanged in their appearance. They are modified as a refinement brought about by the recognition of applied optical principles.

The design upon careful study shows that the fixed proscenium arch common with the present type of theatre can be best eliminated by designing the entire interior to blend directly towards the screen. The enlarged screen affects the scale and interior treatment of the theatre. Whereas the small screen is practically lost and is a separated part of the theatre now, the large screen is an integral part that now determines the scale of the treatment.

TWO LIKELY effects of any application of the Schlanger plan cannot be overlooked. One would be the restriction of the width of the auditorium close to the limitations of the angle of good vision, a natural restriction which, however, has been extensively ignored in the interests of a maximum number of seats per area, so that in some theatres as high as 25% of the seats are undesirable as points from which to view the flat image of the screen. The other would be a substantial reduction of the angle of projection, which even at this late day in motion picture science is a great bugaboo and frequently a blight upon the performance.

That the reversal of the main floor and the consequent changes in form generally proceeding from it, would have considerable effect upon the decorative treatment, there seems no doubt. This would come not only from the complete reconsideration of the auditorium design that the plan urges, but also from the physical changes necessary themselves. The forward section of the auditorium would at once lose most of its value as a display space for gardens, turrets, balconies and what-have-you by way of decoration. There would also be less need for height, due to a lowering of the balcony. The general result would be less space in which to spread out with grandiose wastefulness the exotic ornamentation which has come to make the theatre itself a competitor with the screen for attention. Although these physical factors forcefully apply, nevertheless an important revaluation of the aesthetic phases of design would quite probably be a result of the new attention to the function of the theatre, rather than its mere appearance.

These, then, are some of the phases of theatre design that reversal of the slope of the main floor are likely to affect. Whether the changes that the plan in some ways would demand, and in others, strongly encourage, are desirable, is a matter only imaginative and technical deliberation can decide. The important thing is to deliberate strictly from the point of view that the motion picture itself is a radical departure from the world's previous art-forms, and that it is time we determined just to what extent it imposes its radical differences upon the theatre that it has not created but merely inherited.

THE WARNER IN SAN PEDRO

Another addition to the Warner Brothers circuit erected at a cost of $500,000 in that chain's current construction program, at San Pedro, Los Angeles' Harbor district

THE WARNER theatre in San Pedro, Cal., a city practically created out of Los Angeles' development of its own Pacific harbor, represents, besides a really pretentious addition to the expanding Warner Brothers circuit, another expression of that new school of theatre architecture which, while still accepting the theatricalism of the period design, is attempting to reinterpret it in modern lines and materials.

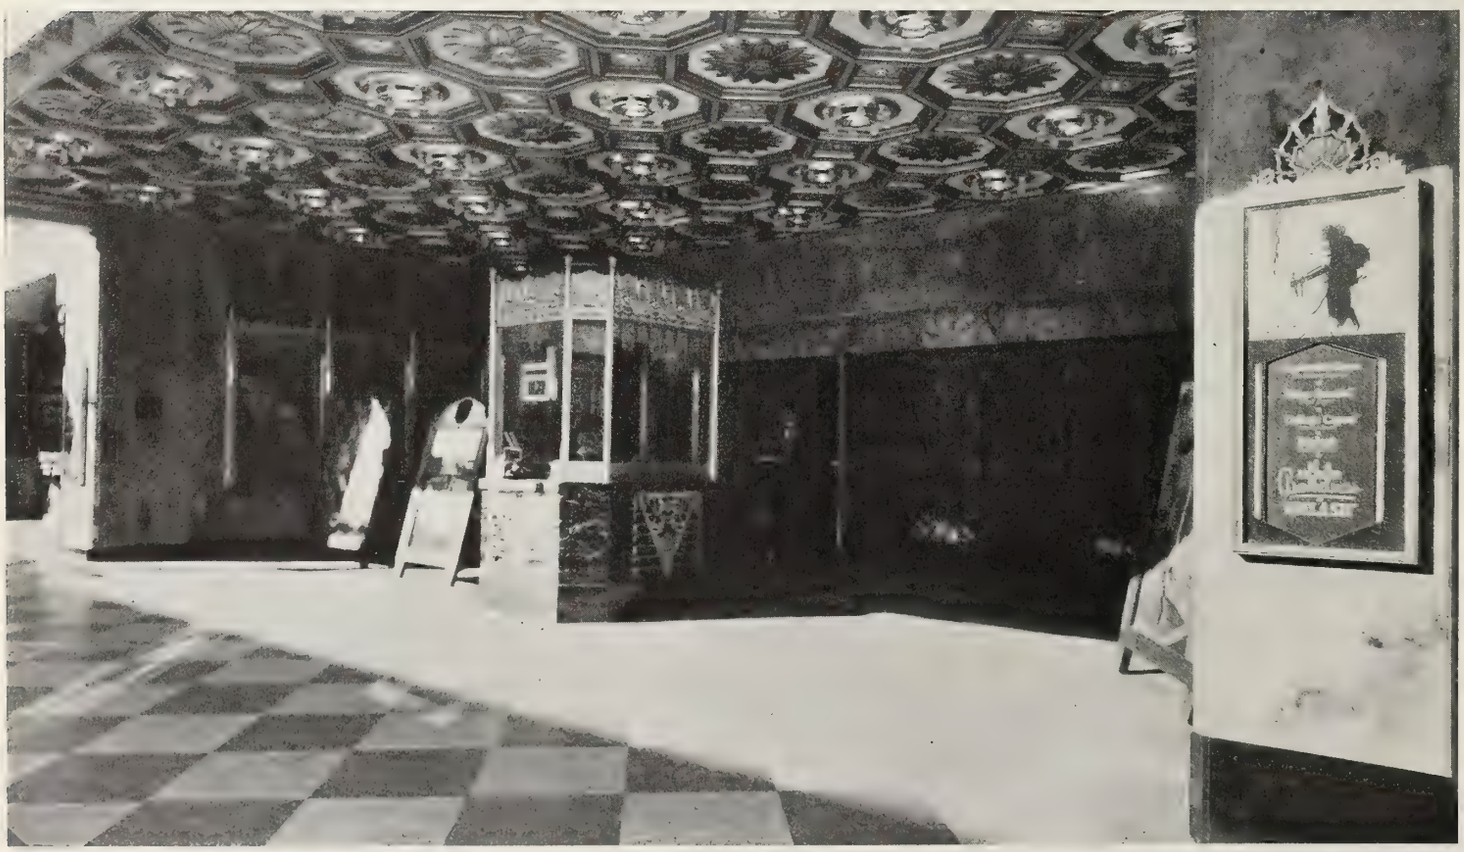
The Warner in San Pedro is Old Mediterranean in mood, but this spirit comes to life in metal and glass and modern building compositions wrought into a pattern that is interpretative of Italy's sunny gayety, rather than imitative of Italy's own architecture. As such, this Warner house is typical of the later work of its creator, B. Marcus Priteca, Los Angeles architect.

The exterior presents the only treatment that is at all directly representative of this Mediterranean influence, and of course its squareness, its plain surfaces embellished but slightly with scrolls pressed into the stucco finish, its brightly striped awnings colorful against the whiteness of the structure, has an appropriateness in Southern California that is contemporary as well as historical.

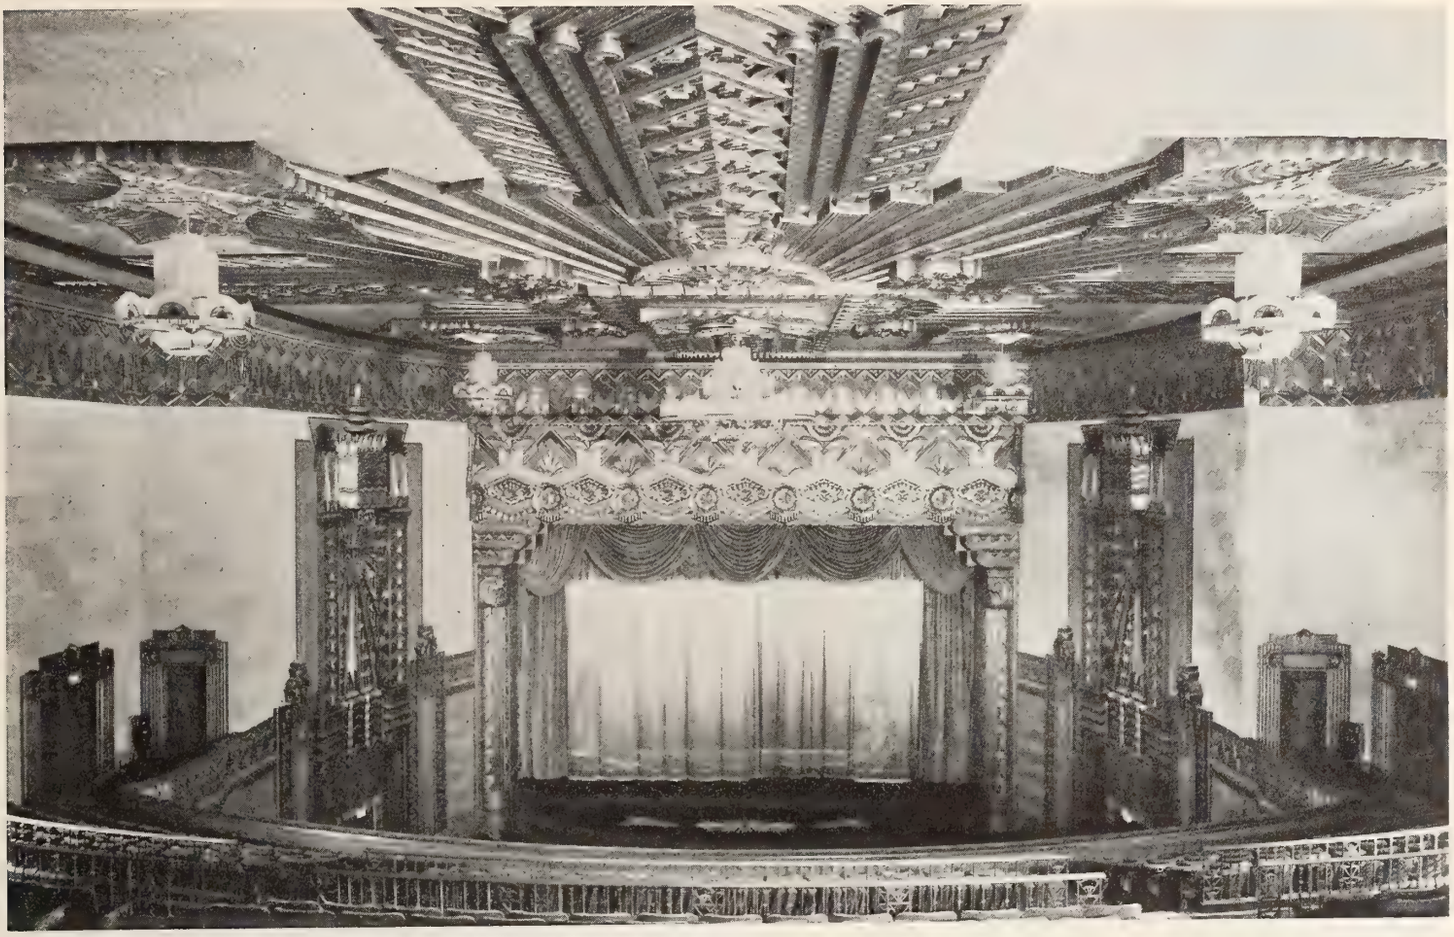
The vestibule is trimmed in silver and other metallic effects, while the entrance doors, of mahogany done in many panels, is decoratively treated with gold leaf. The ceiling is octagonally coffered and studded with myriad lights.

The lobby is beamed, each beam carrying in relief a plastic decorative treatment of individual allegorical theme, the whole depicting the advance of theatre arts from the beginning to the present. A double grand staircase leads from the lobby to the mezzanine promenade and balcony and also to the main lounge.

THE AUDITORIUM is dominated by an architectural colonnade representing ancient stone. The material used is sound-absorbing. This colonnade or arcade almost encompasses this chamber of 2,000 seats located on two levels. Surmounting this is a cornice and ceiling of metallic surfaces in a pattern representing a great carpet. Besides lighting fixtures, this glittering expanse, glinting gold, silver and other metallic hues, is pointed with rich, reflective ornamental details, making a pattern geometric with straight line and angle, for the most part, but bright with color and reflected light.



The vestibule, showing the octagonally coffered ceiling studded with lights.



View of the auditorium, looking toward the proscenium arch from the balcony.

The ceiling treatment has a central feature from which the rest emanates. From this is suspended an immense chandelier, and at symmetrical intervals, secondary features are similarly treated on a smaller scale. The metallic composition forming the decoration is highly reflective.

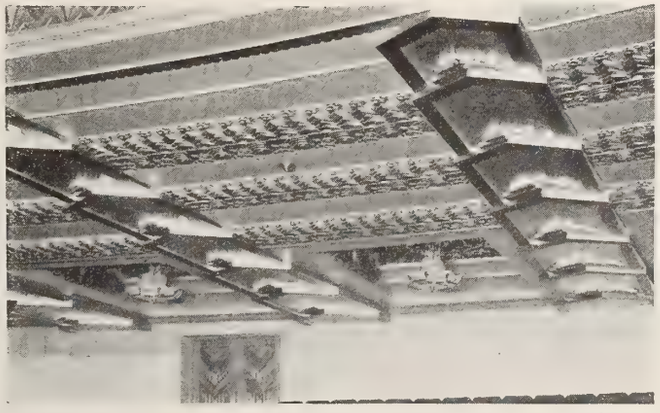
The balcony of the Warner in San Pedro follows the modern tendency in being really a compromise between the old type of high, steep balcony and the latter day mezzanine level. It has a relatively small climb and is relatively low. Six hundred can be seated here.

The proscenium arch measures 50 feet wide and 30 feet high. The projection room is large and is equipped with four projectors, besides the usual complement of stereopticons and effect mechines.

The ventilation system provides for a complete change of air every 10 minutes, assuring 35 cubic feet of air a minute to each person at capacity. The spray-wash system is used.

The Warner in San Pedro has a policy of continuous performances on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays from 2 o'clock until 11, and week-day schedules calling for one matinee daily and two evening performances. Programs are changed twice weekly, Sunday and Wednesday. Top prices are 25c for week-day matinees, and 50c in the evening; 30c for Saturday matinees, and 50c for all other week-end or holiday performances.

The theatre is under the house managership of Fred Crow.



Detail of treatment beneath the balcony.

CIRCUMSTANCES surrounding the creation of this theatre in a city which has sprung into being almost like the proverbial mushroom, offer familiar yet unusually illuminating instruction in an extraordinary kind of showmanship. It springs from what must be a natural interest of the public in the theatre. It chooses to regard show business as glamorous. The wise theatre operator, erecting a new house, will take advantage of the attitude. The example that San Pedro affords is evidenced in the following account in that city's newspaper, the News-Pilot, referring to the breaking of ground that began the project:

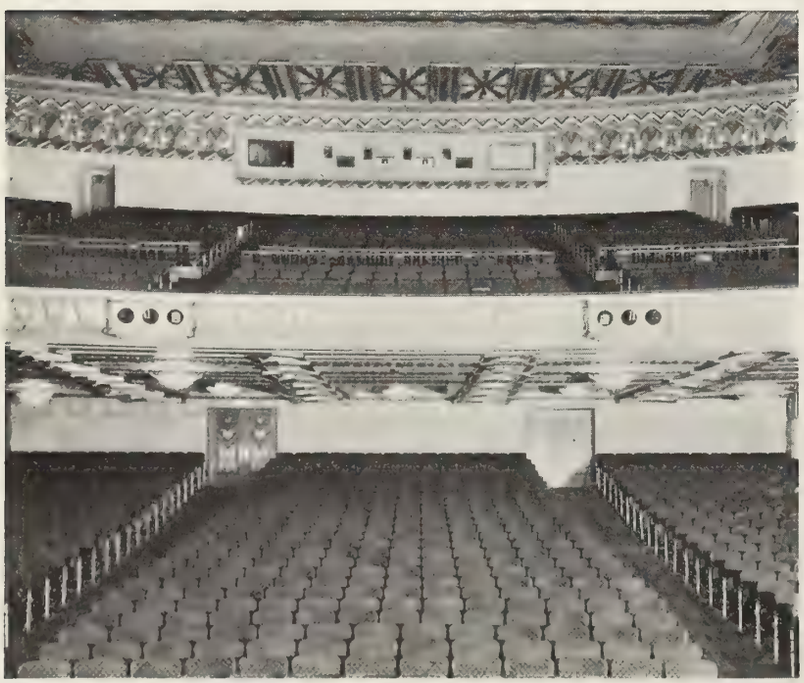
"That was an historic day in San Pedro, as more than 500 citizens from all points in the harbor district gathered for the short and informal program. Speaking through a loudspeaker, executives of the company and many prominent San Pedrans gave glowing accounts of what the new theatre meant to this community.

"With a huge steam shovel standing as a background with a packed circle of citizens watching, Jack Milton Warner, son of J. L. Warner, vice president in charge of production, turned the first shovel of dirt, officially marking commencement of construction activities.

"A contagious spirit of enthusiasm ran through the crowd as Chamber of Commerce officials, company leaders and the score of screen luminaries present turned a shovel of dirt 'for luck' while a Warner Brothers camera recorded the event on everlasting film.

Below: The facade, finished in white stucco restrainedly embellished with cornice and plaque patterns pressed into the material.



Upper view: Along the mezzanine promenade, which serves as a lounge as well as means of access to the balcony level.

Lower view: View through middle section of the auditorium to the rear, showing low position of the balcony and its gentle ascent.

Upper view: Landing from which leads a double main stairway, giving access to both the mezzanine and to the main lounge.

"The enthusiasm noted that day indicated renewed faith in San Pedro, a faith that echoed in the number of short talks that were given. Councilman A. E. Henning declared on that occasion that 'this major development in the harbor district is of great significance to San Pedro people, for no company nor man would invest $500,000 in any community unless its future was assured.'

"President Leslie C. Mott and Secretary R. H. Beaton of the San Pedro Chamber, welcomed Warner Brothers to San Pedro, as did George C. Aitkenhead, H. L. Campbell, president of the San Pedro Realty Board, and Lieut. Col. Carr W. Waller."

"During the past months," proudly reflects the News-Pilot, "San Pedrans have seen the great reinforced concrete walls rise to an impressive height. Through rain and shine, the crew of 100 workmen kept to a rigid schedule in order to bring to San Pedro its greatest of showhouses as soon as possible."

Showmanship, verily, begins with the turning of the first shovelful of dirt.

THE LAW OF CONTRACTS AND COPYRIGHT

analyzing late decisions of the higher courts

By LEO T. PARKER

THE COPYRIGHT laws provide that any person who infringes a copyrighted musical composition shall be liable in damages to the copyright owner in an amount not to exceed $5,000, nor less than $250. In the case of a dramatic or dramatico-musical or a choral or orchestral composition, the penalty is $100 for the first and $50 for every subsequent infringing performance. In the case of other musical compositions $10 for every infringing performance.

In the late case of Jewell-La Salle vs. Buck (51 S. Ct. 407), the Supreme Court of the United States rendered an important decision interpreting the copyright infringement laws. In this case the owner of a copyright sued to recover damages for infringement of his copyright. During the trial it was shown that the person against whom suit was filed gave only one infringing performance. According to the above mentioned latter clause in the copyright law, the owner of the copyright should be permitted to collect $10, whereas the first mentioned clause states that in no case shall the amount of damages exceed $5,000, nor be less than $250.

The question presented the court was whether or not the infringer was liable for $250 or merely $10. In holding the owner of the copyright entitled to recover $250, the Court said:

"It is urged that under such interpretation the suggested measure of $10 a performance would not be applicable unless more than twenty-five infringing performances were proved. This appears to be the meaning of the section, read as a whole, particularly since the amounts in the scheduled subdivisions appear to have been inserted merely as an aid to the court in awarding such damages as 'shall appear to be just.' . . . Unless the number of infringing performances of a copyrighted musical composition exceeds twenty-five, the minimum allowance of $250 must be made. Where more than twenty-five infringing performances are proved, and there is no showing as to actual loss, the court must allow the statutory minimum, and may, in its sound discretion, employ the scheduled $10 a performance as a basis for assessing additional damages."

The Law of Infringement

IT IS WELL established that a photoplay copyright is infringed only when an audience can perceive the similarity between the two plays. In other words, unless the public is deceived by the pictures, and led to believe that the films are a picturization of a copyrighted literary work, then no infringement can be said to exist.

For illustration, in Barbadillo vs. Goldwyn (42 F. [2d] 881), suit was filed by owners of the dramatic composition, "The Christ of the Alley," against Samuel Goldwyn and others for infringement of copyright. The story related to the love adventures and death of the King of Castile and included a miracle scene whereby the image of Christ attested to the innocence of character in play. The scene was depicted as a bona fide miracle. Goldwyn and others associated with him had a photoplay entitled "Night of Love" which also included a miracle scene in which the mantle of the Virgin Mary was used by one character who impersonated the Virgin Mary and pointed an accusing finger at another character. It was contended that this photoplay infringed "The Christ of the Alley" play because in the latter play Christ pointed his finger at one character in the scene. In holding no infringement exists, this court said:

"Brushing aside the multiplicity of detail with which every dramatic episode must almost necessarily be laden, I find but one crucial alleged similarity between 'The Night of Love' and 'The Christ of the Alley.' In the former, the purported 'testimony' of the Blessed Virgin is in reality a sheer trick of legerdemain performed by Marie. The simple-hearted mob is deceived by the ruse, but the audience know it to be a piece of obvious jugglery and impersonation. On the other hand, in 'The Christ of the Alley,' the scene is that of a bona fide miracle probably believed in by the author and by the audience, as well as by the multitude. To say that a spurious miracle was suggested, in a way such as falls within the prohibition of the copyright law, by a genuine one, is to argue that error is copied from truth, black from white, negation from affirmation, nadir from zenith. A spectator, seeing Marie's palpable sleight of hand in 'The Night of Love,' could not reasonably assert that the incident was suggested by the solemn and genuine miracle in 'The Christ of the Alley,' which, as in the Zorrilla episode, accurately reflects the profound religious feeling of the Spanish people."

Fulfillment of Contract

IN THE CASE, Metro-Goldwyn Pictures vs. Berger (174 N. E. 926), it was disclosed that the Metro-Goldwyn Pictures Corporation entered into a written contract with the owner of a moving picture theatre whereby the Metro Corporation sold to the theatre owner for exhibition purposes the right to use moving picture films and pictures at an agreed rental or service charge. This contract was fully performed by both parties up to September 16th, when the theatre owner refused to accept any more films and pictures and wrote a letter to the Metro Corporation to that effect and stated that he had quit the theatre business and had installed a bowling alley in the building formerly used as a theatre.

Metro sued the theatre owner for damages contending that the latter was required to fulfill the terms of the contract notwithstanding the fact that he had disposed of his theatre. The lower court held the theatre owner liable. The latter appealed to the higher court contending that the verdict rendered was not supported by the evidence. In other words, the theatre owner contended that the testimony presented by Metro was not sufficient to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that he was liable on the contract. It is important to know that the higher court reversed the lower court's decision in view of a similar verdict decided many years ago in the leading case of Blackstone Theatre Corporation vs. Goldwyn Distributing Corporation (146 N. E. 217).

Breach Stops Suit

IT IS WELL settled law that any firm of person who breaches a contract, or fails to fulfill its terms, is liable in damages. On the other hand, a person who first breaches a contract cannot later sue and recover damages from the other party.

For instance, in Monagnas vs. Fox Film Corporation (46 F [2d] 877), it was disclosed that the Fox Film Corporation conducted a beauty contest and advertised that the winner would be entitled to a free trip to New York, free hotel accommodations while there, visits to moving picture studios and the right to take part in a moving picture to be exhibited in various parts of the world.

A STUDY IN ADAPTATION

Describing the Arlington, a new Fox theatre in Santa Barbara, Cal., that carries the Spanish villa architecture to an extreme

WHATEVER theoretical fault the critic may reasonably find with the Fox West Coast circuit's new Arlington theatre in Santa Barbara, Cal., it has the great merit of being a building authentic and beautiful. The critic observes that it is truly Spanish and he questions the propriety of this type of structure to the purposes of motion picture exhibition, particularly in America.

In the first place, the issue is never clean-cut when one argues the propriety of Spanish architecture, especially its New World outgrowth, in Southern California, the soil of which became as native to Spanish culture as was that of Spain itself. And California has fostered, rather than discouraged, these early Spanish influences. It has, indeed, persisted in remaining, in terrain and climate, and also to an appreciable extent, in population, akin to the land that is more truly its mother country than any nation of the North. Whether the Arlington is to be adjudged beautiful as a motion picture theatre or not, it yet has been designed to take advantage of every charming characteristic of Old Spanish structures, and beautiful almost all its beholders will surely call it.

The very adaptation, then, of this architectural style, so sincerely and authentically, to the business of vending motion picture entertainment to a modern American public, must be interesting to the showman as well as the architect.

THE APPROACH is precisely that of those Spanish buildings—missions and villas—that have been native to the extreme Southwest and Mexico for several centuries. They came originally from Spain. The Arlington likewise. Its tower has its prototype in those of the famous El Alcazar de Segovia. This, indeed, presents the first study in adaptation. The pinnacle is a sign carrying the name of Fox, and it revolves!

The marquee is an adaptation of a Spanish canopy with a valance in metal running around the lower edge. It is painted to match the whiteness of the building. Metal too is used to embellish the building itself. The facade is surmounted by a Spanish cresting of wrought iron scroll work with a wrought iron cartouche at the center.

The box office is located at the front of the vestibule—an elaborate little "chapel" of faience tile and hand-wrought iron, the lower portion being in blue and gold tiles irregularly placed, while the canopy portion is of iron with bars opened into an old Sevillian pattern and extending to an iron frieze surmounted by a shield supporting figures executed in repouse iron.

Upper left: In "El Club Chico," refreshment room having vision of the auditorium, where parties may see the show in privacy.

Upper right: In the Paseo, or lobby, an arcaded approach to the theatre proper typical of the theatre's Spanish character.

Lower view: Detail of the entrance and marquee. The latter is an adaptation of a Spanish canopy, edged with a metal valance.

Souls have been shrived within lesser compartments, even in Spain. Here something rather different by way of surcease may be purchased across a counter of brightly colored tile.

This vestibule, extending into a lobby, is really something more than either. Called the Paseo, it extends along a goodly portion of the building, shielded from the outside by a series of massive Spanish arches. Midway within it is a shallow tiled fountain of the type found in the smaller villas. The Paseo leads to the entrance loggia.

A gay colorful note, redolent of both Spain and the theatre, occurs at the entrance loggia, across which, above the arches, are murals of Spanish figures doing the dances popular in those distant days when Santa Barbara itself was Spanish. They are the work of Samuel Armstrong. The ceilings in the entrance loggia are constructed of reinforced concrete so cast as to represent rough beams and planking. The floor here resembles the tile paving used in Spanish courtyards.

The main foyer is spacious and vaulted. From its ceiling hang three hand-wrought chandeliers, each over six feet in diameter. These fixtures are augmented by wall lanterns, similarly of Spanish pattern. The floor is carpeted in powder blue, with a design in antique gold based on the interlocking D found in the decorations of the Davanzati palace in Florence. Floor borders and wainscoting are in colored tile. At both ends of the foyer are staircases leading to the upper levels of the theatre, with steps bordered by a tile strip and carpeted in antique gold.

ENTERING, from this foyer, the auditorium, the patron beholds a detailed representation of an early Spanish village. The treatment is vigorously atmospheric, an exotic outdoor panorama with a vaulting, star-studded sky overhead.

At the front of the auditorium, really the proscenium arch, is a bridge, through the span of which is a river narrowing into distant hills, painted upon the stage curtain, the work of John M. Gamble. Outlined against the sky and mountains are groups of Spanish buildings. To speak of utilitarian matters for a moment, this bridge, or proscenium arch, has a "span" of 50 feet, and a rise of 30 feet, with accommodations for wide screen. A novel adaptation looking toward the possibility of striking stage presentations, is the provision of steps from the stage to the top of the proscenium arch, across which a performer may pass high above the audience, from one side of the stage to the other.

The walls of the auditorium, done entirely in relief, of course, are a representation of outer walls of Spanish buildings, balconied and windowed above, arched below. They are patterned after structures in various parts of Spain, and also (it should be noted) after buildings in early Santa Barbara. Where grilles, weathervanes or other ironwork occur, all are handmade according to the period to which the building involved belongs. Illumination is from lanterns along the walls and suspended from the ceilings of the "buildings," have been made from measured drawings of 14th, 15th and 16th Century Catalonian street lamps.

The ceiling sweeps in an elliptical vault over 100 feet in width, and 150 feet in length. Its construction is of light fabricated metal secured to steel trusses over 75 feet above the lowest point in the auditorium floor. Quake-proof methods were used in this construction, with over 5,000 anchors. It is treated over its entire surface with acoustic plaster.

Details of the general treatment offer further studies in adaptation. The design of the seat frames at the row ends follows that of benches used in about the 15th Century in Segovia. There is a unique refreshment room—"El Club Chico"—high above the balcony floor, yet allowing with complete privacy a view through plate glass of the entire auditorium—this has been adapted from old Monterey architecture, with overhanging balconies and a low sloping ceiling. Even the poster display panels are based on panel patterns culled from Ronda, Segovia, Toledo and Granada.

And a most shrewd adaptation is that which permits the elimination of unsightly fire-escapes. On each side of the main portion of the structure, staircases lead out into two patios, which measure approximately 50x80 feet. Instead of the usual fire escapes, there are broad flights of steps leading to the exterior like those to be found in many an humbler dwelling in villages of Spain.

The architects of the Arlington were Edwards & Plunkett of Santa Barbara, while the decorating was executed by the Robert E. Power Studios of Los Angeles. Walter Kofeldt has been appointed managing director.

The Arlington operates on a continuous policy at popular prices, with programs including both stage and screen performances.

SEATING PATRONS ACCORDING TO SECTIONS

a detailed analysis of a new plan

By J. E. TAUGHER

THE SEATING of patrons is a familiar problem to every experienced theatre manager. And few other phases of theatre operation are more important. The theatre cannot prosper without pleasing its patrons, obviously, and not only the picture, but where the patron sits to see it is a great factor in determining the extent to which he is pleased. Making the problem a particularly acute one, is the variation in the individual preferences of patrons as to where they sit.

It is when the theatre is approaching capacity, of course, that the seating of patrons most taxes the resources of the theatre and its personnel in their purpose of satisfying customers. It has been to prepare for this situation before it actually arrives that the method of seating now being used at the Fox Strand in Milwaukee was devised.

The system, developed, by Roger H. Dawson, manager of the Strand, and by his assistant, Frank Schreihart, is called by them so far successful, and it has had several months in which to be proved so. Dawson is aware, of course, that conditions peculiar to the Strand may have much to do with the success of the method. However, these are not apparent enough, if indeed they do exist, to offer any reason why the system, in its essentials, would not operate successfully in many another house of similar type and policy.

The Strand has a seating capacity of 1,219. It has no balcony, only a small foyer, but a long lobby. The theatre itself measures 100x96 feet. The house is often called upon to handle a tremendous rush of business and accommodates as many as 1,300 people in an hour. Consequently it is for this type of pressure business that the plan has ben designed.

For three weeks before the plan was inaugurated a survey was conducted by the theatre. People were allowed to enter the house and seat themselves wherever they wished. The ushers watched, and a chart was prepared showing the most desirable seats in order according to voluntary selection.

The first survey was made during the week of February 13, and the last the week of March 27. The plan was placed into effect April 3. It is interesting to know that a host of factors were taken into consideration in connection with these surveys. First, three different types of pictures were shown during this period. Accordingly, the reaction of these various types to seating preference were studied. Also included in the survey were weather conditions and types of advertising. The survey showed that by voluntary selection the seats in sections 1, 2, 3 and 4 (see chart), were filled first, while the others were filled in the order shown, and the seats farthest toward the front, or sections 29 and 30, were the last to be filled. Incidentally, the distance from the seats to the screen is but approximately five feet.

The charts on this and the opposite page show the order of seating, as indicated by numbered sections, part of which have been blacked-out to indicate location of patrons as auditorium fills. The left tier has 247 seats, the middle tiers 371 each, and the right tier 230.

Patrons are escorted to those seats, which, according to the survey, have proved most desirable. As the patrons enter the theatre they are divided into five groups, group 1 going to aisle 2; group 2 to aisle 3; group 3 to aisle 4; group 4 to aisle 4, and then to aisle 5; and group 5, from aisle 2 and then to aisle 1.

The rows are only filled-in half-way from each side, so that when one section is filled from one aisle, the patrons are directed to the other section to fill in from the other aisle. The effect of the plan is a wedge building to the front center aisles. The filling of the rows only half-way from each aisle results in the disturbing of a minimum number of people when newcomers take their seats.

AFTER the best seats have been taken, the object of the theatre is to give the patron the best remaining seats. There is nothing compulsory about the system on the part of the patron, and the policy fo the theatre is that the patron is always right. A person coming into the theatre may be directed to aisle 3, where he may be met by an usher who says politely, "Aisle 4, please," holding his arm across his chest in the direction of the next aisle. When the patron reaches aisle 4, he is greeted with the question, "How far down, please, I will see what I can find." And stating that he believes there is a seat nearer the center, the usher says, "Just a moment, please. I will see what I can find." And if there is a seat where this customer wants to sit, he is escorted to his selection. According to Mr. Dawson, however, one out of a hundred complain, and the majority of them are satisfied with where they are placed.

Two ushers are stationed at each of the three main aisles, and one at each end aisle. In addition, the head usher supervises back and forth, from one far aisle to the other. Electric buttons are located on aisles 2 and 4, and a rapid survey made by the usher down the aisles gives him the number of vacant seats, both doubles and singles. The wedge effect, with the seats filled at the rear of the theatre, shows the patron that the only available seats are located toward the front of the house.

Standing is permitted in the lobby only when the least desirable seats are still vacant. Patrons are also permitted to stand in a line two deep, behind sections 16 and 15. If any vacancies occur in the right half of sections 21, 11, 8 or 15, they are escorted down aisle 1. If they occur in the left half of sections 29, 23, 19, 17, 9, 1, 3, or 13, they are escorted down aisle 4. In this connection the electric signals are brought into play to show the number of vacant seats.

In some instances the entire 29 and 30 blocks have been filled up by notifying those in the lobby that there are still 35 or 40 minutes until the next show, but that far front seats are available. These sections are filled almost invariably in this manner without any objection from the patrons. When the crowd standing in the lobby begins to grow restive, Mr. Dawson makes it a policy to joke a bit and from time to time allow three or four to enter in order to stir up the crowd and make them think that they are nearing their destination.

Through this system, three ushers have handled as many as 1,067 patrons in 30 minutes, or an average of 355 persons a minute. It is a rigid rule that an usher is not allowed to touch a patron's arm. Furthermore, he is not permitted to stand directly in front of a person, but always at an angle, looking the patron straight in the eyes. A school is conducted by the theatre for the training of its ushers, and politeness and diplomacy prevail at all times.

WHEN A CROWD is waiting, Mr. Dawson personally patrols the exit side. Although he does not allow his ushers to do this, when he sees an aged man or woman waiting in the crowd, he will open the ropes and escort them personally to some seat in the house. His policy is that the patron is right at all times. If there is a complaint (and there are some, although they have been held down to a minimum under this system), he will attempt to pacify them with a pass good at any time, even though they paid only matinee admission prices. If this fails, he will ask the patron if he or she has seen the Wisconsin theatre, which

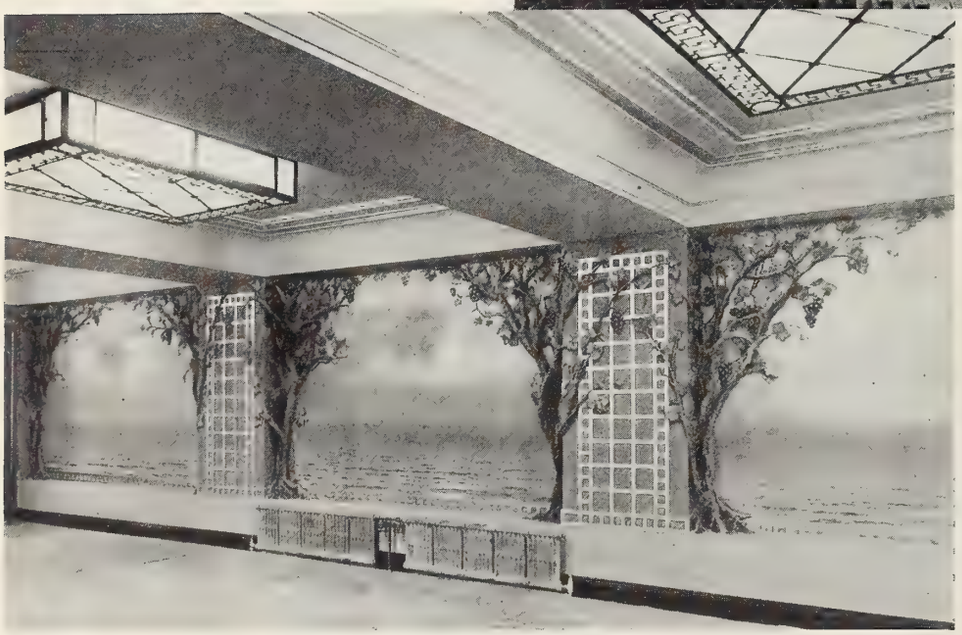
Two New British Theatres



The Forum and The Savoy in suburban London

By W. H. MOORING

Two views of the Forum, located in the Fulham district with a seating capacity of 2,500. The architectural treatment is along conventional lines, with a dash of the unusual based on a theme of local color, as expressed in the sea murals in the foyer, shown in the lower view. The auditorium motifs, shown in the upper picture, consist mainly in a large dome and a Corinthian colonnade. The general color scheme is of turquoise blue and gold.

AN ADDITION to London's suburban theatres was achieved by H. Yapp, independent exhibitor, who already has theatre interests in London and the provinces, in the opening of the Fulham Forum. Planned on conventional lines, it has a bold stone frontage a feature of which is the half-domed center. J. Stanley Beard, F.R.I.B.A., planned the Forum, which seats 2,500 and has a lounge accommodation for a further 1,150.

The main entrance is on the corner of two thoroughfares, and the main elevation has been carried out in glazed terra cotta, with pale blue facings. The rest of the frontage is in red Dorking brickwork.

Blue and amber leaded lightings also relieve the frontage and give light to the lounge inside.

There is a large circular entrance vestibule, with marbled walls and vellum-covered ceiling diffused with turquoise blue. Approaches from the vestibule to the auditorium are richly carpeted, and lead by way of graceful stairways and promenades into the horseshoe-shaped auditorium.

An 80-foot dome is fitted with a central lighting point in representation of the sun, which sheds soft amber light over the whole theatre. The general color scheme is in turquoise blue and gold, varied by the rich red-colored Corinthian pillars, which break up the plainness of the walls. In these pillars are deft little niches which conceal light units.

The Forum undoubtedly improves upon many of the best West End theatres, in size and in comfort.

The Savoy is in one of the growing London suburban reaches, Acton, on the South West side of the Thames. Planned by George Coles, London cinema architect, the Savoy theatre is one of the most attractive places in the greater London area.

Its capacity is not mammoth, judged on recent suburban tendencies—it seats around the thousand mark—but it has few rivals in comfort throughout the dormitories of London.

Abe Goide, well-known independent circuit owner, is the promoter, and he was lucky to secure a fine corner site adequate to allow a straight lay-out.

Coles has planned the building along modern French lines of architecture and decoration, and surprising effects are achieved by sharp contrasts of curve and straight line.

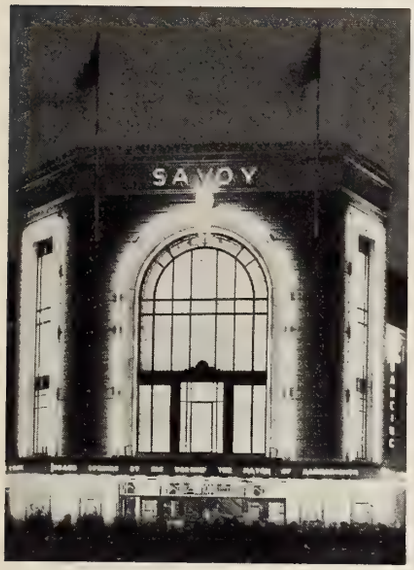
Exteriorly, this note is expressed in the severity of the roof line and the rising corners, which are accentuated by a huge central window with rounded top. Skillful use is made of concealed floods, which serve to emphasize these outlines.

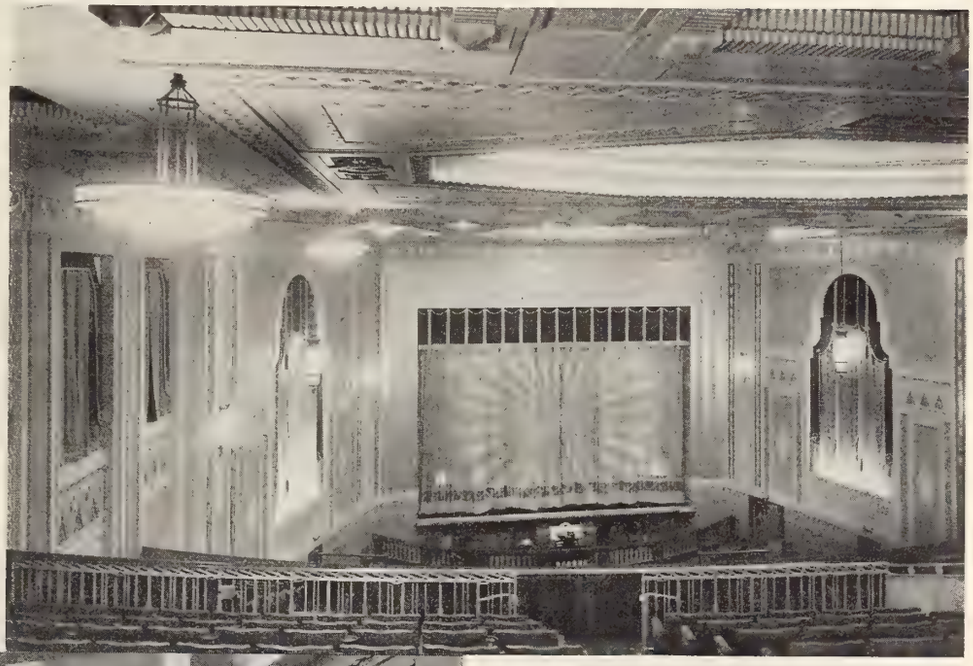
Inside there are spacious waiting lounges, a large ballroom with ornamental orchestra gallery, a tea salon and retiring rooms. Decorations in each, are in close harmony with the scheme of browns and greens which predominate in the main auditorium. Touches of silver and gold in the wall treatment are repeated here and there in hangings, cords, and other soft furnishings. It is probably in the furnishing of this theatre that the secret of the success of its appearance lies.

The square proscenium arch for example, is almost entirely in silver, and touches of the same treatment are taken up in the ceiling.

Across the width of the stage opening hangs a severely cut pelmet in vivid green velvet, the stage drapings being festooned in gold and silver and touched with decorations in rich green, red and blue satin. Drapings surrounding the "dummy" boxes which flank the stage opening are similar with additional curtains of silver silk alternated with panels of gauze chenilled with satin and finished with cords and tassels in gold and silver. All other windows and recesses are hung with silver silk, finished with pelmets of green. Carpeting throughout is in green and buff.

The Savoy is probably the most electrified theatre in Greater London.





The interior views are of the auditorium and lobby of the Savoy, which are of modern French pattern, with a color scheme of brown, green, silver and gold.

The facades of the Forum and Savoy, respectively, are shown in the exterior views. The Forum follows the classical, the Savoy the striking modern French forms.

THE MAJESTIC, WELLINGTON, NEW ZEALAND

The Majestic theatre in Wellington, New Zealand, is controlled by the Fuller-Hayward Theatre Corporation, Ltd., and it was erected at a cost of $1,500,000, including site and furnishings. The seating capacity is 2,119. It is one of the most pretentious motion picture theatres in Wellington, which is a city of 130,000, with 12 picture houses within its limits, six of which are first-run. There are also seven suburban theatres. The view on this page shows the auditorium looking toward the proscenium arch. The arch is 40 feet wide and is surmounted by a large decorative sun-burst executed in plaster board. The center piece is of smooth plaster and finished with gold leaf, concealing three strips of indirect lighting in three colors, operated through the house dimmer system. The other reproduction shows the foyer of the Majestic. From here the patron has a view across the stalls to a passage on the other side of the theatre, a distance of 100 feet, and also up the stairs to glass doors which open into still another entrance, where there is another box office, a supplementary service installed principally for those patrons who come in motor cars and park their machines just below, where an attendant watches them, with the theatre management providing free car insurance for the duration of the performance. The Majestic was designed by W. J. Prouse. The theatre has a policy calling for both stage and screen performances.

THE PREVENTION OF INTERFERING NOISES

I.—Noises Directly Transmitted Through the Air

By P. T. SHERIDAN

This is the first of a series of three articles directed toward assisting the projectionist and sound engineer in eliminating interfering noises the absence of which has become absolutely necessary to good sound with the introduction of noiseless recording. The second article will appear in the August 1st issue.

THE PRESENTATION of sound pictures can be successful only if they are realistically reproduced. The action presented with its accompanying sound must be realistic enough to make the audience forget that they are looking at a picture and imagine themselves really living through the scene with the actors. The theatre manager who is a good showman knows how easily this illusion is destroyed when something entirely foreign to the picture occurs in the theatre and distracts the attention of the audience. This is especially true since the introduction of noiseless recording, which causes such noises to stand out in contrast.

The sound system equipment if not quietly operated will to some extent be responsible for the destruction of the very entertainment it creates. It is in the prevention of noises from these sources that the projectionist can be of great assistance and as an aid, the most common noises and their contributing causes will be outlined and suggestions offered for their prevention.

Before describing specific noises and causes, an analysis and classification of the various types of noises may be of assistance.

Insofar as the projectionist is concerned, noise may be classified in two general groups: (1) That originating in the projection room or in the sound system, and (2) that which has its origin in other sources such as ventilating systems, audience noise or street noise. The first of these groups, with which we are primarily concerned, may be further classified under three general headings. The first comprises those noises which reach the audience by direct transmission through the air from the projection room itself. Such noises include the noise of rotating machinery, loud conversation, high monitor horn volume and other noises incidental to the operation of the projection equipment.

The second group includes noises of an intermittent character that are introduced into the sound system electrically, such as might be caused by loose contacts, defective fuses or run-down batteries.

The third group includes noises which also are introduced into the sound system electrically, but which are more or less steady, such as the "rush noise" from the photo-electric cell, hums from a.c. pickup, and noise resulting from the electrical transmission of mechanical vibrations.

Although noises from any source will prove distracting to an audience, this is especially true of mysterious noises coming from directions other than the screen. Noises coming from the direction of the screen are generally not so objectionable, especially if they are of such a nature that they may be interpreted as originating in the action.

We will discuss in this first article those noises reaching the audience through the air from the projection room, showing how they can be prevented, or at least reduced to the point where they are no longer objectionable.

Checking up on system noise, Washington theatre, Washington, D. C.

EXCEPT in an emergency, loud conversation between projectionists is quite unnecessary. If the projection room is not thoroughly soundproof, the projectionists' conversation, even if not abnormally loud, will be heard by those seated in the rear of the audience. Reasonable care on the part of the projectionists will prevent criticism on this point.

Loud operation of the monitor horn is likewise very annoying to the audience. Although the projectionist of course needs sufficient monitor volume to assist in making a successful changeover, the volume should be reduced as soon as the changeover is completed. The monitor is not intended for use in judging quality or volume of the sound in the auditorium. This is a duty which can be performed satisfactorily only by observation in the auditorium.

In the handling of film the careful projectionist can do much to reduce the noise originating in the projection room. Although enclosed motor-driven rewind machines are not usually excessively noisy, the ordinary hand-operated machine can be, especially when operated at a high speed. If, however, it is operated slowly enough to permit careful inspection of the film for oil spots, worn sprocket holes and insecure patches there will be little possibility of objectionable noise.

Reels which have been bent out of shape frequently strike against magazine walls, and their continued use should be avoided. The slamming of magazine and lamphouse doors and the occasional dropping of empty film cans are also sources of noise which are to be guarded against. Automatic changeover devices are sometimes noisy, as are also manual changeovers if carelessly operated. Another source of occasional disturbance is the striking of the arcs in preparation for a changeover. However, the experienced projectionist will have little difficulty from this source.

THE NOISES described thus far are practically all under the direct control of the projectionist, who can prevent their occurrence or minimize their extent by the exercise of reasonable care in the operation of his equipment.

Due to the fact that they contain gears, drives and other rotating parts, projectors contribute their share in adding to the general noise originating in the booth. Assuming that the equipment is properly designed and manufactured, the reduction of noise from it becomes largely a question of careful maintenance. Proper lubrication is the first step in preventing wear and noise. Although the instructions issued by the manufacturer should carefully be followed in lubrication, it is in general true that the more frequent use of less oil is more effective than its use in larger quantities at less frequent intervals would be, because of the reduction o fthe danger of seepage from parts on to the film due to an excess at any one time.

Gears which show sign of excessive wear should be replaced, since in addition to causing noise, considerable vibration may be set up which may be picked up by the sound system as will be described in a later article of this series. Universal joints and flexible couplings should be frequently inspected to insure that they are not binding and thus setting up increased vibration and therefore noise.

Many of the larger theatres and theatre chains make it a practice to completely rebuild projector heads at least once a year. This represents good insurance against breakdown and noisy operation.

Careful glassing in of the booth portholes and lookouts will go far in reducing the amount of noise which reaches the audience directly from the booth. Vibratory noises originating in the booth and transmitted to the auditorium through its walls and floor may be especially difficult to overcome. However, a careful survey by a reliable acoustic consulting service will usually indicate what steps should be taken to reduce interfering noise in any cases of this kind.

The next article will describe the causes and prevention of noises of an intermittent character.

WHAT THE MANAGER SHOULD KNOW ABOUT SOUND

REPLACEMENTS AND IMPROVEMENTS

By A THEATRE SOUND ENGINEER*

This is the third of a series of articles prepared for the theatre manager, as well as, of course, his managerial and technical assistants, in order that those in charge of the theatre's actual operation may be better equipped to judge the quality of the sound, to judge the requirements of the projection department, and to judge the sound and projection equipment and supplies that they may be called upon to purchase. The fourth article will appear in the August 1st issue.

A NUMBER of new devices have appeared on the sound equipment market in recent months, designed to improve reproduction from sound-on-film, or, in one way or another, to reduce the cost of operating and maintaining this portion of the equipment. Many, perhaps most theatres using sound-on-film, can profit by the introduction of one or more of these devices. Just which of the new contrivances may be of benefit in any particular case, and the extent of that benefit, will, of course, very largely depend upon the type of equipment already employed. The manager who knows what is in his own projection room will be the best judge of what improvements should be helpful or economical.

Managers who do not now use sound-on-film, but who may be contemplating its installation at some future time, will also be interested in the newer devices for checking any apparatus that they may consider purchasing, to see if it includes some or all of these later improvements.

Still other nventions for greater economy or better results may be expected to make their appearance, of course, as time goes on.

I
Sound-On-Film Reproduction

Mechanical Considerations

THE PRIME mechanical requirement of a good film "drive" is that it shall move the film steadily past the beam of the exciting lamp. The least unsteadiness in this motion creates the very serious condition known as "flutter."

The seriousness of flutter lies principally in the fact that this trouble is insidious. It does not announce its presence. It merely makes sound harsh and disagreeable to listen to. It is therefore a condition that may persist for weeks, or even months, stigmatizing the theatre as one in which sound is poor. The manager who is in that theatre constantly may not notice the very gradual increase in the unpleasantness of his sound. The projectionists likewise may fail to notice this, especially since they hear sound only through the interference of noisy machinery. Patrons may not notice the flutter for some time, until in the end patrons, manager and projectionists all come to realize suddenly that sound is bad.

Means for detecting flutter before it becomes serious, and for correcting the many causes of this condition, will be discussed at another time. But the one cause that seems to have given more trouble than any other, perhaps than all others combined, is the lower-magazine take-up, and the chain or belt that drives it.

The take-up is a friction clutch and it can lose adjustment in many ways. The slightest loss of adjustment causes an unsteady pull upon the film. If that unsteadiness reaches far enough back, along the line of celluloid, to be perceptible at the "sound gate," flutter will result.

Take-Up Sprockets

It has been found very difficult in practice to keep even the best of take-ups in such condition that they never cause flutter. For this reason, a second, or "hold-back sprocket," is often added below the regular sound sprocket in more modern types of equipment. "Hold-back sprocket attachments" are now made by a number of manufacturers for addition to earlier apparatus that did not embody this precaution.

Such devices in no sense constitute a complete insurance against flutter. They offer no more than this: that when properly made they insure against the commonest and most troublesome cause of flutter. Many of the largest theatres have considered that sufficient reason for installing them. They are not particularly expensive, but whether their expense is justified in any particular theatre is of course a question only the manager of that theatre can answer.

Flutter can be caused by almost innumerable defects in a sound-on-film drive, but in every case the defect manifests itself by causing an unsteady motion of the film.

Sound Attachments

The life of gears cannot well be predicted by even the most conscientious manager or the most competent engineer, who may be contemplating the purchase of sound-on-film equipment. Such manufacturers' guarantees as may seem indicated in any given case are perhaps the only consideration that can be given that important point. Steadiness of film motion, and the likelihood that this will not be upset by normal wear, is the point the writer would be inclined to give the most careful thought, if buying a sound-on-film attachment.

The tension pad, which holds the film as it passes the exciting light, would perhaps rate second consideration. If this pad does not fit firmly, unsteady reproduction will follow, regardless of the pull upon the film. The celluloid will shift back and forth through the point of focus. Good tension in the tension pad is as essential as any mechanical requirement.

Another factor in the tension pad is of equal importance. Dirt on the sound track causes noisy sound, as everyone knows. Loose particles of dirt or grit, vibrating in the path of the exciting light, may do the same. The tension pad must be so constructed that any loose dirt, no matter where else it may collect, does not linger in the path of the light. There must be nothing in or close to that path for dirt to cling to. If this requirement is not met, avoiding noisy sound becomes difficult—even almost impossible.

The film guides, or idler rollers, require a word. When they lose adjustment, "motor-boating" appears in the sound, owing to the effect of sprocket-holes or dividing lines passing through the beam of the exciting light. Some film reproducing equipment now in common use is provided with guides that slip their adjustment more or less frequently. It is an undesirable condition and one to be checked in considering new equipment.

"Shimming Attachment"

There is one mechanical accessory which may be of interest here. Some earlier types of equipment were so designed that the projection head had to be carefully shimmed into place, in order for all the gears to mesh properly. Much equipment of this kind is still in use—and giving excellent service. But whenever a head is removed—or changed, for any reason—the shimming process must be repeated. This process has been known to take hours. It has sometimes been done in a few minutes. The difference is largely due to luck, and the competence of the projection staff is no guarantee that they will not need half a night to shim up a head with this type of equipment. A device has recently appeared which makes shimming unnecessary. It involves an additional gear, and means for adjusting this to compensate for any position of the head.

The overtime involved in changing heads, wherever shimming is required, is likely to be costly. If a new head must be installed rapidly at any cost, as when the old one has bound up and stopped a show, there is strong temptation to shortcut the shimming procedure by use of force, in spite of possible damage to, or even complete destruction of, the entire drive mechanism. Depending on the condition of the projector heads in any given theatre, the likelihood of one of them breaking down, and the frequency with which they are changed for repair or other purposes, the non-shimming device may prove very valuable—and a long-run economy of no mean proportions.

Exciting Lamp System

Exciting lamps are a replaceable item, and need special thought as such, since replaceable items offer the chief opportunity for intelligent economy. Exciting lamps become useless in two ways. They may burn out, or the interior of the glass may blacken to such an extent that the light is materially diminished, and full volume can no longer be obtained.

Exciting lamps that will not blacken are in prospect for the immediate future. Their use will result in added savings, but will involve a new danger. The lamp that becomes dark before it burns out will not stop a show. The other kind will. No matter how rapidly lamps can be changed in any particular installation, there will always be a brief break before even the most competent projectionist determines that the lamp, and not something else, is at fault. Many theatres will be willing to take the risk for the sake of the saving. Others may use the new lamp, but take care to discard it some little time before its allotted span of life.

Lens Tubes

The "lens tube" is the heart of the film reproducing system. It should give perfect focus, and maintain its adjustment despite the vibration to which it is subject. It should be hermetically sealed—to prevent oil seeping into it. Such oil will vaporize under the heat of the exciting lamp, resulting in a yellowish light and gross loss of volume.

Some lens tubes are so made as to be adjustable in the projection room. Others are not. The possibility of projection room adjustment is an obvious advantage from the point of view of economy, but from the point of view of good sound, perfect adjustment should be possible in the projection room. If it is not, the other kind is preferable, in spite of the additional cost.

The Photoelectric Cell

Four things are required of a good photoelectric cell. It must be non-microphonic. That is, it must be so rigidly built that its internal parts will not pick up the projector vibration. If they do this, they will introduce projector noise into the sound.

The cell should have "high gain." That is, other things being equal, the cell is best which produces the greatest volume, for its output will need correspondingly less amplification. There is distortion in any amplification, and the least amplification is always the best. But when amplification must take place on the projector mechanism itself, with the attendant possibility of picking up machine noise or stray ground currents, to have as little of it as possible is especially desirable. Greater output from the photocell very greatly reduces the chance of noisy sound.

The cell should likewise have good overall quality and long life.

Some of the newer cells apparently have an eternal life. No one knows how long they will last, for the excellent reason that none has yet worn out. It would therefore seem excellent economy to discard older models that required frequent replacement in favor of these "eternal" cells, and more especially so since they have the additional advantage of higher gain.

The Photocell Amplifier

Most, although not all, systems use a photocell amplifier. This has its own requirements. It is commonly mounted on spring suspension, to minimize the possibility of picking up machine vibration, and very often a rubber pad is placed under it for the same purpose.

Oil from the projector mechanism causes the rubber pad to swell. With some types of equipment, replacing these pads is a running expense that constantly recurs.

Oil Shields

"Oil shields" of several types are available, and in severe cases easily pay for themselves in the rubber replacements that they save. Whether or not justified as an economy, such shields are often justified as a precaution. The swelling of the rubber pad defeats the purpose of the spring suspension, causing the amplifier to touch its cradle at some point, and thus introducing noise into the sound. In extreme instances this swelling has been known to warp the amplifier casing to such an extent that factory repairs were required. Where this possibility exists, the economy of the oil shield is unquestioned. Such extreme conditions, however, are not common, and should not occur if care is taken.

Microphonic Tubes

Microphonic tubes are a serious menace in photocell amplifiers, and especially so with noiseless recording. More sturdily built tubes, less subject to vibration of their elements and consequent microphonic disturbances, are now available. Their use is indicated wherever maximum freedom from noisy sound is an essential. Frequently tubes of the older type can be used in one of the system amplifiers, as well as in the photocell amplifier, and may be put aside for that purpose. Where this is done, no real loss is involved in installing the newer tubes without delay, while the possibilities of noisy sound are reduced materially.

Resistors

In many systems, resistors of the "grid leak" type are used as part of the coupling between the photocell and its amplifier. These resistors can be purchased in any radio store. A few years ago they were available at the "five-and-ten," and some can still be had for ten cents. There are theatres that still make the mistake of buying the ten-cent kind.

These resistors are not good subjects for economy. They are too inexpensive and they occupy too vital a point in the system. Moreover, the better kinds seldom or never need replacing. The overtime that may be involved in looking for the cause of noisy sound created by one of poorer kinds can easily cost enough to keep any theatre supplied with the best quality of this item for as long as it remains standing.

Accessibility

The perfect machine may be one that never needs attention or repairing, but accessibility for necessary repairs or attention may be considered next to perfection. Because sound-on-film reproduction involves greater intricacy and more complications than any other portion of the sound system, accessibility for periodic care and quick repairs in an emergency is more vital here than in any other part of the projection room.

II
Sound-On-Disc Reproduction

SOUND-ON-DISC requires primarily smooth motion of the record. Irregular motion here can produce flutter, exactly as in the case of sound-on-film. The difficulties here, however, are not so great, and the requirements less involved, than in the other system.

Reproducer Arm

The turntable must be perfectly level in all directions, or the needle will leave the groove. But the reproducer arm must also be level, if this trouble is to be avoided. The arm should, therefore, have a flat top, across which a spirit level may be placed for check. If this is not provided, the arm should be so built as to permit of a counterbalance test for "drift."

Resynchronizing Devices

Re-synchronizing devices are available in several forms. They are particularly necessary for theatres which do not receive first-run pictures, and which therefore are more or less likely to find their film in mutilated condition. Since no portion of the record will be missing, some means must be pro-

Gentlemen:

For the past several years we have featured Wright-De Coster Reproducers in our many installations of Sound-on-Film and Sound-on-Disc Talking Picture Systems.

Representing as we do the largest independent sound equipment manufacturers, we have had perhaps more experience in selling reproducers than the average installation company. We have used practically every known method for re-creating the dialogue of motion pictures.

The good name that you enjoy in this field, we believe, has been almost entirely due to various combinations of your No. 107 and 107T Speakers, with either a No. 5 or 9 horn. However, these were always limited by the acoustical condition of the house.

When you announced your new No. 109 Sound-On-Film Reproduction with its horn of special composition, frankly, we were skeptical. We had about given up hope of finding one speaker which could be depended upon in all cases.

Our very first installation of the new model was an eye-opener. After making the necessary adjustments on the diaphragm, we learned to our great surprise that here was a reproducer which could be "tailor-made" to fit any size or shape of auditorium. The lows or highs can now be controlled at the proper point.

There are none of the unnatural high frequencies which are sometimes so disturbing, neither do those bassy, down-in-a-barrel low frequencies appear with the No. 109.

You are to be congratulated in this real contribution to the art!

Very truly yours,

J. A. TANNENBAUM, Inc.

vided for keeping picture and sound in time. Theatres not subject to that trouble have less need of contrivances for recovering synchronization, but still may find them a valuable insurance.

Needles

Needles should be purchased only from manufacturers of unquestioned reputation, or from those who can show evidence that tests have been made proving their product capable of faithful reproduction of all frequencies. If any other brands are used, careful projection room check of the quality of their output is highly advisable.

III
Other Reproduction Forms

"Non-Sync" Reproduction

MOTORS used for non-synchronous reproduction may or may not be equipped with speed controls, depending on their type. The speed of some motors can be so definitely insured that no speed control is necessary. These motors are ideal for every purpose except one—they are difficult to use if the non-sync. is to be played in accompaniment to an orchestra, organ, or soloist. When this is done, with such motors, the artists must accommodate themselves to the pitch of the record. If motors involving a speed control are used, the pitch of record can be adjusted, through change of speed, to meet the convenience of the artists.

Announcing Systems

Microphones of all types and prices are available to the theatre manager. The ordinary carbon "double button" is satisfactory for most theatre purposes, but care is necessary in selecting a make capable of faithful reproduction.

For reproduction of music, the "condenser transmitter," recently made available for theatre use, gives better quality than the carbon microphone, but the difference can be over-emphasized. Where fine music of the finest quality is in question, the condenser transmitter, or similar high quality microphone, will be advantageous, but the less expensive carbon type will do very well for speech or for an ordinary jazz program not involving artists of extraordinary ability.

Where several microphones are used, a "mixer" panel will be helpful in controlling the volume from each.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

THE ECONOMICAL DOLLAR

OR

VS.

THE WASTEFUL DOLLAR

The Dollar is the unit used to measure the value of what is received in exchange for that dollar.

The Economical Dollar is the one given in exchange for product — of 100% dollar value.

The Wasteful Dollar is the one given in exchange for product—of possibly 75% dollar value or even less.

Seldom has one been more concerned or determined, than right now, that every dollar you part with shall prove to be an "Economical Dollar" instead of a "Wasteful Dollar."

Mr. Theatre Owner or Manager:

Let us illustrate what we mean by the term "The Economical Dollar."

If you buy a piece of equipment, required to deliver a reliable, uninterrupted service and you shortly find that it is unreliable in delivering the service you had a right to expect but required several additional dollars from time to time in upkeep and repairs, besides interrupted service, then it is a fact that every dollar originally invested in that equipment has proved to be a "Wasteful Dollar" to be measured by the number of dollars to keep it in service.

In contrast with the above, suppose you could have bought equipment for the same service, and that serviceproves to be always reliable and uninterrupted, without requiring practically an additional dollar for upkeep or repairs, then every dollar invested in that equipment is proved to be "An Economical Dollar" and not a "Wasteful Dollar."

The above applies to the Fulco Projector and we can prove it.

So the inside of your theatre will bring patrons from without!

NOW the spotlight is turned from the outside of the theatre to the inside. From the exterior that first attracts patrons to the interior that actually sells and keeps patrons sold. Owners and managers now focus attention on the seated audience . . . make the interior of their theatre so inviting that it brings patrons from without!

In the competition for patron favor, seating . . . the chairs your audience sit in from 2½ to 3 hours, can be made to contribute definitely to bigger volume. For comfortable chairs . . . seating that permits of healthful relaxation is always appreciated by the theatre goer. Showmen find that extra comfort brings extra profits.

So, American Seating Company undertook research. Posture specialists worked with engineers. Chairs were built to conform with proved posture principles. From a maze of research findings, came comfort features that were quickly recognized by the motion picture industry. Roomy, luxurious chairs . . . seating built to fit the body—to correctly support the spine . . . to give the utmost in easy, natural comfort without slumping.

A comfortable chair of unusually attractive design that is meeting with the enthusiastic reception of theater owners and managers. Specially built for maximum sound absorption. Only one of the many American Seating Company types and styles of theatre seating.

Then followed acoustical research. It was found that seating had a direct bearing on the acoustics of the theatre . . . that properly built seating had a sound absorption value that assisted in producing more perfect sound effects. Chairs were built that stopped excessive reverberation, echo and hollow sounds—that helped sound reproduction and eliminated rasping noises, jumbling of words.

THE MODEL THEATRE

Serves as the Testing Laboratory for All Equipment Offered by Fulco

Every item of equipment necessary to the operation and maintenance of a modern motion picture theatre is submitted to the test of practical operation in the Fulton Model Theatre built and maintained at the headquarters of the E. E. Fulton Co.

Here the theatre owner, the architect and the technical man may observe demonstrations of equipment under actual operating conditions. Thus performance may be checked before final decision is made in the selection of needed apparatus or furnishings.

PROJECTION ACCESSORIES

The complete line of accessories now available for the well appointed projection room numbers many improved devices designed specifically to facilitate the work of the projectionist and contribute to finer results achieved in the presentation of talking pictures.

A check-up on the present equipment and comparison with improved devices now available may reveal the causes responsible for shortcomings present in the projection at your theatre—flaws for which inadequate equipment and not the projectionist are to blame.

F. H. Richardson

A THEATRE THAT TWO BOYS BUILT

IN YEARS PAST and gone I have looked at and examined many hundreds of theatres. I have visited and inspected theatres literally all over both the United States and Canada. But in all my travels I have never seen anything as impressively unique as the "Dewey Theatre" in Jersey City, built and owned by George and Morrow Applegate. George is but 18 years old, while Morrow is only 15.

At this "theatre" they put on programs (usually for children but quite often for grown-ups, too) lacking in only one of the prime characteristics of the theatre—an admission price. The "Dewey" is operated intermittently to entertain the boys and their friends.

The young exhibitors invited me to visit their theatre, inquiring whether I would care to see merely one or two short subjects, or a full two-hour show. Curiosity brought about an acceptance of the invitation, and at eight o'clock in the evening, Friend Daughter and I rang the bell of the Applegate residence. We were ushered in by Mr. Morrow Applegate, Sr., father of the two boys, and having been greeted by their charming mother, were conducted down a flight of stairs and to the basement, where we saw, beside a door, a handsome illuminated sign with the name of the theatre.

Entering the "Dewey" through a curtained door cut in a 12-inch concrete wall (the Dewey is thoroughly fire-proof), we stepped into the "auditorium," which is approximately eight feet wide and 15 feet deep. The seating arrangement consists of four neatly painted, cushioned benches (everything we are talking about is home-made, the product of the brains and hands of these two boys, assisted possibly to some extent by their dad). Each bench comfortably seats four adults or probably six of the younger generation. The total seating capacity is therefore 16 grown-ups. On the right, however, is an aisle in which chairs can be placed, thus adding considerably to the seating capacity.

Over the door is a tiny illuminated exit sign. The "proscenium" arch is approximately 3½ x 6 feet. Just inside the arch is a red silk draw curtain operated (get this!) by a motor controlled from the projection room. The sides of the stage are draped with blue silk, hung in graceful folds which display none of the usual "home-made" effects. Something like four feet in back of the red curtain is the screen, in front of which is another motor driven silk curtain, and between these two is a third one. All are well made and operate perfectly. The completeness of this little "theatre" is, everything considered, nothing less than astounding.

The projection room is approximately eight feet wide and five feet from front to back, with a ceiling about six feet, four inches high. It is thoroughly ventilated by a very clever home-made arrangement which will either remove air or blow it in. It may also be made to blow air over a hot water heating coil located under the back seat of the auditorium. In the center of the auditorium ceiling there is an opening through which air may be drawn out. There is even a sprinkling system attached to the rear wall, all ready for business.

Two Bell & Howell 16-mm. projectors are employed. These two projectors and the turntables alone represent an investment of over $1,100, so you can see dad has been pretty generous with the boys.

The turntables themselves are four in number, two being synchronous, and two non-synchronous. The synchronous tables rotate at 33⅓ r.p.m. and use standard theatre-size discs. The other tables rotate at regular phonograph speed and are, of course, smaller in diameter, to accommodate regular phonograph records.

There is a home-made dissolving stereopticion equipped with a six-tint color wheel (which, incidentally, enables the boys to put over an effect which goes even some regular commercial theatres one better).

The total supply of film on hand at the time of my visit was about 45 reels, many of which were stored in a neat home-made film cabinet. They are all of non-combustible film, of course. There is a spot lamp equipped with six-tint color wheel in the projection room, and in addition, two spot lamps located on the stage.

The dissolver is operated by means of a dimmer rheostat located immediately beneath the dissolver table. The rewinding table, about 18 inches long and 6 inches wide (16-mm. reels, remember) is attached to the rear wall of the projection room. Between its elements, attached to the table, is a complete film mending device, clamps and all. Truly, there seems to be nothing omitted in this theatre, for all practical purposes.

On the right wall, beside the entrance door, is a switch controlling all the current used in the theatre, save and except one pilot light in the projection room. Aside from the dimmer rheostat handling the dissolver, there are five other dimmers for controlling the various auditorium and stage lights and the spot lamps. There is also a switchboard by means of which the various stage curtain motors are controlled.

Out of all this two things stand out. First, all the equipment, except the projectors, has been built either totally by the boys themselves, or so thoroughly rebuilt by them that it is practically their own product. This includes even the Todd amplifier. That is to say, it was originally a Todd, but now may fairly be called an Applegate. Second, this little theatre is a one-man outfit. Either of the boys can, from the projection room itself, put on an entire show, handling all the equipment perfectly.

In addition to all this, these two boys have built a portable sound outfit, with which they can and do give shows in lodge rooms and churches and for weddings, etc.

The picture is, of course, small. It is 38 x 52 inches in size and is well projected. The light is sufficiently brilliant and is evenly distributed. The sound is very good. The column is made to fit the little auditorium perfectly, and the cone quality is excellent.

George

The color effects pulled off by those kids in that little theatre were little short of amazing. There are three colors available on the stage, and 12 in the two-color wheels. The curtains are handled expertly.

This whole thing started years ago, when George Applegate was six years old and Santa Claus made the mistake of leaving a magic lantern in his sock one Christmas. That started the youngster to give "shows" for the neighborhood kids. His keen interest soon caused his dad and mother to replace the toy with a 500-watt stereopticon and some slides, whereupon George soon had the stereo yelling for mercy, so it was replaced by a hand-cranked projector and some short strips of film. And then finally came the great big day in a small boy's life. A Pathex motor driven projector arrived!

By this time the younger son's interest was just as keen as was that of his brother, so his dad found he just could not stop at the Pathex. The two Bell & Howell 16-mm. projectors were installed, and later on the boys added sound attachments.

During all this time the little theatre was built up bit by bit, so that it might well be said these two boys have spent their lives erecting a theatre. My compliments to the Applegate boys and their parents. They have done a really wonderful thing. I rather expect them to enter the motion picture industry, which can hardly fail to welcome those who have made so remarkable a bid for its favor.

ON SCHOOLS OF PROJECTION

FROM TRENTON, N. J., comes this letter: "For some time I have been thinking about joining a school of projection and photography. Would like to have your opinion as to whether $250 for such a school is too much to invest in this type of training."

I grow weary of answering this particular question, but I suppose it must be done, since day by day young men get the idea that they want either to become motion picture projectionists or photographers.

As to what value a course in a school of photography might have, I cannot say since I am not a photographer. As to projection, I would consider the expenditure of such a sum to be largely in the nature of throwing it away.

I have often said this and I say it again: First, the projection field is right now very much overcrowded, there being very many competent projectionists looking for jobs which are not to be had. Second, while a school course may provide a certain amount of knowledge, no school I have ever heard of provides sufficient training. The graduate student therefore is left, not in a half-baked, but in a one-fourth-baked condition, to enter into competition against the very many competent projectionists now out of work. What earthly chance would the graduate have? None.

The way into the projection field is no longer an easy one. The only way promising real success is to secure some sort of position in a theatre, preferably, of course, that of an apprentice to the projectionist.

"JUST A MINUTE PLEASE"

FROM A correspondent in Louisville, Ky., comes the following: "Two incidents in connection with the showing of 'Trader Horn' at one of the Louisville theatres carried one back to the dim distant days of the past, when delays were frequent and the 'Just a Minute Please' slide was kept polished up for frequent use.

"At a very interesting point in the action of the final run of the evening, the screen went blank and remained that way for a period of minutes. Quickly some chap let out a piercing whistle, which was at once repeated by others. There were several good loud cat-calls, etc., all reminders of days now vanished.

"In the old days, the 'Just a Minute Please' slide was quickly flashed on the screen. In this case it remained blank. Finally the picture returned and all was well. It developed that the trouble was due to the blowing of a tube."

Accidents are of course not always avoidable. However, I have been attending shows in New York City for a good many years and may with perfect honesty say that not once in the past 10 years have I ever seen a show stopped, nor can I remember having more than once or twice heard of incidents where that sort of thing occurred in a Broadway theatre. I set this forth as evidence that where men are permitted and required to keep their equipment in perfect condition, and know very well that a stop in a show would mean all kinds of trouble for them, probably to the extent of discharge for every man implicated, stops seldom, if ever, occur.

I can make no positive statement in this case, but would be willing to wager considerable money that if all the facts were known it would become evident that the stoppage in question was directly or indirectly due to some fault, either on the part of the theatre management or the pro-

New Light Exceeds . . . Sun's Brilliancy

MODERN projection calls for a light source equaling and in some cases exceeding the brilliancy of the sun itself.

Sound, color, and wide films, with long throws on porous screens now demanded by the modern theatre, have called for a most intense and active program of research and development to keep National Projector Carbons ahead of the requirements of modern projection.

The concentration of large quantities of electrical energy in slender carbons, while keeping the light confined to a point source, represents a most remarkable advance in lighting practice.

The results of this development program have been the production of National Projector Carbons of the highest quality with economies which make carbon costs extremely low in comparison with other important items needed for the successful operation of the theatre.

NATIONAL PROJECTOR CARBONS

jection staff. My own guess would be that either the management refused to supply spare tubes, or the tubes were not examined and tested often enough.

A stop in a show nowadays is almost unthinkable. It is in the nature of a projection monstrosity. It interrupts the entertainment of that particular audience. It destroys all the illusion.

If the cause of this particular stoppage lies in the manager's office, then the manager should be thoroughly ashamed of it. If the fault is one due to any lapse on the part of the projection staff, then the man or men responsible should be made to understand that sort of thing will not be tolerated.

AN INTERESTING CHANGEOVER DEVICE

THE OTHER DAY I found a letter received from the Golden Gate theatre projectionists, written by W. G. Reinhardt of the San Francisco chapter of The American Projection Society, who says:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: I hand you herewith a sketch of the sound changeover device we demonstrated to you at the Golden Gate theatre, a diagram of which you wished to publish. I think you will find the drawing sufficiently explanatory, but I will add a word or two concerning the adjustment of the signal.

"After the signal is installed on the projector mechanism, the best procedure is to thread the mechanism with film and then turn the adjustment screw until it barely makes contact with the guide roller. Then by backing off this same screw from one-half to three-quarters of a turn, the adjustment will be found to be about right.

"As regards the cutting of the film, you will note the indentations, as shown in the sketch, are on the side opposite the sound track. These indentations may be cut to suit the projectionist's desire for a longer or shorter visual or audible signal-bell or light.

"As you know, we are using an RCA installation with d.c. motors, which require about a seven-second pickup. We use two indentations, one for a motor start seven feet from the end of the reel, and another placed one foot from the end as a changeover cue."

HOW TO MAKE A SOLENOID COIL

IN A RECENT letter, Loyd Corwin, projectionist at the Pastime theatre in Logan, Ia., wants to know "how to make a solenoid coil to attach to a changeover dowser." He says, "I have a dowser as shown in the drawing (Fig. 1) and would like to cause it to be magnetically operated. I would like to make it so it will operate off a three-volt transformer, though can make other arrangements if necessary."

Forget the three-volt stuff, Brother Corwin. It can't be done! I was not myself certain as to just how such a coil should be made, so took your letter down to the projection department of Loew's and they very kindly prepared the necessary drawing and instructions.

The equipment consists of two solenoid coils wound in reverse direction, each having a resistance of approximately 800 ohms. Use enameled wire, either No. 32 or 34, for the winding. Connect as shown. These coils wired to suitable foot switches, as per diagram (Fig. 2), will pull the dowser plunger in the direction of the switch you close.

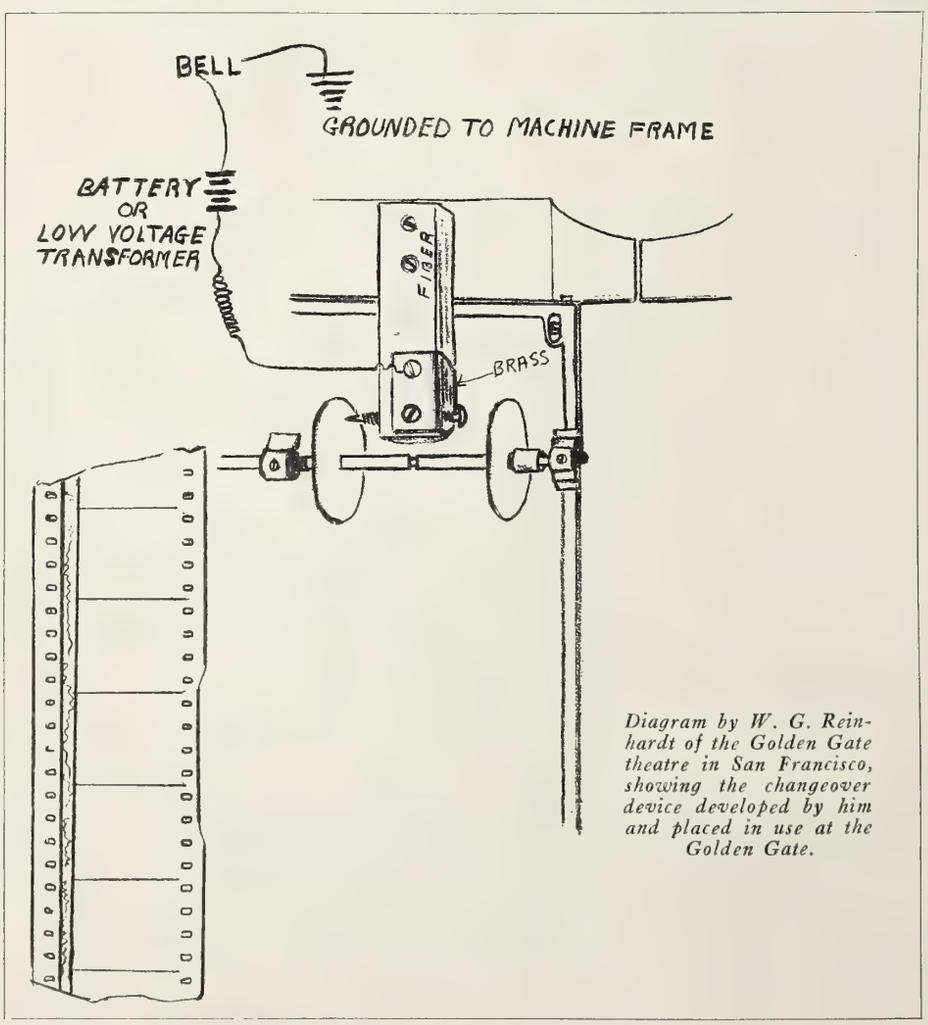

Diagram by W. G. Reinhardt of the Golden Gate theatre in San Francisco, showing the changeover device developed by him and placed in use at the Golden Gate.

THE MEN WHO STRIVE ON UNSEEN

I NOTE in the March issue of the American Cinematographer, the official paper of the American Society of Cinematographers, under the heading, "What Hall Says," the following:

"For the first time in many a moon the picture critics on daily papers took occasion, on the opening of 'East Lynne,' to give special mention to the men who photographed the picture. It was really gratifying to this writer, who has always fought to bring the cameramen into the limelight where they belong. Why isn't this done more frequently?"

Hall says much more, and I sincerely wish that each man should have full credit, but I can tell Friend Hall just why critics don't pay much attention to the cameraman. It is exactly for the same reason that the projectionist gets little or no credit for his work. It is because, like the projectionist, he is not in what we call the limelight. He, the cameraman, is not within view of audiences. His work is accepted as a part and parcel of the whole, just the same as excellence of film development is, or as any one of many other necessary things are. It is a part of the cameraman's job to work unseen—and to put forth excellence in performance which is unheralded and unsung.

For years I have seen the name of cameramen blazoned forth on the screen, but of them all I cannot name one. Audiences see the same names, but I will wager $10 to a Woolworth collar button that not one in a thousand theatre patrons could name a single cameraman, while not one in 25,000 could name two of them. And after all, what earthly good would it do the cameraman if they did?

True, the cameraman is highly skilled, but he must be that to get a job and hold it, or even to get it at all. His skill brings financial reward, but never in this wide world will it bring much fame, save among producers and those with whom he works.

It must also be remembered that the skill of many others is just exactly as important as that of the cameraman, because without it the work of the cameraman would vary from poor to punk, insofar as concerns the ultimate buyer, the theatre patrons. Let the development room fall down on its job and where, oh, where is the excellence of camera work going to land? Let the projectionist fall down on his job, and of what earthly good is excellence in camera work? And so on through many items.

I wish we might all receive full credit for all we do. Without excellence in camera work nothing else could be good, but just the same, since camera work cannot possibly be worth while unless many other things also are good, it seems to follow that those others, the projectionist, for example, should be just as much entitled to favorable comment by the critics as the work of the cameraman. I have never believed that the cluttering up of the theatre screen with the names of a lot of folks who do not appear thereon, with the single possible exception of the director, is of any real benefit to those persons, and certainly it is more or less of an annoyance to theatre patrons.

I have, however, often thought, and do believe, that if the name of the projectionist himself could appear on the screen it would be a very strong stimulant to excellence in projection work. Certainly a man would not feel very much like permitting punk projection work to follow his own name.

TO SETTLE AN ARGUMENT

RECENTLY Thomas L. Grady of Red Wing, Minn., asked, "I had an argument with a visiting projectionist a few days ago. He claimed that Erpi had only about 100 service engineers. I believe they have many more than that. Who is correct?"

You are right. While I do not know the exact number, Erpi has either a few under or over 450 service engineers in the field and a very fine body of men they are!

They are divided in something like 225 locations. They service more than 5,000 Western Electric installations. In New York City there are about 35 resident engineers, in Chicago about 25. Los Angeles has about 20, Philadelphia about 15, Boston the same, and Kansas City, 10.

People Like Changing Lights—Changing Color—As Well As You Like Profits

You may not hear the public demand for color, light and personalities but it is there just the same.

People go to the theater to be amused and to a particular theater that entertains the most. To keep crowds coming requires variety—infinite variety.

The whole possibilities are within an (FA) Major System of Lighting Control. Easily, simply and with great flexibility it will provide for every lighting requirement.

Cable Address—SOSOUND, New York

WRITTEN IN APPRECIATION

I QUOTE a letter from W. G. Samhammer, secretary of a local that I shall not name:

"It is now four months since I wrote you concerning the sound service here. I am really ashamed of myself. Will save you the trouble of looking up the letter by refreshing your memory as follows:

"The trouble concerned a service engineer, who would have received every consideration if he had not talked too much. We made no complaint until he caused dissatisfaction among our members. He did not seem to know that he might have been much better equipped with knowledge of his work.

"About two weeks after I had written you, we heard from the company office. About one month later the man was replaced by another, who is well up in his work and the most willing engineer it has ever been my pleasure to meet. Beside all that he is positively a marvel of good nature. How I do love to watch a man work who knows what he is doing—and never needs to be reminded that something is wrong! He always hears us the first time, and we get attention immediately.

"Therefore, Brother Richardson, all of us thank you! I heard your lecture last year and hope we may have that pleasure again some time in the future. Of course you are never long out of my thoughts, as I read the department (which I think deserves more space) in BETTER THEATRES every month, and every week in the weekly HERALD. It is my opinion that the importance of projection deserves considerable more space than is alloted to you. Besides I like to read about it. Thank you again and best regards from us all."

Letters of this character are not at all infrequent. They constitute the greatest pleasure and satisfaction incident to the work I am doing. Money is both important and good. There could be more of it (business management please take note), but over and above actual living requirements, there is something greater and better than money, and that is the satisfaction of knowing the work you are doing is helping others.

In this particular insident I took the matter up with the head of the company in question, with whom a complaint concerning one of their men was not especially welcome. However, he took action and evidently the results are satisfactory.

AS IT WAS NOT LONG AGO

I WAS just looking over the first edition of the Projection department in February 19, 1910, issue of the Moving Picture World. I have said the department is 22 years old, but I find I was in error. It won't be until early next year.

On the opposite page from the "Operators Page," as the department was then called, appeared the following article, entitled, "Picture Business in Canada," in which R. W. Hulbert, an exhibitor of Toronto, and before that of London, England, set forth his views. In this article occurs the following interesting description of that time:

"In Canada the length of the program depends upon the price of admission. We show either two or three reels. We get so many people who want to see the show that there is a tendency to rush the show through too quickly, thus giving them too jerky a movement."

Mr. Hulbert was then asked the question, "Do you go in for much music with the pictures?"

"Oh, yes," he replied. "We have both piano and orchestra. On Saturday nights when there is a full orchestra we charge extra for admission. This is done more with a view to relieving congestion on Saturday nights. We show very little comics. Generally we have one reel of scenic and educational, one reel of dramatic, and if there are three reels, one reel of comics to get a well balanced program."

And there you have the show of 1910. I thought it would be amusing for the younger men to compare that program with today's program in the smallest theatres we have. If you will examine the various issues of the Moving Picture World Projection Department, very soon after us starting in 1910, you will see where I then predicted the time would come when a motion picture show would last from two to two and one-half hours, with the admission price well up to a dollar—for which wild statement several people wrote the Moving Picture World to the effect that man Richardson had surely gone just plain crazy.

A REMINDER OF NICK POWER

THE INTERNATIONAL Projector Corporation has moved its offices from the third floor of 90 Gold Street, to the fifth floor of 96 Gold Street. Being down there the other day it struck my fancy to go up into the place where the old offices were for so many years. In a way it was a mental shock, for the old office of Edward Earl, late president of the Nicholas Power Company, was filled up with drawing boards, and they were getting ready to put machines in the spot where Nicholas Power's desk once stood. And you know, after all, Nicholas Power was the first man who began to make improvements in the motion picture projection apparatus.

When Thomas Edison got out a projector, that settled it. Improvements were seldom thereafter made on that model. When Nicholas Power got out a model, the darned thing wasn't out a week before old "Nick," as his friends called him—at least behind his back—started making improvements on it.

THE STEPS IN DAILY PREPARATION

THE FOLLOWING letter has come from George L. Mandanhall of Waycross, Ga.:

"Recently I visited Jacksonville, Fla. While there I had an argument with a Jacksonville projectionist concerning the various duties the projectionist should perform before starting the show each day. We could not agree, and I am now asking you, Mr. Richardson, to be kind enough to tell us just what the projectionist should do before he starts the show each day."

First, the theatre management should require one hour of extra service in equipment inspection daily and should be very willing to pay for it.

Second, if the management refuses to pay, then the real projectionist will donate the time rather than run the chance of obtaining poor results in his work.

Third, upon arrival the floor should be thoroughly cleaned, using a vacuum, if one is supplied, because dust and film don't fit well together.

Fourth, test each individual horn, making sure each one is functioning as nearly as possible perfectly, and that the sound volume from each is equal.

Fifth, take off any batteries which are on charge, being certain that this is done at least half an hour before use.

Sixth, make certain that all batteries are in good condition and that they have water.

Seventh, oil the projectors and start them running, with duplicate test film in, making certain that each gives equal volume at equal fader setting. Examine all meter readings and make certain they are as they should be. Stop projectors, remove film and clean projector mechanism, lamp and lamphouse interior thoroughly, making sure that all wires are okay and that all connections are tight. Clean condensers or reflectors and projection lens.

Eighth, make sure that all tubes are right.

Ninth, examine the exciting lamp, making certain its filament is perfectly straight and its globe perfectly clean, both inside and out. Examine exciting lamp optical system.

Tenth, examine sound sprockets.

Eleventh, if there be two shifts of projectionists, make sure there is or is not any message left by the former shift, and that no change has been made in schedule.

Twelfth, examine the film track from upper magazine to take-up, making sure there is no adhesion at any point which might scratch the film, that all sprockets and their idlers are in perfect condition and adjustment, examining intermittent sprocket teeth under a magnifying glass for undercut.

Thirteenth, test all switches and fuses to see that contacts are tight.

Fourteenth, examine the rewinder to make sure it is in perfect alignment, unless it be of the sort which is permanently anchored in such manner that the elements cannot get out of line.

Fifteenth, examine the new show, if any, making report to manager of all mechanical defects found therein, and protest if such imperfections are found as will cause poor work or set up fire hazard.

Sixteenth, make sure that all spare parts, such as exciting lamps, which mey be required for quick use, are in their proper place and available for instant replacements.

There, that is all that occurs to me at the moment. True, there are a few of these things which need not be done every day, but just the same it is a mighty good scheme to include them in the daily inspection, and they will only require a few moments.

Once each week the room and all equipment should be given a very thorough cleaning, which should include sucking all dust off the walls and ceiling with a vacuum. Also, once each week all equipment should be given an extra-careful inspection. Have a fixed day upon which to do this and consider it is an imperative duty which cannot be delayed. Otherwise the average man will feed himself most excellent excuses for putting it off until next day, and that soon leads to more or less complete neglect.

THE PROJECTIONISTS' GROWING ABILITY

WHEN SOUND was literally dumped into the hands of projectionists, the service engineer was just about as vitally necessary as the horns themselves. Projectionists were forced, almost without warning, to take full charge of complicated, delicate apparatus, which in order to perform its duties acceptably, must function near-perfectly at all times. He, the projectionist, was merely given a short, intensive course of instruction while the apparatus was being installed. He was told to "move this," "let that alone," and to do or don't do this, that or the other. Then a service engineer remained on the job a few days, and that was that. Few service engineers were available, and those few themselves had oodles of things to learn about theatre sound equipment. Verily, it was a tough game!

I hold it to be a very wonderful thing that projectionists were able to rise to the occasion and do what they did under such impossible conditions. Naturally under the situation above outlined, the service engineer and his knowledge was all that saved the day. Without him the projection staff would have been just plain "sunk" as soon as the installation engineers departed. Sound would quickly thereafter have become a mere blare of noise, as unpleasant as it would have been unintelligible.

However, thanks to the service engineers and other agencies, plus the scare of their lives when sound came, projectionists advanced rapidly in knowledge. In fact, it may be truthfully said that projectionists, taking them as a whole, have acquired more technical knowledge since sound came than they did in all the quarter of a century that went before. They have, for the most part, become well posted on many of the finer points in motion picture projection and its equipment.

Until sound arrived one never knew when he addressed a projectionist concerning technical matters pertaining to projection, whether he would meet with some degree of interest or with a more or less covert sneer.

Today it is very different. Entering a projection room I almost invariably find technical discussion to be eagerly welcomed, also I find the men able to discuss both sound and projection intelligently, and often very ably, too, all of which leads up to the thought behind this article.

In the beginning the service engineer was, as I have said, vitally necessary. His visits must be periodic and frequent, else disaster might step out of its niche, say hello and proceed to raise (deleted) with just about everything.

This is no longer true, except in a very restricted sense. The average projectionist of today can, I believe, cope with almost any ordinary emergency. He can keep sound equipment in at least a very good state of repair, except that, of course, with the more complicated equipments it is still and probably always will be necessary that a service engineer visit the theatre at regular, gradually lengthening periods and test out certain portions of the equipment with suitable instruments, which latter could not be expected to form a part of the regular theatre equipment.

I believe it is only fair and right, everything considered, that the modern projectionist be obliged to undergo an examination once each year, to the end that the exhibitor, the union and others interested know that he has not only kept up-to-date, but has advanced at least reasonably in the matter of knowledge. It seems entirely reasonable that the exhibitor is entitled to know just how capable the men in his projection room are and to form some intelligent opinion as to when they may be expected to handle the equipment with either a minimum of servicing by engineers, or without it at all, save possibly in rare emergencies.

The servicing charge is a heavy one. Up to this time there seems to be no possibility of complaint with it, considering all the circumstances. However, it would seem the time now approaches when the projectionist may reasonably have had ample opportunity for the acquisition of pretty accurate, complete knowledge of the equipment and its vagaries, and that servicing may, subject to reasonable limitations, be dispensed with rather soon.

THAT LAST TELLING BLOW

I WAS RAISED on a farm in Southern Iowa, living there during the first 10 years of my life and plowed many an acre of ground and cultivated hundreds of acres of corn. Afterward, down in Linn County, Missouri, I farmed.

There was timber on the Missouri farm, and many a sturdy oak tree from eight to 12 inches through, I actually felled with a single blow of the axe. That is neither a lie nor an example of romancing. It is perfectly true, but it so happens that the blow I have in mind was the last one delivered. Up until that blow the tree stood. When it was delivered the tree toppled and fell.

Why all that fantastic line of talk, you ask?

Because the "last blow" very often spells success, or lack of it causes one to fail to attain to the pinnacle, in projection or anything else.

This is true, gentlemen. If a man has mental power and courage and will keep the axe of endeavor swinging long enough and strong enough, the "last blow" point will finally be reached, though trees of knowledge and ability are often of big diameter and must have many "blows" before they will finally topple.

HOW HE STOPPED INTERFERENCE

A LETTER from James Hudson Johnson, supervisor of projection for the Macris Operating Corporation, Wellsville, N. Y., says, "In the March 14th issue, I noticed a complaint from the Muse-U theatre, Tularosa, N. M. Their complaint was noise interference from their arc control. I think I can present the solution to their trouble.

"We had exactly the same thing occur with Motiograph arcs on Western Electric in one of our theatres. After spending quite a bit of time and money, we finally discovered that an interference filter and line noise reducer manufactured by the Leslie Muter Company, Chicago, cleared up the trouble with an outlay of only $4.50 per projector."

THE WILL TO DO

RECENTLY I came across some verses which I believe should be laid before you. They are entitled "The Will To Do." The verses are short, so may I suggest that you read them carefully. I think there was never more truth set forth.

It's not the shape of your head, you know,
Nor the steely glint of your eye.
It's not the make of the car you own
Nor the sparkler that livens your tie.
It's not how determined you think you'll be,
Nor a body that's full of zest.
It's the will to work and the will to do
That will show you up at your best.

It's not your ancestral blood that counts
Nor your family coat of arms.
It's not the name of your church that helps,
Nor a string of good-luck charms.
It's not the savoir faire you affect,
Nor the ultra style of your clothes.
It's the will to work and the will to do
From which your achievement grows.

NEW SPLICING METHOD

● Eastman is now marketing the method of treating the sound track at splices developed some time ago by its laboratories. The new patching system is designed to obviate the condition in which imperfect painting of the sound track at splices frequently caused noises as objectionable as the extraneous sounds made by the reproducing system when an untreated patch went through.

The patch applied and the patch itself.

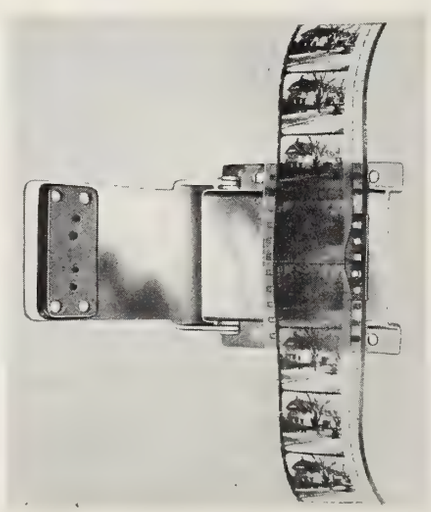
Even in the laboratories, where less dissatisfaction was felt with the old system than in the projection room, the new method has proved to allow greater speed and accuracy.

The material finally adopted for the patch, after many substances were tried unsuccessfully, was a very thin clear film base coated with emulsion and exposed and developed to produce opacity. The patches are five perforations long and are cut in a shape designed to cover the sound track completely for a distance equal to the width of a standard splice, but tapering away toward each extremity until the sound track is entirely exposed. When a properly mounted patch passes through the reproducer, the light reaching the photoelectric cell from the sound record is reduced gradually to an insignificant intensity and so continues until the splice has passed, after which the light passing through the sound record gradually attains its normal intensity. The resulting diminution of sound lasts not long enough to be perceptible.



How the patch is applied.

Mounting of a patch, after completion of a splice, is very similar to the process of splicing. Four pins on the patcher fit the film perforations so closely that pressure clips for holding the film are unnecessary. Cement is rapidly applied with a camel's hair brush to the shiny side of the patch, which comes into contact with the shiny side of the film. Five seconds' pressure with the pressure plate of the patcher is sufficient to permit drying of the cement.

THREE SCREEN TYPES

● Additions to the screen line of the Beaded Screen Corporation of New York, now place on the market three models of that company's sound screen. They are called "Vocalite," "Superlite" and "Chromolite," and are in addition to its regular list of screens.

The company has also instituted a time payment plan for its new numbers.

The company claims for "Vocalite," its featured product, the property of giving the optical impression of depth. This screen is surfaced with crystal pearl beads.

A.C. POWER SUPPLY

● The Weber Machine Corporation of Rochester, N. Y., is marketing a new a.c. sound equipment power supply of uninterrupted current to exciter lamps and the filaments of the head amplifier tubes, and a "B" unit for supplying current plate voltage to the head amplifier tubes and photoelectric cells.

The "A" unit is equipped with two 6-ampere rectifier tubes, in connection with a brute filter system. An automatic relay is included in the circuit, functioning to maintain a constant output voltage by cutting an equalizing resistance when the fader is at zero position.

The "B" unit is equipped with a multi-stage filter system, in connection with standard 280-type tube for rectification.

NEW SAFETY DEVICE

● The Film Fire Prevention Company, Inc., Philadelphia, has placed on the market a new fire prevention device for projectors. It has been approved, we are informed, by the National Board of Fire Underwriters and numerous fire marshals.

The controls are an assembly of seven distinct parts. Parts one and two are an upper and lower fire throat, or valve, which automatically close if the film catches on fire, breaks or loses its tension. The fire throats are mechanically operated. Part three is the dowser head. Part four and five are the upper and lower loop switches.

Part six is a centrifugal switch or governor, which operates when the speed of the projector drops too far below the required rate. Operation causes dowser to drop and motor to stop. Part seven is a magnetic control switch, which carries power to the motor and switches and will break circuits upon faulty operation. The time required from the moment of faulty operation of the projector until the dowser drops and the motor circuit is broken, is one-sixteenth of a second.

TUBE PRICES CUT

- The Arcturus Radio Tube Company of Newark, N. J., has announced price reductions on the type 127, 551 variable-mu, and PZ Pentode tubes. According to C. E. Stahl, general manager of Arcturus, this reduction leaves the type 127 the only tube not conforming to universal lists, it being now available also at competitive prices.

BATTERY TEST RESULTS

- The National Better Business Bureau has issued as a circular letter, a reprint of finidngs of the Bureau of Standards of the U. S. Department of Commerce, relative to various materials which are supposed to charge storage batteries, or materially improve the performance of the batteries.

Tests have been made on salts to be added to the battery electrolyte, the bureau concluding that these materials do not charge or improve batteries. It has been shown, according to the report, that batteries are not charged by changing the solutions, nor the charging time decreased.

NEW PORTABLE APPARATUS

- A new portable sound-on-film projector has been brought out by the Phototone Equipment Corporation of Indianapolis. Low intensity arc's for some models of this projector may be used in place of the Mazda 1,000-watt lamp which is ordinarily used.

The Phototone portable sound projector operates directly from 110-volts, 50 to 60 cycle, a.c. With the low intensity arc, a special rectifier is furnished. The amplifier supplies current for both the photocell and the exciter lamp. The projector uses straight feed to do away with any twist in the film. The magazines, fastened on the top and front of the projector case, are easily detachable for packing and carrying. The speaker case also contains the amplifier, rectifier and compartments for the film magazines. When packed for traveling, the outfit is in three pieces, the amplifier-speaker, the screen and the projector. The total weight is 195 pounds without the trunks. The trunks bring the weight up to 235 pounds.

Watching the Trend of Today

In this period of readjustment, the motion picture theatre is moulding its future. This is an inevitable phase of growth. Many have commented on a general tendency to resist any remoulding . . . then when resistance proves futile, the tendency to let the future shape itself. But the destiny of any human activity is largely in the hands of those whose lives are linked with it. The theatre manager . . . the architect . . . the engineer who is not content merely to wait blindly for whatever happens, will watch now each day's trend and endeavor to appraise its meaning. . . . Better Theatres is dedicated not alone to the purpose of giving direct practicable service, but to offer guideposts to the future, by reflecting the trend of today in theatre creation and operation.

General Equipment News and Comment

Conducted by G. J. Reid

LIGHTING CONDUCTOR

● An innovation, for New York theatres, at least, will mark the lighting of the Earl Carroll theatre when it opens to the public in August. The house will have a "lighting director," who really is nothing more nor less than a glorified electrician. He will sit in a small rail-enclosed box beside the orchestra leader, and in full evening dress will handle deftly the various and numerous changes of lighting effects necessary to any theatre of size which goes in for extensive stage presentations in a big way.

There will be no electrician garbed in overalls, standing backstage at his large panel switchboard, throwing switches here and there to produce those effects which go far to making entertainment on the stage all that it might be. He will, instead, use the electron tube control of theatre lighting, especially designed for the new theatre by the General Electric Company, which put the entire affair at his finger tips and gives him an opportunity to see just what is happening in the theatre as a result of his electrical machinations. He is now a color conductor, or director of light.

Furthermore, by means of the highly simplified new board, the turn of a small switch is all that is required to introduce an entirely new color scheme, or to "black out" the stage, house lights, or both.

It is the intention of the operators of this latest legitimate house on Broadway to use plenty of light dramatically. There will be 50 incandescent lighting circuits in all, 34 on the stage and 16 in the house, in addition to a large number of arc lighting circuits. Color master controls will be provided for both stage and house, in addition to several different master controls and black-out controls, both for stage and house and for each separately.

A total of 367,000 watts is the value of all the incandescent lights to be used. The new method of control on the board does not handle large amounts of power directly, but does so through the medium of the electron tubes and the reactor system.

The lighting control console will resemble a desk with raised sides and back, being approximately six feet long, five feet high and three feet deep. The operator will stand or sit at this console, viewing the stage over the top. While one scene or action is taking place, he will be arranging the setup for the next scene, with the new lighting scheme being introduced at the proper moment with the turn of a switch.

SEAT COVERING TESTS

● The Mohair Institute of Chicago, makers of upholsteries for theatre seats, has completed tests that determine the value of that material in reducing the danger of stained clothing due to perspiration. The tests were begun on the theory that the dye in some other types of theatre seat coverings are apt to run during warm weather.

Mohair velvet, or velmo, is claimed to have fast dyes. But not only that, it is pointed out, the structure of the Angora goat hairs, of which it is made, is almost never guilty of causing perspiration stains, the tests are reported to have shown.

PRICES REDUCED

● The National Theatre Supply Company has announced substantial price reductions on numerous staple supply items, effective July 1. The drop is from 10% to 33⅓% to the consumer.

The company points out that this reduction is not temporary, but is a definite move for a downward revision in prices of theatre supplies. This is attributed to manufacturing and distributing economies which have been effected. New distributing arrangements on several new lines of theatre equipment may result in further downward price revision as a consequence of increased sales volume.

BY WAY OF NEWS

● The New York offices of the Frank Adam Electric Company have been removed to 419 West 54th Street, with new telephone numbers listed as Columbus 5-6861 and Columbus 5-6862. The company warehouse at the new address carries in stock the complete line of panel boards, cabinets, fan hangers, floor boxes and other items. Fred G. Kraut, manager of the Atlantic Coast territories, remains in charge.

D. J. Quammen has been appointed manager of the Philadelphia district office of Cutler-Hammer, Inc., manufacturers of electric motor controls and allied apparatus, with headquarters in Milwaukee. Quammen succeeds F. J. Burd, who becomes assistant manager of the Chicago office of Cutler-Hammer. Burd will be in charge of industrial sales in the Chicago district and of the company's new paper machine drive throughout the country. Quammen has been connected with the Philadelphia office for the past five years as sales engineer.

4,820 YARDS OF CARPET

● Four new Warner theatres, the Warner in Cleveland, the Palace in Orange, N. J., the Maryland in Hagerstown, and the Earl in Washington, D. C., all equipped with Scotia Velvet carpet, made by the Mohawk Carpet Mills of New York, have a total yardage of these carpetings of 4,820. The Mohawk axminster was chosen for the redecoration of the Warner Riverside in Bristol, Pa., where 135 yards were required to complete the job.

All these installations were handled through Continental Theatres Accessories, Inc., of New York.

In the four years since March, 1927, when the rug in the huge rotunda of the New York Roxy theatre was put down, it is estimated some 25,000,000 people have trod up on it, which makes a total of 1,500,000,000 footsteps. The rug, a giant two-ton oval Mohawk chenille, measures 58 feet long and 41 feet wide. Larger rugs have been produced since, but at the time the Roxy rug was the largest in the world.

Manager C. W. Griswold says after four years: "In spite of this record-breaking wear and constant cleanings, the rug still retains its beauty of color and design and its deep softness and resilience. It is still one of the showpieces of the theatre, despite the millions who have walked upon it."

PLANNING THE THEATRE

A SERVICE CONDUCTED BY PETER M. HULSKEN, A. I. A.

The Question:

CAN A 600-seat moving picture house be built on a lot 37½x100 feet? If so, what would be the cost (approximately) of the equipment only, not the building? Would there be room for two stores?—H. R. C.

The Answer:

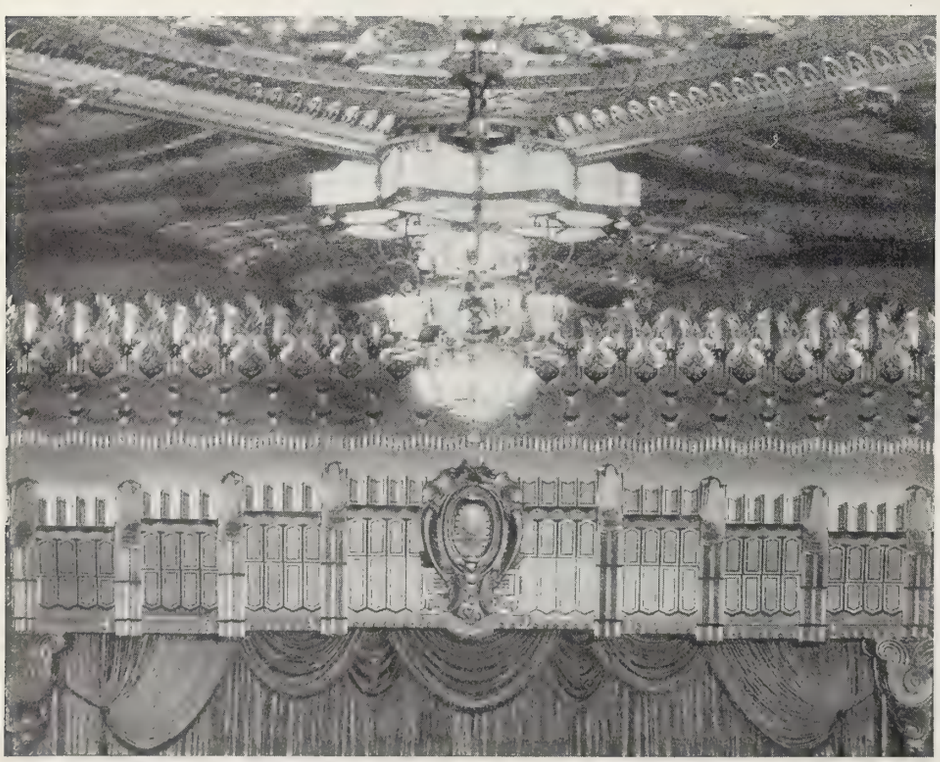
IN ANSWER to your inquiry, if your lot is only 37½ feet by 100 feet, I believe it would be entirely too small for a theatre of 600 seats and there would not be any room for stores unless they are rather small.

If we take the frontage of the building, 37½ feet, we should need at least a 12 foot lobby. Taking that off with the thickness of the walls, it would leave us about a 11 foot width for each store. Say that we make the lobby 15 feet deep. That would give us a store of 11 feet by 15 feet deep, then it would leave us 85 feet for the theatre proper. From this 85 feet we should take off at least 8 feet for the foyer, 10 feet for an apron, and 12 feet for space between the apron the first row of seats, which would leave us a space of 65 feet for the seats. Taking the seats at 30 inches back to back, would leave us 26 rows, and as we will have 17 seats in a row, according to the width of the house, we would have a total capacity of 442 seats, and at this rating everything is as compact as it possibly can be.

The cost of your equipment with two modern projectors, a screen, seats, carpets, electric lighting fixtures, decorating, marquee, display frames, etc., would be around $10,000.

NOTE:

IN THIS department Better Theatres will be glad to ansyer questions pertaining to the preliminary consideration involved in the planning of a new theing one. Only requests for ideas will atre or in the remodeling of an existbe answered, since this department cannot assume the practical functions of an architect. All communications intended for this department should be addressed to "Better Theatres," 1790 Broadway, New York. They will be answered in this department. None will be answered by mail. Although only initials will be used in signing the questions published, it is a requirement that all letters bear the signature and address of their writers. The replies will be prepared personally by Mr. Hulsken, who is a practical architect and a member of the American Institute of Architects.



Details of features at proscenium arch, Warner theatre, Beverly Hills, Cal. E. Marcus Priteca, architect. Interior decoration by Robert E. Power Studio.

The Question:

I AM thinking some day of building a motion picture house and would like your opinion on the following:

I am going to build a cheap building, about 22x70 feet. How many will this seat? This dimension is the auditorium.

About how much will the booth cost for two machines?

Do you think the —— projector with 1,000-watt bulb, "no transformer," would be all right? Does the sound-on-film attachment work satisfactory on a machine of this type?

Is a muslin screen that I could make myself all right in a small place like this? Do you think it would be necessary to have the building treated for acoustics for fairly good sound? I have attended theatres with and without, and I fail to see any difference.

Perhaps you will not want to bother answering these simple things, but I have not had any experience in a picture house but have had considerable with portable projection.—A. C. B.

The Answer:

IN ANSWER to your inquiry, I understand that 22 feet by 70 feet is the size for the auditorium exclusive of foyer and lobby and stage or apron. This is a rather small-sized auditorium, as you could get only get about 216 seats, at most, in such a space. A two-machine booth made of concrete, if standing on the floor and not to be supported on columns and girders, could be built for around $500.

I have had no experience with the projector which you mentioned. I would advise you to investigate some theatres in which this equipment is installed, then judge for yourself.

I do not think that a muslin screen is very up-to-date. To obtain the best projection you had better purchase a screen of standard make.

I certainly would advise you to treat your building acoustically. You do not have to go to very great expense. You might use acoustic material in your plaster, which would cost you very little more than using ordinary plaster.

You state that you failed to see any difference in theatres which were treated acoustically and those which were not. You must have inspected houses in which no acoustical requirements were necessary. They, however, are very scarce, as by taking an instrument test of sound it will certainly show which houses are best, those so treated or the ones not so treated.

is also operated by Fox and located in the same block. If they would like to see the picture at that house, an usher escorts them over to the theatre and sees that they are taken care of. When either of these methods fail, the patron's money is refunded.

It is not unusual for the staff to handle 1,491 patrons in this 1,219-seat house without a complaint. Recently, when a fire in an adjacent store building threatened a panic in the theatre, the ushers succeeded in emptying the house in less than two minutes without any disorder whatever. The efficient and military manner in which the patrons were handled at this time resulted in each of the ushers being awarded a medal by the Milwaukee fire chief.

A survey conducted in other houses before placing this plan into effect may show that the voluntary selection of seats differs. In Mr. Dawson's estimation there is no doubt of this fact. In a theatre featuring stage shows or vaudeville, the tendency will be to fill the front seats first. In another house having a balcony and doing a good kiddie and young people's business, the trend will perhaps be toward the first rows in the balcony. Consequently it is important that the survey be made in order to determine the voluntary selection of seats over a period of time, which includes various pictures, weather conditions, etc.

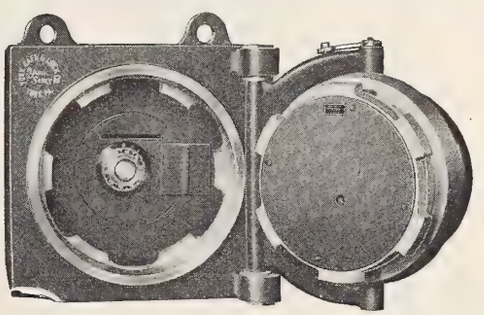
Between features at the Strand the house lights are lit, and the audience is permitted to move about as it pleases. However, during the showing of the picture, a patron is not permitted to change from one far section of the house to the other, under ordinary circumstances. Since the system has been in effect, the public has been educated to its operation, and for the most part has learned that it is fair and equitable and for its own benefit, and patrons therefore are willing to cooperate to the fullest extent.

Not only the appearance and actions of the ushers, but their tone of voice has also been taken into consideration in connection with their training. Furthermore, in order to acquaint the public with the time of the next feature, a large clock is suspended in the lobby pointing to the time when the next feature starts.

Everything in the theatre has been charted. Mr. Dawson has in his possession two large charts which give the complete information concerning the operation of the house and the location of everything in the house. After an hour's delay, a man unfamiliar with the theatre would know where everything is and the persons designated to take care of it. He would know how many bulbs there are in a certain

PROTECTION FROM HOLD-UPS AS WELL AS BURGLARS

THE York Round Door Chest is not only thoroughly burglar proof. When desired, it may also be provided with an ingenious additional protection against the activities of bandits and hold-up men—the "Hold-up Partition". As a surplus of money is accumulated over the average amount for making change, it is slipped into the interior through the slot shown in the illustration. The operation of the inner door, however, is in the hands of an executive or trusted employe who collects the money at suitable intervals. The "Hold-up Partition" thus offers a disconcerting obstruction to bandits who attempt raids during business hours.



The York Chest, when installed, is anchored in a solid concrete block, giving complete protection against fire. It cannot be removed from the building or attacked at any point except the heavy, thief-proof door. The saving in burglary insurance alone will pay for the York Chest in a reasonable length of time.

Illustrated folder describing the York Round Door Chest in detail will be sent gladly on request. Write for it today.

section of the house, or any other information concerning the theatre. These charts are always available to the ushers who may desire to know more about the house.

Because of this, the ushers feel that they are a part of the theatre and take a personal interest in it. Recently there were certain sections of the house that needed renovating, and one morning when Mr. Dawson came down, the staff was on hand in their old clothes, busily engaged in the necessary work. It is because this type of spirit is present that the theatre is able to function as successfully as it does.

The object of the seating plan as adopted by the house, is to satisfy every person in the best possible manner and at the same time to fill every available seat. To do this successfully, courtesy and diplomacy is necessary, but the Strand has worked the system to a point where the refunds and complaining patrons are very few. This may be a happy local condition. But it also may be one that proper application might make possible quite generally. In fact, the Fox organization has endorsed the plan, and it has been placed in use in several other houses on the Fox Midwesco circuit, in a form to suit the individual requirements of each house.

The winner of the beauty contest refused to go to New York and later sued the film company for damages, contending that the latter had failed to employ her in the production of a film "as one of the main astistic characters therein."

However, since the winner had herself breached the contract by failure to go to New York, the higher court refused to hold the film company liable, and said:

"As plaintiff (winner) refused to go to New York, or to do anything further under the contract, the court below ordered a verdict for defendant (film company). This ruling was right. The construction of this written contract was for the court . . . She herself repudiated the actual contract and thus relieved the defendant of all obligations thereunder."

RECOVERY OF COMMISSIONS

VARIOUS STATES have enacted laws which entitle employes to recover wages from employers before payment is made to common creditors. Therefore, it is important to know that the term "wages" not only includes salary but also commissions. So held the higher court in the late case of Nelkin vs. Carencon (153 Atl. 702.)

The facts of this case are that a person named Sanders was engaged by a theatre company under a contract by the terms of which the former agreed to devote his entire time and efforts for one year, six days a week, eight hours a day, in the services of the theatre corporation as manager. He was to be remunerated at a stipulated rate or commission on all tickets sold.

When the theatre corporation became insolvent, litigation developed over the question whether or not Sanders was entitled to recover his commissions from the receiver of the insolvent firm before payment was made to common creditors. In holding Sanders entitled to recover payment, the court said:

"The claimant's (Sanders') services were as essential to the business and his compensation was as truly wages as were the ticket seller's at the door of the theatre . . . his compensation was fixed but uncertain . . . . but the uncertainty of enjoyment does not distinguish the one from the other as wages. He may appropriately be likened to what in factories is called a pieceworker. He served the company and earned the commissions within the last two months of the company's existence, and his claim is clearly within the protection of the Corporation Act."

Repairing of Sidewalks

GENERALLY SPEAKING, it is the legal duty of a municipal corporation to keep its sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition. If a defect has existed in a sidewalk for such a length of time that by reasonable diligence in the performance of their duties the defect ought to have been discovered by the proper authorities, notice of such defect will be presumed, and proof of actual knowledge and failure to make repairs will not be necessary in order to render the municipality liable for injuries occasioned thereby.

In other words, various courts have upheld the conclusion of law that a municipality is not liable in damages for injuries resulting from defective sidewalks, unless it is shown that the city officials had knowledge of such defects and negligently failed to repair them, or unless the defects existed for such length of time that by the application of ordinary care the city officials should have discovered and repaired the defects. The length of time such a defect must exist in order for a court to infer notice to the city officials is ordinarily a question for the jury. The latest higher court case involving this point of the law is City of Waycross vs. Howard (157 S. E. 247).

The facts of this case are that a pedestrian, in front of a theatre, was seriously injured when she stumbled over a rod lying on the sidewalk. She sued the city to recover damages. During the trial evidence was introduced showing that this rod had remained on the sidewalk for approximately one week without having been removed by city employees.

In view of this testimony the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the injured pedestrian, and the higher court upheld this verdict.

SOME PROPERTIES OF CONTINUOUS PROJECTORS

[The following is a paper reprinted from the JOURNAL of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers (June, 1931). It was prepared for the Society by William C. Plank.]

IN THE ART of cinematography there is nothing more important than registration; and so, improvements in taking, printing or projecting the successive film photographs with greater precision will always be of interest to motion picture engineers. In this important matter the continuous projector offers a valuable contribution.

To fully appreciate this fact a consideration of the essential features of a continuous projector will first be necessary. The prism projector, in which the compensating elements are totally reflecting prisms having a rhomboidal cross-section, will be taken as an example. It is fairly representative, as the identical mechanical features can be used in other continuous projectors. Furthermore, its definition and flatness of field will be found to meet the requirements.

With a properly corrected objective and a tandem condenser lens system, excellent definition may be obtained. The rhomboidal prisms are (in their optical effect, at least) like two parallel plates of thick glass interposed between the film and the objective lens, and this relation does not vary in any position of the prisms. The axial ray is always maintained perpendicular to the faces and is displaced, not deflected, to counteract the motion of the film.

This displacement, which occurs with every pair of prisms, is the optical intermittent movement and the counterpart of the mechanical intermittent movement in standard projectors. The primary requirement, as with the Geneva movement, is that it be repeated with exactness. This brings us to an important advantage of the rhomboidal prisms: the distance between the parallel reflecting surfaces of these prisms determines the distance the axial ray is displaced or the amount of the optical intermittent movement for a given number of prisms on a wheel.

The displacement is entirely independent of the distance the prisms are situated from the axis of rotation, the objective lens, or the film so it cannot readily be affected in the mounting of the prisms. In fact, as long as the faces of the prisms are maintained perpendicular to the axis, it cannot be made to vary. When a set of prisms is, therefore, made from a plate glass that has been ground and polished flat and parallel to within two wavelengths, the optical intermittent movement will be exceedingly uniform in all the prisms, and will not vary because of wear, which is equally important.

A great advantage in a reflecting system is that it is not difficult to match a plurality of plane reflectors so that the images reflected by them will also match accurately in size and composition. But the rhomboidal prisms have the additional advantage of maintaining the image at exactly the same size and in the same vertical plane throughout their optically effective travel. This property is indispensable in obtaining definition and flatness of field.

Tilting a prism backward or forward with respect to the axis while in the light beam, will move the projected image laterally on the screen. Rotating it from a radial position will move the image up or down. It will be seen that these two adjustments suffice to make the prisms register when they are indexed. With the faces of the prisms always perpendicular to the axis, only one adjustment is necessary.

The mechanism in its simplest form consists of but three moving parts: a sprocket shaft, which carries a ten-frame sprocket, and two parallel shafts situated above and at right angles to the sprocket shaft. These carry the wheels or disks upon which the compensating elements are mounted. Right- and left-hand spiral gears revolve the disks or prism-wheels in opposite directions when the sprocket shaft is turned. The sprocket shaft revolves at 96 rpm. and the two prism-wheels rotate at the unusually slow speed of 48 rpm.

The mechanic will see at once that there are no restrictions as to weight or size and that the three essential parts may be made unusually heavy and, therefore, very rigid and accurate. The three shafts, for instance, may be made up to two inches in diameter, and the bearings sufficiently long to last indefinitely. An advantage of importance in a slow-speed mechanism is that excessive oiling is avoided with its consequent ill effects on the sound track and picture surfaces.

The spiral gears (which constitute the heart of the mechanism) may also be made unusually heavy so as to assure long and accurate service. The wear on these gears depends largely on the pressure exerted by the teeth. The work involved is very light, since it is only necessary to turn over two freely revolving prism-wheels, which once set in motion, require but little effort to keep them revolving. The wear will then also be evenly distributed in both sets of gears, so they may be used until quite worn out without loss of accuracy.

The outstanding advantage of this construction is therefore seen to be its capacity for sustained accuracy. It is one thing to construct motion picture apparatus with a high order of precision, but quite a different problem to maintain this precision through continued use. The more frequent and familiar experience is to have motion picture machines vary very noticeably in their performance from time to time because of dryness, stickiness, or grit, if not because of wear.

But there is another and more important reason for the more uniform performance of the continuous projector. It is a fundamental one and is based on the principle upon which its registration is based. A property that is peculiar to the continuous projector is that the precision of its registration depends, upon uniform motions in the film and the revolving compensating elements.

The law of inertia tends to provide this uniformity of motion despite certain imperfections in the mechanical parts. The fly-wheel effect of the prism-wheels, for example, will tend to bridge over a missing tooth in the gears and the momentum of the film will tend to carry onward a pair of worn or enlarged perforations so that they will not slip back to the sprocket teeth and affect the registration.

This unusual feature overcomes many inaccuracies in the perforations and provides for steadier projection. The momentum of the film also tends to carry it along a straight path and thus prevent certain lateral movements and vibrations that occur with intermittent projection. The technician will therefore see that it is an advantage of major proportions to have a law of nature constantly operating to assure precision in the registration, instead of constantly operating to prevent it.

To realize these advantages the compensating elements of the continuous projector must, of course, be properly indexed. This operation may be performed by any careful person with great accuracy. The important thing is that when the compensating elements are once indexed and fixed in place, they cannot vary or get out of adjustment through wear.

In the present device, each prism may be quickly adjusted while in the light beam, to make the image of cross-hairs that have been placed in the aperture register to fine pencil marks upon the screen to within about 0.01 inch. This precision may be further increased by using more refined means for adjusting the prisms and by increasing the distance to the screen. It is only limited by the accuracy of the dividing head used for indexing, and this may be easily tested by turning a prism-wheel that has been indexed, partly around on its shaft and checking up on it.

In the present device, film shrinkage is taken care of by interposing a thin lens between the film and the compensating elements whenever an old film is projected. By adjusting this lens the film may be brought up to its proper size. It will also be seen that the same lens can be used for

NEW THEATRE PROJECTS

FOLLOWING is a list of new projects in motion picture theatre construction compiled from reports available on July 1. The list also includes projects for which contracts have been awarded. An asterisk before an item indicates that additional information has been received since a previous report.

Theatres Planned

California

LOS ANGELES—Fox-West Coast Theatres, Inc., 1609 West Washington street, has plans by S. C. Lee, 2404 West Seventh street, for a reinforced concrete theatre to be located at Florence and Compton avenues, with seating capacity of 2000. Estimated cost, $250,000.

LOS ANGELES—W. H. Leinert Company, 8107 Vermont avenue, has plans by Morgan, Walls & Clements, 1135 Van Nuys Boulevard, for a reinforced concrete and tile theatre and store building, to be located at Crenshaw Boulevard and Vernon avenue, Leinert Park. Estimated cost, $150,000.

STOCKTON—Bliss & Fairweather, Balboa Building, San Francisco, will soon award the contract for a Class A reinforced concrete theatre to be located on Main street for the National Theatres Syndicate, 25 Taylor street, San Francisco. Estimated cost, $400,000.

Florida

MIAMI—Paramount-Publix Theatres Corporation, Paramount Building, New York, and local subsidiary Paramount Enterprises, Inc., reported will erect probably one-story theatre at East Flagler street and S. E. Third avenue, with seating capacity of 1800. C. W. and George L. Rapp, architects, Paramount Building, New York. Estimated cost, $500,000.

Kentucky

CAVE CITY—Park Way Realty Company, care W. R. Gardner, plans erection of a modern picture theatre.

Massachusetts

SPRINGFIELD—Fox Theatres Corporation, 850 Tenth avenue, New York, and A. J. Benline, 30 Church street, New Haven, Conn., has plans by Thomas W. Lamb, 644 Eighth avenue, New York, for a brick theatre and office building to be located on Main street. Estimated cost, $1,000,000.

WORCESTER—Fox New England Theatres, Inc., A. J. Benline, 30 Church street, New Haven, Conn., plans rebuilding theatre on Front street recently destroyed by fire. Architect not selected. Estimated cost, $150,000.

New Jersey

TRENTON—F. V. Storrs, 33 West Forty-second street, New York, will soon award the contract for rebuilding recently destroyed theatre by fire. Estimated cost, $400,000.

New York

NEW YORK—Fox Theatres Corporation, 850 Tenth avenue, has project for new theatre at 731 Lexington avenue in abeyance until late in 1931. Estimated cost, $1,000,000.

NEW YORK—B. S. Moss Theatres, care Colony Theatre, Broadway and Fifty-fifth street, plans the erection of a new theatre at Eighth avenue and Twenty-third street. Eugene De Rosa, architect, 18 East Forty-first street. Maturity in winter or early next spring. Estimated cost, $1,000,000.

PLATTSBURG—Paramount - Publix Theatres, Paramount Building, New York, has project for a new theatre in abeyance until winter. Estimated cost, $150,000.

WHITE PLAINS—Warner Brothers Theatres, Inc., 312 West Forty-fourth street, New York, has plans for a new theatre by John Eberson, 370 Lexington avenue, New York. Maturity next winter. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Pennsylvania

BRADFORD—Imperial Chain Theatres, Inc., Clark Building, Pittsburgh, Pa., has plans by Marks & Kann, Home Trust Building, Pittsburgh, Pa., for a theatre, with seating capacity of 1500. Estimated cost, $150,000.

Rhode Island

PROVIDENCE — J. Conn, 368 Friendship street, has plans by T. J. H. Pierce, 1713 New Industrial Trust Building, for a brick theatre to be located at Broad and Chestnut streets. Estimated cost, $150,000.

South Carolina

AIKEN—Willis Irvin, architect, S. F. C. Building, Augusta, Ga., is preparing plans for a two-story brick and tile picture theatre.

Tennessee

NASHVILLE—Warner Brothers Pictures, Inc., 321 West Forty-fourth street, New York, is taking bids on various contracts for a new theatre and office building. Mair & Holman, architects, Stahlman Building. Estimated cost, $1,250,000.

Texas

AMARILLO—Amarillo Theatre Company has plans by W. S. Dunne, Melba Building, Dallas, Texas, for a two-story theatre, 140 by 180 feet, to be located at Ninth and Polk streets. Estimated cost, $400,000.

DALLAS—Hughes-Franklin Theatres Company, Harold B. Franklin, president and general manager, Los Angeles, Calif., plans the erection of a picture theatre in the Mission shopping district, Preston road and Mocking Bird lane, Highland Park. Estimate cost, $250,000.

LONGVIEW—East Texas Theatre Corporation, Inc., Sol E. Gordon, president, Perlstein Building, Beaumont, Texas, has plans by J. A. Cararas, Henderson, Texas, for a new theatre and office building, 55 to 150 feet. Cost $30,000.

Vermont

BURLINGTON—Citizens' Theatres, Ltd., Church street, plans the erection of a new brick theatre on Church street.

West Virginia

CHARLESTOWN—Benjamin T. Pitts and E. C. Beer, Fredericksburg, Va., have completed negotiations with A. D. Goetz Sons Company, Ranson, W. Va., for the erection of a theatre, with seating capacity of 1000. Estimated cost, $100,000.

Remodeling

Alabama

BIRMINGHAM — Trianon Theatre, 1926 Second avenue, N., George Steele, manager, plans remodeling.

New York

NEW YORK—F. H. T. Holding Corporation, 309 West Twenty-second street, plans alterations to theatre and store building at 302 West Twenty-fourth street. Improvements estimated to cost $350,000.

Contracts Awarded

California

RICHMOND—United Artist Corporation of California, 1966 South Vermont street, Los Angeles, has awarded the contract to H. I. Beller Construction Company, 6513 Hollywood Boulevard, Los Angeles, for the erection of a Class A reinforced concrete theatre on McDonald avenue. Estimated cost, $50,000.

POMONA — Uptown Theatre Company has awarded the contract to J. Strona, Philadelphia street, for the erection of a reinforced concrete theatre on Carey avenue, with seating capacity of 1000. Estimated cost, $165,000.

Kentucky

SCOTTVILLE — Dr. Lattie Graves has awarded the contract to Hood Brothers for the erection of a two-story brick theatre and office building. Estimated cost, $25,000.

New Hampshire

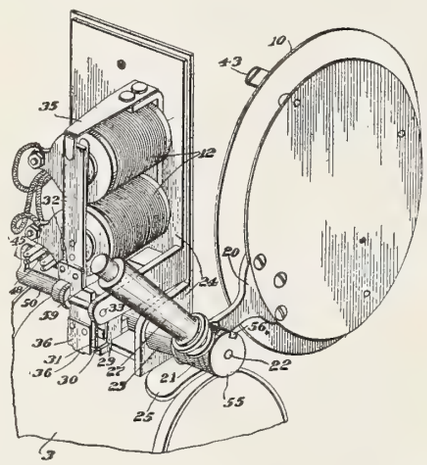
FRANKLIN — S. Kurson, 179 Exchange street, Bangor, Me., has awarded the contract to Jandrin Construction Company, Blanchard place, Gardner, Mass., for the erection of a one and two-story brick theatre, store and office building, 50 by 175 feet. Estimated cost, $150,000.

New York

NEW YORK—Loews Theatres, Inc., 1541 Broadway, has awarded the contract to Aronberg Fried Company, Inc., 21 East Fortieth street, for the erection of a theatre at Seventy-second street and Third avenue. Estimated cost, $750,000.

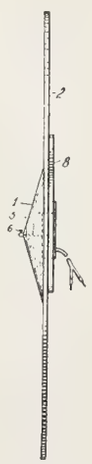
New Inventions . . illustrated descriptions of devices related to motion pictures and allied crafts, recently published by the U. S. government and selected for Better Theatres by William N. Moore, patent specialist of Washington, D. C.

1,769,772. SAFETY AND CHANGE-OVER MECHANISM FOR MOVING-PICTURE-PROJECTING MACHINES. Henry C. Cornetta, Boston, Mass. Filed Dec. 27, 1927. Serial No. 242,609. 7 Claims. (Cl. 88—17.)



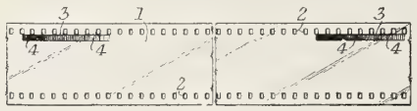
1. In a mechanism for use with moving picture projecting machines, the combination of a dowser, a support on which said dowser is mounted for movement into an open or closed position, mechanism for normally holding said dowser in its open position and including electro-magnetic means for releasing the dowser, said dowser being adapted to be moved manually into its open position, an electric switch, and operating means for said switch arranged to be connected to said dowser to be operated therewith or to be disconnected therefrom at will.

1,763,049. LOUD SPEAKER. Marcus C. Hopkins, Washington, D. C., assignor to Hopkins Corporation, Jersey City, N. J., a Corporation of Delaware. Filed Feb. 11, 1926. Serial No. 87,491. 16 Claims. (Cl. 181—31.)



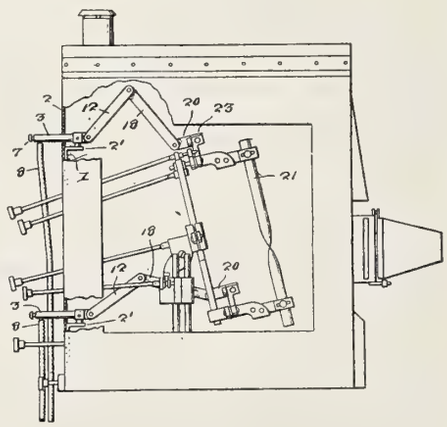
1. A loud speaker tympanum having a portion which is substantially fully responsive to the higher frequencies and a portion consisting essentially of synthetic lumber which is substantially fully responsive to the lower frequencies.

1,762,925. SOUND FILM WITH SENSITOMETRIC SCALE. Loyd A. Jones and Clifton M. Tuttle, Rochester, N. Y., assignors to Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed May 1, 1929. Serial No. 359,634. 5 Claims. (Cl. 95—9.)



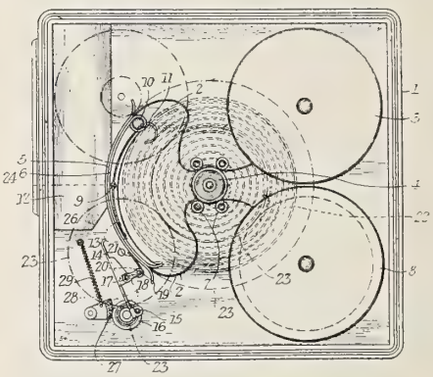
1. A band of sensitized film having thereon at intervals throughout its length latent images of sensitometric strips, and having a longitudinal series of exactly spaced perforations, each sensitometric strip image varying in exposure longitudinally of the band in an accurate dimensional relation to the perforations.

1,763,517. PROJECTOR LAMP. Frederick H. Hartwick and Harry C. Arnold, Columbus, Ohio. Filed Jan. 21, 1924. Serial No. 687,552. 1 Claim. (Cl. 176—103.)



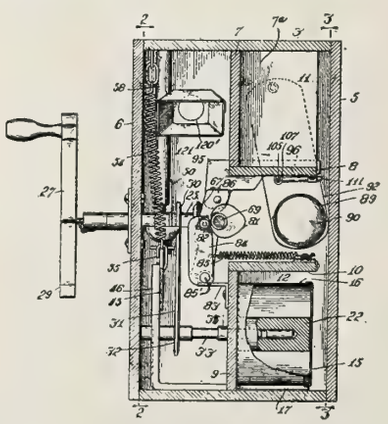
In a supporting device for the carbons of an arc lamp projector, angle brackets secured to a wall of the lamp housing of the projector and including horizontal parts, a boss on each of the horizontal parts, a pin rising from each boss, a bar for each pin swiveled thereon, the bars passing through said wall and each having a horizontal bore in the outer end thereof, a screw for each bore for securing a terminal of an electric wire in a hole formed in each bar at right angles to the bores therein, the opposite ends of said bars being flattened, links, spring pressed pivot means connecting the links at one of their ends in pairs, one link of each pair having its opposite end pivoted to the flattened end of one of said bars, brackets at the opposite ends of the other links of the pairs, a boss for each of the second mentioned brackets, studs extending from the bosses and providing pivots between the links and the second mentioned brackets respectively, spring means for the last mentioned pivots, a flange for each of the second mentioned brackets disposed at the outer end thereof, carbon holders, and connecting means between the carbon holders and flanged ends of the second mentioned brackets.

1,762,939. FILM-MOVING MECHANISM. Otto Wittel, Rochester, N. Y., assignor to Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, N. Y., a Corporation of New York. Filed June 10, 1925. Serial No. 36,291. 1 Claim. (Cl. 88—18.4).



In a motion picture apparatus having a frame and a motor carried thereby, mechanism driven by said motor and including an arm with a claw, a link pivoted to said arm and to said frame, and means to reciprocate said arm, whereby the claw is moved through a closed path, members forming a guideway for a film strip, a portion of said path intersecting said guideway whereby the claw may engage and move a film, and a spring between the frame and the link and adapted to oppose and be tensioned by the movement of the link when the claw is being moved along its path outside of said guideway, and adapted to assist in the movement of the link and the mechanism connected thereto, when the claw is in the film engaging portion of its path, the force exerted by the spring alone being insufficient to move the film.

1,762,378. MOTION-PICTURE MACHINE. Franklin H. Avers, Portage, Wis. Filed Feb. 26, 1923. Serial No. 621,339. 14 Claims. (Cl. 88—16.)



2. In a camera having an exposure opening, a plurality of fixed lenses in alignment with and spaced transversely in said opening, a mechanism for intermittently advancing a film past said opening, a source of light, a rotary shutter shaft, a cam mounted on said shaft, and means operable by said cam for intermittently moving said source of light in predetermined timed relation with respect to the film feeding mechanism relatively of the film.

correcting a set of over-sized prisms, so that whenever a lens is interposed between the compensating elements and the film, a very liberal tolerance may be allowed as to the dimensions of these elements, and uniformity becomes the principal requirement. As the ordinary sprocket constitutes a variable-speed drive within narrow limits, it automatically takes care of the requirement for the slightly slower speed of the shrunken film.

The principle of the registration in the continuous projector is better appreciated when the prism-wheels and the film are driven by entirely independent means. With the prism-wheels revolving at standard speed (about 48 rpm.) and with the film stationary, the projected image of the film will be seen streaking downward on the screen at a high velocity. If we start the film moving and gradually increase its speed by means of a variable-speed drive, we can slow down the motion of the image until the frames creep downward very slowly. An inspection of the picture will now reveal the fact that the registration is exceedingly close, in fact, it should almost equal that to which the prisms were adjusted and which we have seen may be within 0.01-inch or so, depending upon the care taken in indexing the prisms. When the velocity of the film is further increased so that the picture no longer tends to creep out of frame, as happens when the film photographs are in synchronism with the prisms, the registration of the successive images on the screen will exactly equal that to which the prisms were adjusted or indexed, assuming the film to be perfect and the motions of the film and prism-wheels to be uniform.

Straight-Line Luminosity Curve

A SCREEN luminosity curve, taken in any of our best motion picture theatres, will show at a glance one of the most serious defects of motion picture projection as it is practiced today. The curve rises rapidly from zero to the mean or average intensity level, then soars upward to a peak where the brightness is twice that of the average intensity; it then falls as rapidly back again to zero. The motion picture engineer who is familiar with the requirements of the human eye need not be told that this curve is far from being an ideal one.

With this condition of screen illumination, the iris of the eye makes a vain, and in some sensitive persons, a fatiguing effort to adjust itself to the alternations of light and darkness. But it is obvious that on account of the inertia of the nerves and muscles that control its action, it cannot do so at the high frequencies employed. At most, the muscular movements are but incipient ones, which, nevertheless, are tiring to some people. The more probable thing to expect is that the iris becomes adjusted to an illumination on the retina that is an average of the different intensities of the intermittent light falling upon it.

In this case the aperture or pupil will be entirely too large for the excessively brilliant peaks of the curve. In other words, nature has not provided us with an efficient protection against brilliant illumination of an intermittent character and a high frequency. It is therefore, an easy matter to exceed the safety limit, which will lie in only a moderate difference between the brightness of the average intensity and that of the peaks, and which should be determined for every theatre.

The excessively bright light-periods, however, are not the only defects which the luminosity curve will show up, for the dark periods are equally faulty and are frequent causes of eye-strain. Besides the fatiguing efforts already mentioned, there is the possibility of effects derived from the photo-electric nature of the retina, and the response of delicate pigment grains to intermittent light.

Unusually Long Rest or Stationary Period

In motion picture projection it will be found that if we shorten the stationary periods, or the time the film images are held arrested upon the screen, by means of adjustable shutter blades or the like, we will noticeably detract from the quality of the projected image. It will appear to lose something in the half-tones and depth of perspective, or in that quality projectionists call "snappiness." On the other hand, when we make the stationary period longer, we strengthen and improve these same qualities.

This fact has always been well known and one manufacturer of an intermittent movement that gave a ten or fifteen per cent longer stationary period than others, claimed very much for this advantage.

Formation of Composite Images

One of the most singular and interesting properties of the continuous projector is that of filling in the gaps of the photographic record with resultant or composite images, formed by superposing the images or two adjacent film photographs upon the screen. This blending-period takes the place of the usual dark-period in intermittent projection, and thus very conveniently and appositely fills in the blanks in the record.

When two film photographs are held in the double aperture of the continuous projector and their images are superposed upon the screen, it becomes possible to see how a composite image with an intermediate posture or pose of its own is created. Two cases may be demonstrated: one in which the moving parts are light upon a dark background, and the other where they are dark upon a bright background.

In the first instance, the parts of the two images that coincide will have their full value of illumination, but the parts that do not coincide (those parts that were in motion in the object) will be only half illuminated and but faintly noticeable. Where these parts overlap, however, the illumination will be brought up to its full value and a new outline will be formed which will be different from that of either of the two original images. In the second case, the parts that do not coincide will tend to become obliterated by the highlights of the opposite frame falling upon them. But where these parts overlap, the highlights cannot fall upon them and a new outline or posture will be created.

In the above example, if the change from one film photograph to the next were made very slowly, we would expect it to occur in two distinct and spasmodic steps, that is, from the first film posture to the composite posture, and then from the composite posture to that of the second film photograph. But the extraordinary thing is that it is not spasmodic or jerky. It appears as a continuous uniform movement no matter how slowly it is made, provided, of course, that the difference between the two film postures be not too great. Turning movements of the head or body appear particularly even and natural at the slowest possible rates.

We cannot explain this phenomenon excepting upon the principle of irradiation, which makes a narrow fringe or border of light or shadow appear to vary in width with a variation in the illumination. It results, however, in a more complete and natural representation of motion—the primary object of the art of cinematography.

Third Dimension Effect

When we hold two frames of titles in the double aperture and pull them slightly out of the perpendicular so that their images do not quite superimpose or register upon the screen, it becomes possible to demonstrate an important reason for the remarkable plasticity given by the continuous projector. When equally illuminated, the two images will appear to be in the same focal plane, but if the illumination of one of the frames be reduced considerably, the images will appear to be in different planes.

The more strongly illuminated titles will appear to be considerably closer than the dim ones; so, if we straighten up the film again, the dimmer titles will appear to move in behind the bright ones, giving a distinct impression of a third dimension on the screen. When projecting pictures, this effect occurs with every dissolve-period and accounts for much of plasticity in the projected image.

Again, when the double aperture is tilted with respect to the optical axis, the two images will actually lie in different focal planes. It will be seen, therefore, that in moving the film photograph downward from the upper position of the double aperture to the lower one, the image will successively occupy the farther plane, the intervening planes, and then the nearer one.

GOES ON RECORD

NIGHT LETTER TO ALL BRANCHES:

July 6, 1931

This is the first definite report that I have made to exchange managers regarding our product since September nineteen twenty nine. I wish to go on record now that our new pictures, six already completed for next season, are the best we have ever produced in FOX FILM CORPORATION history.

TRANSATLANTIC is a stupendous melodrama, with plenty of comedy, aboard gigantic ocean liner with Barnum and Bailey pictorial effects. It is commercial production that will class for spectacle drama and comedy with anything ever produced in talking pictures.

MERELY MARY ANN is JANET GAYNOR and CHARLES FARRELL'S best picture, not barring 7th Heaven.

BAD GIRL will create two new stars, JAMES DUNN and SALLY EILERS. This is the best picture in Frank Borzage's career.

ELISSA LANDI in

WICKED gives a better performance than Constance Bennett did in Common Clay, and Wicked is better box office attraction than Common Clay.

SKYLINE is tremendous melodrama with plenty of comedy, photographed atop New York skyscrapers. It compares favorably for box office attraction power with any film we have ever made.

JOHN FORD has made a real commercial knockout in

THE BRAT. SALLY O'NEIL gives sensational performance in The Brat. We immediately signed her on five year contract after witnessing her performance. She is ideal and a new SALLY O'NEIL.

The above pictures are completed. The pictures now being made for names, entertainment, comedy and quality, plus box office angles are at the highest mark that this Corporation ever attained in production. Best regards.

MOTION PICTURE HERALD

Vol. 104, No. 2 July 11, 1931

An Opportunity in Shorts

OFTEN the reflection comes that the art of the motion picture seems in its present state most amazingly devoted to the manufacture of fictional entertainment, to the practical exclusion of the realms of fact. It is chiefly in the short topicals that the interesting materials of the non-fiction world of record and expression find an avenue to the screen. And this non-fiction has a sizeable audience which is but casually served.

Some interesting observations are presented in a letter to MOTION PICTURE HERALD from Ina Roberts, of the staff of the Cleveland Public Library, in which she observes: "For years I have tried to get cooperation established, since the short subjects often tie up more directly with books than do features. The drawbacks are: the usual lack of stills and the fact that short subjects are not advertised. The stills are very important to us as they serve to separate the books and jackets in an exhibit from the mass of books that line the walls. The advertising of short subjects is necessary because without it we can hardly post exhibits on these subjects without adding too much direct advertising. If the subjects were advertised we could install exhibits on the same subject and the connection would be obvious.

"I do feel that the right handling of this matter would result in filling the theatres during the supper hour and our people—a small number, it is true—much prefer such subjects to features and these are quite apt to be the type who prefer to go to a show during the supper hour and get home early."

Selling the Newsreel

AN interesting and significant bit of enterprise is presented in the manner in which Mr. D. M. Idzal, manager of the Fox theatre in Philadelphia, exploits newsreels. He scans the contents of the reel and sends notes to any important individuals or organizations which he deems likely to be interested in special subjects. The result is considerable constructive publicity and good will in important places.

A recent example is afforded in the attention which he won from the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce with a Fox Movietone News presentation of a picture and remarks by Merle Thorpe, editor of the Nation's Business. Such endeavor is a service to the motion picture institution, tending to demonstrate to the substantial world of business a none too widely appreciated aspect of the screen's service to the whole social and industrial fabric.

The newsreel is the one product of the screen which, to a highly important portion of the audience, is especially laden with responsibility for establishing and maintaining the status of the motion picture as a medium. Also the newsreel is the chief instrument by which the institution of the screen can hope to build up a public state of mind calculated to give to it some part of the status and prerogatives of the art of publication.

Powerful Statistics

NO less than 26,697,398 motor vehicles were owned in the United States January 1, according to a census by Charles F. Baldwin of the automotive division of the Department of Commerce. That provides one car for each 4.9 persons, no matter how awkward you might feel with that kind of a load. This tends to indicate that the American public is still equipped to go places. It is just possible a fair fraction might be induced to go to the motion picture theatre if properly invited. It is suggested that 4.9 admissions should be sold as 5.

Importance of Music

ATTENTION may well be given certain reportings and observations by Mr. Joseph O'Sullivan in this issue in his article on the muscial aspects of various foreign productions. He appears to feel that musical opportunity in dramatic narration is being given but casual attention by a preponderance of American producers. Not so long ago we found Mr. Nicholas Schenck expressing a somewhat related thought. It may be observed in passing that in Europe one seems to observe a closer kinship and sympathy of purpose between the arts than in the United States, and it is not so surprising as regrettable that in our country the art specially concerned with the making of sounds should have so small a voice in the making of sound pictures.

Debating the "Tragedy"

NOW we are to have a battle of the experts over the question of whether Paramount did or did not make a faithful transcription to the screen of Mr. Theodore Dreiser's "An American Tragedy." Mr. Deiser's committee of literary personages has viewed the picture and reported, adversely. In the coming week Paramount will name a like committee of equally weighty names. Each committee will be as loyal to the points of view of the opposed principals as the divided alienists in the Thaw case, and likely to reach the same net result. Regardless of the special issue between Paramount and the author, the preview reports from Hollywood aver that the picture is excellent as a picture. The issue, then, is one of the art, not the business.

HONOR PUPILS GUESTS OF HOOVER AT VISUAL EDUCATION TESTS

Clarke Tenders Dinner to Visual Education Pupils

The first nationwide test and demonstration of visual education through sound motion pictures is being held in Washington this week with 96 grammar school graduates participating daily at George Washington university.

A boy and a girl pupil from the various states and the District of Columbia were appointed by the governors at the suggestion of President Hoover, who received the students Wednesday at the White House.

The films were prepared especially for the test by Fox Film Corporation at the request of a group of educators and include four major subjects: science, history, geography and civics.

The students were welcomed by Joseph M. Dixon, acting secretary of the interior, at a dinner given Monday night at the Wardman Park hotel by Harley L. Clarke, president of Fox Film Corporation.

Dixon in his welcoming address impressed upon his youthful auditors the importance of the part they are taking in this epoch-making occasion.

"We are sure," said Dixon, "that visual education can quicken the processes of education, enlarge the culture, and increase the earning power of the boys and girls who leave our public schools."

In addressing the guests, Clarke, whose interest in visual education dates back to 1920, said:

"For the first time those who have the resources and technical ability to produce good pictures are in full cooperation with competent educators who know how to adapt motion pictures to school purposes. Not only does sound film supplement the textbook in direct instruction, but it gives to the pupil the culture and the breadth of knowledge that otherwise might be acquired only by advance study, travel and years of experience.

"The cooperation of President Hoover in helping to bring about this week's demonstration augurs well for this important contribution to one of the most significant developments in the recent history of education. A library of sound films to supplement textbook teaching in American schools is being developed by us, and we are beginning with the production of films in the fields of science, geography, history and civics. If we can do something to give the 18,000,000 boys and girls in grade schools today a broader culture and wider vision of life, we shall have justified the faith and patience and the efforts of the advocates of visual education."

Can't Translate Lines Literally, Producer Warns

Literal American translations of American productions into Latin tongues are largely responsible for failures of American-made talkers to click with Latin audiences, in the opinion of Maurice A. Chase of Mexico City, president of Empire Productions of Mexico. Chase is now in Los Angeles arranging for the equipment for the new studio which his company has built in Mexico and will devote exclusively to the production of feature and short subject talkers in Spanish.

"Spanish people do not always understand the American way of doing or saying things," said Chase. "The American director cannot take an American script, translated into Spanish, and shoot it as a reproduction of his American picture. It must be translated, both as to dialogue and action, with the customs, the mannerisms and the movements which the Spanish peoples will recognize as natural. They will not stand for people doing and saying things in an unnatural manner any more than will an American audience. Our American artists must do things in a natural, convincing way, and their dialogue must be natural. It has not been so with many of the foreign language productions made in America."

Chase also is of the opinion that American producers have raised too much of a bugaboo in their own minds over the question of dialect.

Chase says his company expects at the outset, at least, to produce about twenty features a year for the Spanish market. This, he declares, is only 4 per cent of the amount of product required. "The Spanish talker market covers 150,000,000 people in twenty different countries," he said. "That is a great market, and one worthy of consideration. In Mexico City our company will develop a staff of Latins, most of whom will be Mexicans, in all probability. I have engaged a number of American technical experts to return with me to train our people in the most up-to-date Hollywood methods of sound picture technique. After that we should be able to go on our own."

Empire Productions, Mr. Chase said, is financed by American and Mexican capital.

EDUCATIONAL FIELD OPENING WAY TO HUGE NON-THEATRICAL GROWTH

Hope of Revived Film Mart Follows Hoover Debt Pact

American producers are already looking toward an enlivened market, in this country but more notably in Europe, as a result of the world war debt moratorium instigated by President Hoover and finally consummated with France's agreement this week. They see in Europe's immediate reaction a favorable sign for the theatre business there, and hence greater possibilities for the producer here.

It is even possible that production schedules may ultimately be reorganized to take advantage of any renewed vigor in the film market both here and abroad. One company, Universal, has already announced its intention to extend its production expenditure, as a direct result of the debt holiday. One million dollars more will be spent than had been originally intended, this sum to be used chiefly, at least according to present plans, in elaborating on the productions scheduled.

The British "Film Review" states that "during the past week there has been a very pleasant boom in European production, coinciding with President Hoover's world heartening statement in regard to war debt payments." It is also pointed out that though better conditions mean greater opportunities for the American producer, they likewise offer him more competition as a result of an increase in European production.

Foreign Films For Columbia

Columbia's initial venture into distribution of foreign pictures, particularly English, in the American market, is set for the new season when Joe Brandt will launch a new department, under Foreign Manager Miss H. Kass, who now is in Europe spotting product.

A deal for several already has been consummated with British International Pictures.

Heywood-Wakefield Asks Stockholders to Cash Shares

Heywood-Wakefield Company, Boston, is inviting holders of first preferred stock to cash in their securities to the extent of $350,000.

Continued liquidation of excessive inventories has resulted in accumulation of cash reserves not required for current operations, the company statement said.

Pettijohn and Milliken Flay Off-Color Titles

Flaunting the dollar sign, particularly in publicity, came in for a severe lashing by Charles C. Pettijohn and Carl E. Milliken at a Hollywood meeting this week of directors and producers.

Both warned against the use of suggestive feature titles and sex stories, telling Coast picture makers that each factor seriously jeopardized a healthy legislative condition. They make censorship difficult to ward off, the producers were told, while laying heavy stress on the dollar sign and Hollywood's "gorgeous homes" pave the way for heavy taxation, Pettijohn and Milliken stated.

Report Wanger to Join RKO Radio

The question now arises, "With what company will Walter Wanger, now out of Paramount, become associated?"

Reports current along Broadway have him considering two propositions, one with RKO Radio and the other with a group of associated directors.

Walter Wanger

Wanger, who now has offices at the American Play Company, refuses to discuss either report, his secretary stating that "Mr. Wanger is not giving interviews these days."

Insiders are of the opinion that the Radio hookup seems the most likely.

Darrow Will Sue Censor For Cuts; Universal Not Involved

Clarence Darrow, featured with Professor H. M. Parshley of Smith College in the educational study of evolution, "The Mystery of Life," plans suit against the censor board of New York state for deletions which the board made in the film.

Universal is distributing the film, but is not in any way involved in the proposed suit, since a clause in Darrow's contract with Universal provides that the company must inform Darrow of any censor deletions, and he has the privilege to undertake legal action if he so desires, without Universal having the right to stop him or being in any way involved in the suit. The film, inspired by the Tennessee "monkey" trial, may be shown in that state.

Big Division of Industry To Use 16-mm Film

Number of Sound and Projector Equipment Makers Pointing Definitely in New Direction

Developments in the non-theatrical field, now current and presaging a decidedly quickened pace in that field perhaps as early as fall, point to the establishment of a potentially great division of the motion picture industry, largely employing 16-mm. film instead of standard commercial stock, and stressing the use of talking pictures in education.

A number of sound and projector equipment manufacturers are now pointing directly toward this field. One of the largest professional projector builders, the International Projector Corporation (Simplex), already has brought out a portable 35-mm. projector with sound-on-film apparatus, and now is contemplating the marketing of 16-mm. equipment in the near future. Another make of projection-sound equipment designed expressly for the non-theatrical field and but recently added to the others on the market, is that of the Phototone Corporation of America, an Indianapolis concern. And now arrived at the testing stage is a Western Electric model for 16-mm. stock. This type, designed exclusively for industrial, church and school use, is expected to be ready for the market by the end of summer.

Realizing Extent of Market

Impetus has been given to the whole field, it is believed, by the growing realization of the extent of the non-theatrical market—especially that part of it represented by educational activities, both general and religious.

It is, in fact, the enormity of the field that so far has prevented anything but estimates of admitted looseness as to the number of units in the market. But there are figures that point the way. One places the potential education market at over 65,000 institutions, some of which doubtless would need more than one set of equipment. Another figure places the number of churches at 400,000. Besides the tens of thousands of industrial organizations, the possibilities of which cannot be estimated because of the great variance in activity, there are also a huge number of lodges and similar organized social groups which form a lesser phase of this vast non-theatrical market.

Two Conditions Necessary

Of these divisions, the schools have come to be regarded as by far the most important. Indeed, opinion is almost in agreement that non-theatrical entertainment offers relatively but few opportunities for the equipment manufacturer and film producer. The main field of development, it is believed, will be in the use of talking pictures for education.

Interest in the extension of visual educa-

FILM COMMON GAINS 160 MILLIONS FROM RECORD LOW LEVELS OF APRIL

Average Price Increases $2.57 During June

Steady Rise from Bear Market Reflects Better Sentiment Toward Film Stocks

The stock market rise from the record low levels of the April "bear market"—a forward movement which gained increasing momentum during June, resulted in an appreciation of more than $160,000,000 in market value of all motion picture common stocks on the stock and curb exchanges, a compilation by MOTION PICTURE HERALD shows.

The extent to which the amusement stocks responded to improvement in the general list is reflected in the fact that at their lows for the year, which generally were touched in April, and which in most instances represented record lows, these shares had a market value of $442,736,747, while at current levels the market valuation of these stocks is approximately $603,271,888.

Unlike the spasmodic advances in most other sections of the list, the rise in picture stocks from their bear market lows has been marked by steady crystallization of a better sentiment toward amusement securities. This trend was accelerated in June, by which time most of the unfavorable news in the way of dividend reductions and first quarter earnings reports were out of the way and the speculative fraternity was inclined to look ahead to a generally better showing for the industry in the last half of the year.

During June, according to the official monthly statement of the New York Stock Exchange, the average price of amusement stocks rose from $14.80 to $17.37 on July 1.

The table, compilation by MOTION PICTURE HERALD herewith shows picture stock valuation on both the stock and curb exchanges at the lows of the year, and at current levels, with net appreciation for each stock.

New European Company Plans 10 Multi-Linguals

Consortium Internationale Cinematographique is the name of a new European production unit being formed by S. D. Wilson and H. P. Carver in Berlin, Wilson to be managing director and Carver, formerly general manager of Cosmopolitan Productions, in charge of production.

In conjunction with German Universal Company it is planned to produce, in Berlin, ten pictures in the first half of the coming season, with German, French and English versions.

DuPont Changes Name

DuPont-Pathe Film Manufacturing Corporation has changed its name to DuPont Film Manufacturing Corporation, at the State House, Dover, Del.

Ask Open Studios As Business Aid

Hollywood business men, faced with the tourist competition of Miami, Reno, Havana and other places, and as a result of the successful visits of National Education Association delegates to the studios, have presented to film companies a plan by which the tourist business to Hollywood as the film center may be improved vastly.

Colonel Harry Baine, president of the Hollywood Boulevard Association; Robert J. McCabe, manager of the Roosevelt Hotel and others have asked studios to relax their non-visitor rule in order to attract visitors.

Fred Beetson, Hays representative, arranged visiting hours for the Association people, with great success, and proponents of the idea point out that the plan would be a boon to local business and employment, and also result in motion picture good-will.

Thorpe Resigns B. I. P. Post To Produce Independently

It has been officially confirmed in London that J. A. Thorpe, former general manager of British International Pictures, Ltd., has resigned to take active control of an independent producing company, Associated Metropolitan Productions, Ltd.

Thorpe will remain on the British International board of directors, however. The new company will make at least three pictures a year for British International Pictures.

Garyn Returns From Europe

Pat Garyn, sales chief of National Screen Service, has returned to the home office in New York following a six weeks' visit to company branches at London and on the Continent.

Darst Out As Pathe Midwest Manager

James Darst, Midwestern manager of Pathe News, with headquarters in Chicago, is out.

Up to this time, no replacements have been made in positions which have been dropped in the Chicago territory. The office originally had two sound trucks, one of which recently was transferred to New York. The other is understood to be on the road continuously.

This is offered in some quarters as a possible explanation of the present lack of necessity for maintaining the position of Midwestern manager.

According to Jack Connolly, Darst has resigned, prior to engaging in an enterprise of his own. This was coincident with or in sequel to a visit to Chicago by Connolly.

Eddie Kaw, Pathe News editorial representative on the Pacific Coast, has also resigned.

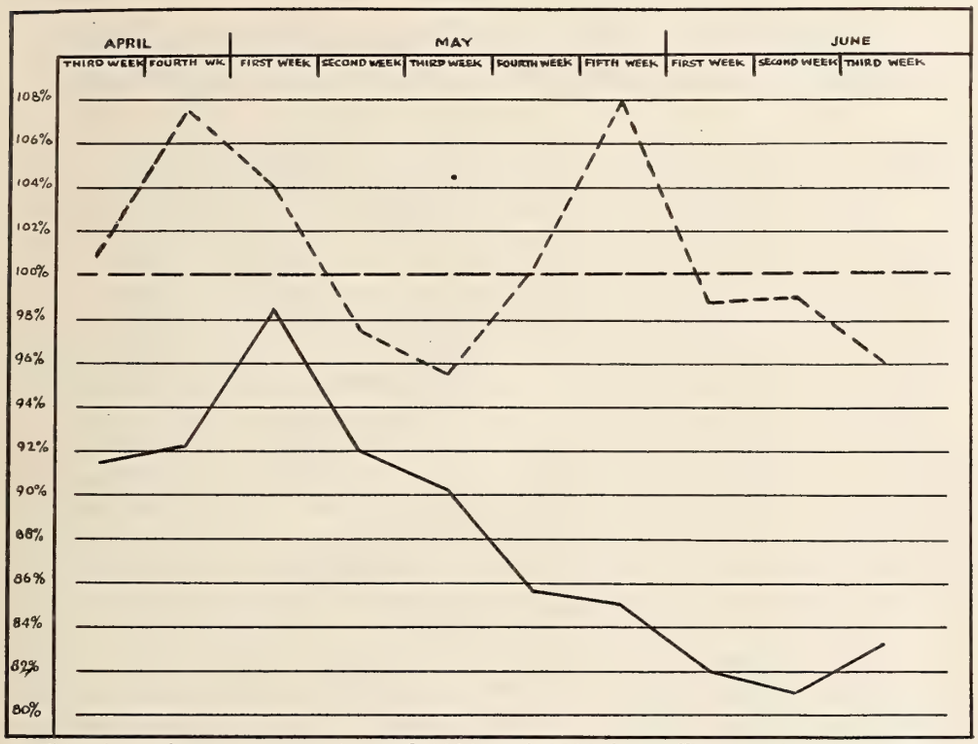
Beverly Jones, formerly assistant editor of Pathe Review and latest to depart from the Pathe News and Review organization under the progressive retrenchments of the last few weeks of the Courtland Smith administration, has been employed by Truman Talley of the Fox news and short subject department.

Jones becomes assistant to Louis DeRochement, who is charged with the production of various topical, adventure and travel short pictures as a division of the newsreel department's activity. Jones was among the first members of the Pathe organization to become specially trained in sound picture production and editing. He has conducted various pictorial expeditions in the United States and abroad.

Schnitzer Arrives From Coast

Joseph I. Schnitzer, Radio Pictures' president, is due to arrive in New York from Hollywood on Friday.

CUTTING SERVICE CHARGE WOULD JEOPARDIZE QUALITY, ERPI WARNS



This chart shows a comparison of 1930 and 1931 box office receipts in sixteen cities, in analysis of Motion Picture Herald's survey of grosses in the theatres. The horizontal line designated 100 per cent represents average receipts in 1930 for the period April to June. The broken line (- - -) represents receipts in 1930, the black line the receipts in 1931 for the same period.

See Indictments In Chicago Quiz

The state's attorney's office in Chicago expects conspiracy indictments to be returned against officials of the projectionists' union some time this month. It was stated further that investigators have "enough evidence to send all officials of the union to the penitentiary."

This declaration came from Assistant State's Attorney Charles Bellows as the July grand jury took over the investigation begun last month. An unnamed Chicago exhibitor is expected to testify this week to the effect that while he paid two projectionists $125 each per week, the exhibitor had realized no income from his theatre.

The state's attorney's office is also continuing the investigation of the murder of Jacob Kaufman, insurgent member of the union, who was killed several days before he was to have testified before the grand jury.

Heyl Replaces Abel As RCA Photophone Sales Manager

E. O. Heyl, vice president in charge of foreign affairs for RCA Photophone, has been appointed vice president and general sales manager by A. E. Reoch, executive vice president. He succeeds Sydney E. Abel, who recently resigned as commercial department head.

T.P.E. Announces '31-'32 Schedule

Talking Picture Epics will offer 12 features and 88 short subjects for the 1931-32 season. The first three features are the Ufa-American films, "The White Devil," "The Last Company" and "The Immortal Vagabond."

The shorts are grouped as "The Great American Cities" series, "Latin American" series, "Far East" series, "Wanderlust," "Intimate Interviews" and various other novelty groups.

The Chester Monkey comedies will be revived and released with the addition of synchronized music and sound effects.

Three other features already announced are "Monsters of the Deep," "Hell Below Zero" and "I Kiss Your Little Hand, Madame," with Marlene Dietrich.

Claim Against Ripley by Lecture Bureau Is Denied

Robert L. ("Believe It or Not") Ripley, who is making a series of shorts for Warner Brothers, is the victor in a suit brought by Famous Speakers, Inc., which asked damages on the charge that Ripley had refused to fulfill a contract for lecture engagements but had taken film, radio and vaudeville engagements with others. The plaintiff stated that its half interest in these totaled between $50,000 and $100,000.

Replies to Complaints by National Circuits

Major Theatres' Executives Reported To Feel That Much of Compulsory Costs Is Unnecessary

Further price reductions in charges for servicing sound equipment of Electrical Research Products are impossible for theatre owners, circuit or independent, at least within the immediate future, unless, in the opinion of Erpi, the industry would jeopardize present quality standards of sound and take upon its own shoulders all responsibilities for eventualities.

This, it is learned through authentic sources close to the inside circle of the company's policy-makers, is Erpi's reply to the reported widespread dissatisfaction which is supposed to exist on a threatening scale among theatre circuits of national distributors, with regards present charges for servicing Western's talker equipment.

Executives both at Western Electric and Electrical Research point out that "every bit of efficiency has been squeezed out of the economic servicing phase of sound. Charges have been lowered as this reduced overhead and increased efficiency took place. but further cuts most certainly would necessitate an immediate weakening of quality standards."

"There is no alternative other than a downward slide in quality, if charges for servicing equipment are further slashed," Erpi chiefs stated, "and if the motion picture leaders are of the opinion that this quality will stand being lowered, then the consequences of lost theatre patronage and the future fate of sound must rest in their hands."

The major circuit executives are said to be of the opinion that much of the compulsory service charges now being paid to Erpi is unnecessary, particularly in view of the existence of a maintenance department in practically each circuit organization.

The matter of reduction in charges, according to the report, is said already to have left the hands of circuit engineers and maintenance men and now is reported to be in the hands of front rank company executives, who are said to be considering concerted action, possibly working through the Hays organization.

Cline Named Producer of Paramount Shorts

Edward Cline has been appointed producer of one- and two-reel comedies to be made at the Paramount Eastern studio in New York.

The post was offered Cline at the conclusion of his direction of Charles Ruggles in "Girl Habit." He joined the Paramount staff in March. It is expected Cline will devote most of his time to the production of the 22 slapstick two-reel comedies on the 1931-32 schedule.

The Industry Facing Its Armageddon

by WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON

IT looks now as if the picture industry would face its Armageddon this fall. A battle will be fought to yank up theatre receipts and to lower production costs—a real battle, so real that upon its result one way or another hangs the future of the much vaunted American industry of motion pictures.

This is no alarmist opinion; least of all is it intended as such. The writer, in the past 18 years, has seen many a scare and at times a crisis, out of which the profitable business tramped triumphantly on with only a memory of some huge, fearsome shadows on the wall.

But we are not facing shadows this year of 1931. We are facing large economic facts.

True to its traditions, this entertainment business has been the last to feel the severe business depression. Other industries have had, for over a year, to fight high and low and desperately to put their houses in order. That is just what the picture business must do. And without any thought that some miracle like talking pictures is going to leap out of the sky to save the day for inefficiency.

The reader can clearly visualize the situation by making his own graph.

Take, as a baseline, the span of the last six years—from 1925 to 1931.

Then start—at 1925—two lines; one representing theatre receipts and the other production costs. Start the first, say, an inch above the other, simply to indicate that production costs were low and theatre receipts high as compared with today.

1925 was not a happy year. There was the radio scare for one thing; for another there were the big consolidation of theatres and ensuing circuit buying which was forcing the distributors into their corners. But there were pictures, be it known—such as "Thief of Bagdad," "Lost World," "Sea Hawk," "Ten Commandments," "White Sister," "Iron Horse," "Beau Brummel," "Girl Shy," "Phantom of the Opera," and many another close to 90 per cent in box-office rating. Theatres—the big ones—and the big circuits were making money.

At any rate, from 1925 on, theatre receipts began creeping down and production costs went upward until in 1928 they came altogether too close to each other. The film diet was beginning to pall, so all the exhibitors reported. But the studios were turning it out more expensively than ever.

Just as the two lines seemed destined to cross—to the exclusion of profit in a prosperous industry—a cataclysm happened, the advent of sound, and sent the lines soaring away upward, the more so because the innovation came at a time of high wages and loose spending.

Production costs, of course, went up sharply, but theatre receipts made studio expense a negligible item. Throughout 1929, theatres made a harvest. The big circuit owners who had sold out were frantic and maneuvering to get back into the business again. Here, in California, small-town theatres were making as much as a thousand dollars a week.

This continued into 1930 and then the two lines resumed their normal directions; theatre receipts downward, production costs upward.

Have the lines now crossed?

This highly important question may well be argued. And that the summer slump is here, with a record-breaking number of closed houses, is a heavy factor.

But the plain facts to consider are these: If the lines have crossed we are for the first time in picture history in a definite loss area; and if they have not crossed as yet they are certainly pointed to cross unless something quite radical happens.

An executive, whose judgment should rank highest, stated this spring that unless theatre receipts bounded upward with a vim in the fall—and kept up—the industry would face its great crisis.

That seems logical. This is no time for gloom. But, also, it is no time for thin optimism, for blind hopefulness that things will somehow right themselves and that the Great God of Picture Prosperity will continue to beam his rosy blessings and condone glaring inefficiency, opportunism and heartless extravagance.

Hollywood is facing today a mighty responsibility. The studios are owned by the New York companies and the New York companies are owned by nation-wide stockholders. A family can wreck its own house if it will, but not the other fellow's. Men have no business at the head of studio affairs today unless they can prove their ability without politics and without luck. The business of production is calling for manpower as never before. If it doesn't get manpower, production will fail; and the test is right here, now.

Marketing New Sound System

The Radio Installation Company, Los Angeles, has introduced a new studio sound system, called the "Rico." According to engineers of the company, the equipment is an effort to meet the needs of independent and foreign production companies which cannot afford the higher priced sound equipments.

The "Rico" system employs the double system of recording. The new method of noiseless recording has been incorporated in the apparatus, which has been specially designed for use in all climates, with precautions having been taken, it is said, to guard against moisture.

Operation of Tiffany Unit To Bill Saal

William ("Bill") Saal's friends in the industry honored the former Publix film buyer at a testimonial dinner Wednesday night at the New York Astor. L. A. Young, Tiffany backer, is understood to have brought Saal from Publix to handle all phases of Tiffany operation, switching Grant L. Cook to the executive business and financing end of that company's activities.

Practically every major company was represented at the gathering of 200 which turned out to pay homage to Saal, and at the dais were: Lou B. Metzger, who represented Columbia; Ned Depinet, RKO Pathe; Felix F. Feist, M-G-M; Al Lichtman, United Artists; Phil Reisman, Universal, and Charles Rosenzweig, RKO. Saal's former associates at Paramount and Publix were, of course, present in force. At the speaker's table alone were Robert J. O'Donnell, Austin C. Keough, David J. Chatkin, Sam Dembow, Jr., representing Sam Katz, as well as himself; George Schaefer, representing Sidney R. Kent; A. M. Botsford, Leon D. Netter, Milton H. Feld, Boris Morros and Arthur Mayer. E. W. Hammons, now associated with L. A. Young in the consolidated Educational-Tiffany-World-Wide-Sono Art interests, was another, as was Grant L. Cook.

Toastmaster A. M. Botsford, Publix publicity advertising chief, read telegrams to Saal from Adolph Zukor, L. J. Ludwig, Minneapolis; Maurice F. Barr, New Orleans; Nat Wolf, Minneapolis; Harry David, Salt Lake City; Vincent R. McFaul, Buffalo; Sam Katz, Publix chief; Ralph A. Kohn, Paramount treasurer; Sam E. Morris, Warners' general manager; Harry M. Warner, Harold B. Franklin, James R. Grainger, Fox general sales manager; Mike Shea, Buffalo; Max Balaban, Chicago; E. V. Richards, New Orleans; Eddie Grainger, Fox; Jay Rubens, Chicago; Levere Montgomery, New Orleans; Mack Mansfield, Chicago; Max Friedman, Des Moines; Harry L. Nace, Phoenix; William K. Jenkins, New Orleans.

Among those present were:

Expenses Show Increase Over Half Million

Rise Over Same Period in 1930 Accounted For by Acquisition of 70 Theatres

Total income from all sources of $25,458,223 for 13 weeks is shown by Fox Film Corporation and wholly owned subsidiary, controlled and affiliated companies, in the comparative consolidated statement of income and expenses for the quarter ended March 28, 1931. This compares with $26,975,744 for the corresponding period of last year. Total expenses were $23,105,235, compared with $22,439,527.

Income available for interest requirements of the parent company and federal income taxes were $2,352,988, against $4,356,218. Interest requirements on the one-year 6 per cent gold notes of Fox Film Corporation, and amortization of discount and expenses totaled in the 1931 quarter $1,228,284. Net profit for the quarter, before federal income taxes, was $1,124,704, as against $4,356,218 in the same period of 1930.

The form used for the 13 weeks ended March 28, 1931, and March 29, 1930, is the same as used in the annual report for 1930, and the figures are comparable. The increase in operating expenses of theatres and exchanges, etc., is occasioned by the fact that the 1931 quarter has the acquisition of 70 theatres, expenses and receipts of which are in the 1931 quarter which were not in the 1930 quarter. It is also to be noted that $2,228,284 for interest and amortization of discount and expenses appeared only in the 1931 quarter.

General Theatres' Quarterly Return Totals $3,157,750

Consolidated and condensed statement of profit and loss of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., for the three months period ended March 31, 1931, shows net sales and other revenue of $3,157,750. After cost of sales, general and administrative expenses, depreciation, etc., totaling $2,908,367, there was net income of subsidiary companies of $249,382. Income from dividends on Fox Film Corporation class A and B stocks amounted to $1,372,601.

Total income of General Theatres Equipment, Inc., exclusive of its equity in the undistributed earnings of non-consolidated controlled companies, was $1,621,983. After interest charges and amortization of debt discount and expense, amounting to $723,273, there remained net income of $898,710 applicable to preferred and common stocks of General Theatres Equipment Inc., exclusive of its equity in the undistributed earnings of non-consolidated controlled companies.

No comparison with the March 31, 1930, results is made due to acquisitions made in 1930.

Fourth of Scenes Concern Foreign Life, Says Wunder

Twenty-five per cent of the scenes shown in American motion pictures in a year concern foreign life and environment, with a consequent stimulus to world trade, world peace and world travel, and a cure for provincialism, the members of the Junior Chamber of Commerce at Glendale, Cal., and Pasadena Rotary Club were told in addresses by Dr. Clinton Wunder, executive vice-president of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences.

International interest in American commodities is affected directly by the screen, and the same is true of foreign goods, Dr. Wunder said, pointing specifically to the enhanced trade relations between the Americas. "Talking pictures are daily talking business throughout the world," he declared.

"Business men of today, wise business men, employ motion pictures as a part of their sales campaign," he said; "furthermore, the increase in production of comedies in the past year is a worthy service to the business man as a tonic."

Bellmak-Pollak Will Release 24

Jack Bellman and Adolph Pollak, now associated in Hollywood Pictures Corporation, have formed a new producing and distributing organization, Peerless Productions, Inc., with offices at 630 9th Ave., in New York. Twenty-four features, two of which are now in work, will be released during 1931-32. The first release is scheduled for September 15th.

The Peerless plan, which is said to have been in development for months, provides for simultaneous state right release throughout the country. By September 1, Bellman and Pollak state that arrangements will have been completed for distribution of product in every territory through Peerless-owned or affiliated exchanges.

Product will be nationally advertised in a comprehensive campaign that will be started shortly.

Jack Bellman is vice president of the new company and Adolph Pollak is general manager.

CANADIAN COMBINE ACTION IS AWAITED

Charge That 95 Per Cent of Distribution in Dominion Is Under Monopoly is Before Labor Minister

The industry in the United States as well as in Canada is awaiting the next move of G. D. Robertson, minister of labor for Canada, following the report of Commissioner Peter White charging that a combine, dominated from the United States, controls 95 per cent of the distribution of motion pictures in the Dominion. At the same time, no statement was forthcoming from the offices of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.

The report of the commissioner, made after a six-months inquiry, also holds that the combine occupies either a dominant or an exclusive position in control of theatres in practically all towns of more than 10,000 population.

The apparent spokesman for the Canadian trade are Arthur Cohen, managing director of Famous Players, and Col. John A. Cooper, president of the distributors' association.

Cooper declared he had no apologies to make regarding his own record in connection with British films. "I am quite ready to defend that when the time arrives," he said.

H. A. Kauffman, manager of Consolidated Theatres, Ltd., Montreal, independent chain of five houses, declared:

"They did not get to the bottom of things at all. They only investigated conditions in Ontario and British Columbia, and did not call witnesses from Montreal or other Quebec cities. They have not heard the half of it, as the situation in Montreal is even worse. The combine controls everything here."

Provincial authorities of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and British Columbia state they are studying the White report, but no decision regarding possible action has been reached.

Dewey Bloom, recently appointed manager of the British film division of Regal Films, Ltd., in which N. L. Nathanson has a large interest, stated the stage was all set in Canada now for a British drive and announced 15 British pictures for scheduled release.

The 23 companies and one association named in the 234-page report are:

Famous Players Canadian Corporation; B & F Theatres, Ltd.; Radio-Keith-Orpheum of Canada, Ltd., and eight other companies affiliated with Famous Players Canadian; Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors of Canada; Canadian Educational Films, Ltd.; Canadian Universal Film Company; Famous Lasky Film Service; Fox Film Corporation; RKO Distributing Corporation of Canada; Columbia Pictures of Canada; Regal Films, Ltd. (distributors for M-G-M and RKO Pathe); United Artists Corporation; Vitagraph, Ltd.; Tiffany Productions of Canada; First National Pictures; Warner Brothers' Pictures and Vitagraph, Inc.

Holman, Botsford Are Assigned to Story Committee

In order that the production department may have a closer contact with distribution and with the theatre in the purchase of suitable screen material, Russell Holman, advertising manager of Paramount, and A. M. Botsford, advertising manager of Publix, have been assigned to the home office "cabinet" of five which passes judgment upon stories for future production.

Russell Holman

A. M. Botsford

The two men will retain their advertising posts.

When the assignment first became known, a false report spread that it was a "polite out" for the two men who have been with Paramount for several years.

However, as one executive said, "Paramount is merely taking advantage of the judgment of these two men."

Declare German Business Crisis

There exists an acute crisis in the German film industry, it was stated at a Berlin meeting recently of Tobis and other German film companies.

Charges were made that Tobis had maintained apparatus and royalty costs to the harm of the German industry, though the charges were denied by Tobis delegates present.

It was declared that there was danger of 700 theatres closing, with a slump of something like 75 per cent in film renting tax anticipated in the coming season. The list of film company bankruptcies was described as alarming.

Charges Made After Inquiry

1 That protection is detrimental to the public.

2 That the activities of the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors Association are against public interest.

3 That Famous Players has a monopoly on many important locations.

4 That Famous Players and affiliated companies have control of vaudeville in Canada.

5 That Paramount Publix owns 93.786 per cent of the issued shares of Famous Players.

6 That detrimental activities by Famous Players include acquisition of theatres, threat of building new houses, securing and holding of theatre sites, improper use of buying power and causing the withholding of suitable pictures for exhibition.

7 That Sam Bloom has made threats to independent exhibitors in Toronto.

8 That the Motion Picture Distributors and Exhibitors Association has employed subterfuge in professing to have enrolled in its ranks exhibitor members and that such members are merely employes of Famous Players.

9 That the association is completely controlled by the Hays organization of New York.

10 That block and blind booking are decidedly detrimental to the public.

11 That the compulsory arbitration clause in film contracts has contributed very materially to the influence and strength of Famous Players and actually to public detriment.

12 That protection granted to Famous Players is far beyond what could be possibly justified and has injured independent exhibitors.

13 That, by this protection, Canada is made to contribute a share to the extravagant salaries paid to picture stars.

14 That, under its present management, Famous Players does not appear to be conducted with quite the ruthless disregard of the rights of others and of the public interest; but that the present management is still under the direction of American interests who control the company.

15 That the industry had its origin in an art, but that in the hands of persons who at present control it, the industry has become purely commercial.

16 That the Cooper organization (the M.P.D.E.A.) has engaged in a program of propaganda with social organizations with the idea of creating a false idea of the objects and aims of this combination of producers and distributors with Famous Players.

17 That, with regard to British films, much could be done in placing before the theatregoing public British manners, British language and British ideals.

18 That the parties to the combine undertook to force awards of arbitrators by harsh and unreasonable terms, leaving the exhibitors at the mercy of exchanges.

19 That, in regard to credit rules, these distributors, the M.P.D.E.A. and Famous Players, constitute a combine within the meaning of the Combines Act and a detriment to the public.

ASIDES & INTERLUDES

By JAMES CUNNINGHAM

THAT personal trust fund of the brothers Warner which recently was placed at the disposal of the company when it felt the depression reaction, is understood to have reached $30,000,000. . . .

The fund had its inception a few years ago when the Warners, who were in on the ground floor of sound, were riding high, and realizing that fate is tricky they agreed to set aside several thousands each week in a fund which would protect them, personally, against the days when—and if—they found themselves out of the picture business. . . .

Unlike nearly all chain managers, Bill has been getting $10,000 yearly, and then the home office agreed that Bill could continue . . . at $3,000. . . . Aggressive, friendly and thoroughly a showman of unusual merit, his leaving is understood to have launched a flood of protests from Brooklyn merchants to RKO executives. . . .

From the London Film Review comes this: . . . "Every now and then we receive publicity matter about films, designed to impress the stuff with the colossal stamp. . . . Not long ago we received from an American office a long list of figures giving the number of actors in the film, the number of animals used, size of the crowds, etc. . . . But when the picture was trade shown we took the trouble to check up these figures and found that in every case the figures given were, to put it mildly, at least ten times those representing the actual numbers. . . . And in one or two cases they were a hundred times greater."

One will always remember Harry L. Reichenbach for many reasons, but among the mountainous humorous angles—and relayed via Winchell—is Harry's line that "A press agent is nothing but a bill-poster with a full dress suit. . . . And a movie press agent is only an accent-remover." . . .

"CAMERAD," out Hollywood way, is author of the one about the studio management at a rental lot which had its hands plenty full with independents, chiefly promoters and "chiselers," who sat around, waiting hopefully for stray bankrolls with which to produce quickies. . . . They talk in millions and pay off in promises and some of them even sleep in their millions because landladies will insist upon impounding suitcases with the one clean shirt. . . .

The blackout came, however, when the studio management rebelled after the quickies started plugging in electric cooking utensils on studio light outlets. . . . Now, signs in conspicuous corners about the lot blazen forth with the depressing news: "Absolutely no light housekeeping permitted."

Amos 'n' Andy, NBC stars, and Morton Downey, of Columbia ether waves, are in the midst of a bitter struggle for supremacy of the seven p. m. period on the air. . . . And those in the know will tell you that Mort is commencing to gain several paces on the "colored" competition. . . . NBC and Radio Pictures are co-related companies, while Paramount owns Columbia. . . .

Josef Cherniavsky, former orchestra leader at Saenger's, New Orleans, and a recent Hollywood arrival, wrote the folks back home describing Hollywood as being far from the fast-moving, wild and joyful town he left. "Movie production is slow," said Josef, "and depression is plentiful in these parts. Producers are wary and are in a quandary." . . .

But Josef remains in Hollywood. . . .

MR. CARL LAEMMLE an intrepid pioneer of the industry has been through all the periods of ordeal in the industry, and some of his own, from the beginning. And he is still smiling. When he was beset by the powerful Patents Company, he grinned and fought—and advertised. When he fought with his partners, he laughed and fought —and advertised. When business was good he crowed about that, and when it got dull he got excited. If he had known when he was licked he would have been out of business in 1908, in 1912, and again in 1916. He didn't know it and it wasn't so. He has always believed in two enduring facts, the motion picture and Carl Laemmle. He keeps selling.

she is just a working girl

The very dignified advertising agency, N. W. Ayer & Son, Inc., in the dignified city of Philadelphia took a page of the dignified New York Times the other day to remark and admit to the world of American business that "advertising is a working girl." It is a pleasure to have this question settled. There are slightly divergent ideas. Howard Dietz holds to the notion that advertising is a lion. Hy Daab thinks of advertising as a robust and slightly naked young giant, a Titan. Bob Cochrane thinks that it is a sort of radio activity that comes "straight from the shoulder" of Carl Laemmle. Charles McCarthy for years has made it the fire and smoke from a Paramountain shooting at a ring of stars. Pathe spent twenty-five years proving it was a rooster.

And, on this subject, C. F. Kettering, vice-president of General Motors Corporation, writes in Printer's Ink: "Advertising is to me a story about a product. I believe that business will come back when we get some products that people want to buy. . . . I also know that there is a horrible thing in this world called monotony that has more to do with business than anything else. . . . If you want to kill any idea in the world today, get a committee working on it."

Mr. Kettering's remarks charmingly apply to some aspects of the motion picture selling situation today. It is pretty clear that our motion picture industry appears these days to be influenced by the genius of a committee on hard times.

This working girl, "Advertising," has often proved the best leading lady in the business. She keeps kissable, and she can do a bit for the industry today, if the gloom committee will let her.

REALIZING ONLY GRAZES FILM STOCK

Picture Shares Relatively Strong in Week's Market Hit by General Profit-Taking

By THE ANALYST

Realizing by traders who had picked up stocks last week for quick-turn profits brought a lower price range in motion picture stocks during the past week, but the recessions were comparatively narrow in view of the declines that took place in some other sections of the list and lack of important pressure against the film shares was further reflected in the moderate turnover.

The dullness that developed on the moderate reactions denoted an absence of liquidation, and there was no doubt that the principal picture shares were being held for the benefits that are generally expected to accrue from operations in the last half and from the working economies recently effected by the major companies in the industry.

Some reaction from the broad advances made over the last two weeks was logical and, with announcement of universal acceptance of the Hoover war debt suspension proposal out of the way, the market was left without any special stimulus and with a somewhat impaired technical position.

Consequently, following another bulge in the pre-holiday session last week, the market was subject to a steady dribble of selling, which, however, in the picture shares, was a routine process and only about one-quarter of the previous weeks' gains were eradicated, although at the end of the week the leaders of the group were well off from their highs of the period.

RKO displayed greatest resistance to downward tendencies, and although subject to the largest turnover of the group, sold off only about a point from last week's closing level.

Warner was another steady feature, holding within its recent range of 7 to 8. The stock, ever since its recovery from the year's low of 4¾, has been one of the best performers in the list, holding steady in some of the most reactionary sessions and reflecting a considerable change in financial sentiment regarding the company's status since the receivership rumors were dispelled some time ago. Considerable importance is attached in the financial district to the interbooking arrangement with Paramount, a step that, in the opinion of the Street, should react beneficially to both companies.

Loew's was subject to considerable profit-taking on its recent bulge, but the issue remained one of the speculative favorites. The report for the fiscal year ending August 31 is being looked forward to with keen interest, consensus of estimates averaging $7 a share, but in some quarters there is talk of an even better showing.

Fox was subject to increased pressure late in the week after issuance of the report for the first quarter, which showed a slash of $3,231,514 in net profits, as compared with the corresponding period of 1930. Total income made a better comparison, and the reduction in net was attributed by the report to a sharp increase in operating expenditures occasioned by the acquisition of 77 additional theatres during the quarter.

Although selling off from a high of over 28 to around 25, Paramount displayed underlying strength that indicated buying support just under current market levels. Second quarter earnings of the company are expected to cover the 62½ cents dividend, while some estimates of the company's showing for the first half of this year range as high as $1.85 a share. This would compare with $2.37 a share in the first half of 1930, a very favorable comparison in view of general business conditions.

Eastman Kodak was subject to its usual wide gyrations, selling off from a high of 153¾ to around 144, where it was off more than four points from last Thursday's final level. Consolidated Film and Pathe shares moved in a narrow range and were notably steady, while action of amusement issues on the bond market was very favorable, even the convertible descriptions holding comparatively steady in the face of declining prices for their relative stocks.

Pathe Exchange Earnings Listed

Profit of $36,941 after interest and amortization for four and two-thirds weeks ended January 29, 1931, and a loss of $73,999 for 13½ weeks ended May 2, are reported by Pathe Exchange and subsidiaries. The January 29 date was the one on which certain properties and parts of the business were sold to RKO. The 13½ weeks figure is based on application of certain profits to reduction value of assets involved.

Statement of income and surplus for the four and two-third weeks period follows: Gross sales and rentals, $1,259,215; cost of sales and rentals and selling and general administrative expenses, $1,211,227; balance, $47,988; other income, $28,603; total income, $76,591; interest accrued and amortization, $39,677; profit, $36,914.

Statement of income and surplus for the thirteen and one-third week period is: Received in liquidation of receivables, stories and investments, $496,050; gross sales and rentals, $1,133,932; dividends and interest received, $85,742; total income, $1,715,724; book value of receivables, stories and investments liquidated, $496,050; film amortization and costs, and costs of other operations, including general salaries and expenses, $1,130,392; profits on certain operations applied to reduction of ledger value of assets involved, $64,334; interest payable accrued, $98,947; loss, $73,999.

B & K Pays Dividend

Balaban & Katz, Chicago, has declared a regular quarterly dividend of 75 cents on common and $1.75 on preferred, payable October 3 to stockholders of September 15.

THE CAMERA REPORTS

CALLED "A COMER." James H. Dunn, former stock and Broadway leading man, has definitely "clicked," they say, in his first important screen assignment, Fox's "Bad Girl." He's under contract to Fox, where his next will be "Sob Sister," newspaper story.

HONORED BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENT. This affair of state occurred the other day in the office of Adolph Zukor, when the president of Paramount Publix was awarded the Grand Cross of Portugal. Shown are Sebastino Sampaio, consul general of Brazil; Zukor, Dr. Joas de Deus Rames, consul of Portugal, who made the presentation; and J. Saavedra de Figueireda, vice consul of Portugal.

"NOT A MOVIE." A premiere, but this time that of a "legitimate" play, "The Man in Possession" brought Jack L. Warner and Jack, Jr., to the Warner theatre in Los Angeles, as here recorded.

VARIED CHARM. Eleanor Boardman, Paramount player (and another of our "Celebrities at Home"), on the hearth of the old Spanish farm house fireplace in her Beverly Hills residence.

RARE SEA MONSTER. Heave-ho, me lads, for she's a big on' and you can lay to that! Yes, sir, seldom do the ocean's depths yield such as this, a giant sea bat, which was caught off Mexico by M-G-M's fishing picture company under Harold Austin.

MADE GOOD. An Iowa farm boy, was this urban-looking chap, Kent Taylor. Now he has a Paramount contract awarded him just the other day.

A FAMILY AFFAIR. Ten years ago William McGann was chief cameraman for Douglas Fairbanks, Sr. Time and talent ultimately made him a director. And just recently he was assigned to First National's "I Like Your Nerve"—a starring vehicle for Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. Above he's showing Young Doug a piece of one of dad's old productions.

Text of French Decree Letting Down the Bars

Article 1

The film year for which the present regulations are established commences on July 1st of each year and ends on June 30th of the following year.

Article 2

Is considered as a French film a film produced in studios located in French territory or in territory under French protectorate or French mandate, by French producers, with the collaboration of exclusively French elements, under reserve of certain derogations which may be admitted by the Commission in individual cases.

Article 3

The following categories of films are automatically classified, that is to say, they are automatically inscribed on the list of films susceptible of receiving a visa:

1. All French films, such as specified in Art. 2 above mentioned;
2. For the film year commencing on July 1st, 1931 and ending on June 30th, 1932, all films which, although not complying with the above-stated definition of a French film, are entirely produced in studios located in French territory, or territory under French protectorate or French mandate;
3. All silent films regardless of their origin;
4. All newsreel films and all films of an exclusively advertising character, regardless of their origin;
5. Films without dialogue, either talking or singing, the musical accompaniment of which is recorded on film or discs or synchronized, regardless of their origin.

Article 4

For the film year commencing on July 1st, 1931, and ending on June 30th, 1932, no permits for the exploitation of foreign films under the provisions of Art. 7 of the regulations previously in force will be granted. The importation and exploitation in the French territory (or French protectorates) of films produced abroad in countries where French film production is not restricted will be entirely free, under reserve of the application of the last paragraph of the present Article.

With regard to films produced in other foreign countries, their importation and exploitation in the French territory (or French protectorates) will be placed under a reciprocity rule, the modalities of which, concerning each of these countries, will be established by the Commission.

The Commission will determine for all of the foreign film producing countries the maximum number of talking films, with subsequent synchronization in French (dubbed) to be imported into France during the film year '31-'32.

Article 5

For the application of paragraph 2 of the preceding Article the average length of films is fixed at 2,500 meters. The importation and exploitation of several short subject films not exceeding a total length of 2,500 meters are considered equivalent to that of a single film.

Article 6

The owners of permits authorizing the exploitation in France of films produced abroad, that were delivered according to Article 7 of the regulations previously in force, must make use of these permits before July 15th, 1931. After this date, the validity of the permits previously granted will expire.

Article 7

The regulations of May 28th, 1928, are cancelled.

FRANCE DROPS QUOTA RESTRICTIONS ON U. S.

Decree Signed July 6 Terminates Long Negotiations; Seen as Hays Office Victory

The French government has finally dropped the bars of quota restrictions which have stood in the way, heretofore, of the free entrance of American motion pictures into France. The action followed long negotiations in Paris.

Maurice Petsche, Under-Secretary of State for Fine Arts, representing the French government, this week signed the cinema control decree, effective from July 1, 1931 to June 30, 1932, whereby American motion pictures may enter France free of all import restrictions, amounting to the abolition of the quota law.

The passage of the decree marks the first time in the history of French film regulations that reciprocity has been established. American films have entered France for the past three years only on a contingent basis, the last regulation calling for a seven-to-one arrangement, with seven American films admitted for distribution in France for every French film purchased for distribution in the United States.

The decree is looked upon as a tacit admission by the French government that the principle of quota regulations for American product is impracticable. It is hoped by American interests that the French move will prove an opening wedge for similar favorable action in several other European countries where quota restrictions prevail against American films.

Film circles here and abroad generally concede the passage of the decree a distinct success for the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, headed by Will H. Hays, which organization has had representatives in Paris for some time, negotiating with French interests and the government.

Principally involved in the successful termination of the issue were, in addition to M. Petsche, Daniel J. Reagan, acting commercial attache of the American Embassy in Paris; Harold L. Smith, representing the Hays organization and George R. Canty, trade commissioner for films in Paris, and representing the American government in the matter.

American films may now enter France without restriction as to numbers, being subject only to import duties. The French government will in the future place restrictions on films coming only from countries where restrictions are imposed on French films.

American interests see a greater stimulus for film production in France, as a result of the removal of what has been termed by the American government an unfair trade barrier. There is seen, also, a resulting increase in the world distribution of French language films.

Gallup Leaves United

Bruce Gallup, advertising director at United Artists' home office in New York, resigned this week, and following a four-weeks' vacation he will complete negotiations pending with another company.

Hal Horne, in charge of United Artists' exploitation on the West Coast, is Gallup's successor.

Bruce Gallup

Gallup, long a student of motion picture publicity and advertising promotion has worked over a long period for the cause of the advertising profession in the film industry. He is widely credited with considerable accomplishments in the uplifting of its advertising standards.

As one of the initial group of workers and officers of the New York Motion Picture Club, and as official handicapper for 10 years of the "Film Daily" Golf Tournament and President of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Gallup's sportsmanship, and loyalty to his profession and its place in the film world, has created for him a wide circle of friends in the motion picture business, among the newspapers and the general advertising profession.

Stanley-Warner Books Paramount Features Again

The Stanley-Warner Company will play Paramount product for the first time since the split over a year ago, when "The Smiling Lieutenant" opens at the Stanley, Philadelphia, on July 24. It is reported the Boyd will reopen to show Paramount product.

Keith's, operated by A. R. Boyd for the past year as Paramount's first run, will close in August, it is understood. It is believed that the lease, which has one year to run, will be taken by Stanley-Warner.

The company will continue to deal with independents, though it has taken Paramount product for the larger percentage of its schedule.

FOX PLANS PRODUCING IN GERMANY, AUSTRALIA

Foreign Chief Reveals Tieup With Tobis, Possible Antipodean Production Plant

Clayton Sheehan, Fox foreign chief, in London last week, revealed that Fox will produce in Europe with an alliance between Fox and Tobis, German company, calling for not less than 10 features a year to be made at the Tobis studios in Berlin. Production will start next month, with the films in German only, in a concentrated bid for the Central European market.

Clayton Sheehan

It is also the plan of Fox, as revealed by Sheehan, to establish the first large Australian studios of an American company, to produce talking films which are expected to rank for British quota. Sheehan will himself go to Australia before returning to New York, to investigate conditions. Fox already owns the Australian Hoyts theatre circuit, whose recent chief, F. W. Thring, has already formed a production unit.

Sheehan stated that he would stop over in India on his way to Australia to look over the new company which Fox has formed there. Sheehan was reported as stating that Fox might combine with F. W. Thring in his Efftee Productions, Ltd., Australia.

Hoffman Out of Circuit in Sept.

I. J. Hoffman will, it is understood, relinquish operating management of Warner Brothers 80 New England theatres on Sept. 1, at which time the two-year contract made with Warners when that company purchased the Hoffman circuit expires.

Warners purchased control of the Hoffman Brothers' 19 theatres, principally in Connecticut, as the nucleus of a strong New England organization. Up to that time, Publix was the dominant factor in that territorial division. Hoffman was contracted to supervise the development, which was completed some few months ago.

Few U. S. Films Rejected

In 1930, only 3.2 percent of the feature films imported into Australia from the United States were finally rejected by the Australian censor, while the British rejections were eight percent.

Schoedsack Sails July 9

Ernest B. Schoedsack, explorer-producer, will sail from San Francisco, July 9, for India, to film scenes for "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer," Paramount film.

Tribute by Hy Daab

The death of Harry Reichenbach marks the passing of a gay, courageous spirit.

He gave glamour and color to the industry in an era which saw the motion picture soar to unexampled heights.

His death is particularly distressing today when one contemplates the sadly dispirited mood of an industry which is fundamentally emotional.

Harry Reichenbach took the commonplace and the routine and lifted them to the clouds on the wings of fabulous imagination and energy.

We need such spirit woefully in this stuffed shirt era of the movies.

Twelve Westerns On Big 4 List

John R. Freuler, president of Big 4 Film, has completed the line-up of action Westerns to be distributed by his company for the season 1931-1932. They are to be released at the rate of one a month and will be divided into two series.

John R. Freuler

Titles on the 12 include: "Headin' for Trouble," "Cyclone Kid," "Lure of the Range," "Desert Spawn," "Rip Roaring Broncs," "Mark of the Spur," "Blazed Trails," "Highway Riders," "Hard Pan Gulch," "Rio Grande Raiders," "Guns and Saddles" and "Quick Trigger Lee."

The series of six melodramas to be released by Big 4 will be announced upon completion of plans for the Westerns.

William Worthington and John Twist, Radio studio story scouts, are in Europe searching for material in foreign books and plays. Worthington will be in France and Italy, Twist in England and Germany.

Langdon Honor Guest

Harry Langdon, comedian, and his wife were honor guests at the last monthly meeting of Stage and Screen Scribes of America, held at the Cincinnati Zoo.

Starts Southern Circuit

J. W. Myers of New York is establishing a circuit of 15 houses in Texas and Louisiana. His headquarters are in Dallas.

All Broadway in Final Farewell to Harry Reichenbach

The tribute this week to the memory of Harry L. Reichenbach, who died on July 3 at Doctors' Hospital in New York, once more brought to light the fallacies of the old maxims that the human equation in the amusement world is chilled to affection for a favorite son, or that Broadway's heart is worn on a coat sleeve.

Harry Reichenbach

Newcomers to Broadway and gray-haired veterans of "Mazda Lane" bowed heads lowly with leaders of New York government, including Mayor James J. Walker, and with hundreds who came to pay homage from the general business world, newspaperdom and the film industry, who, led by Will H. Hays, Grover Whalen, Sidney Kent, Florenz Ziegfeld, Jesse L. Lasky and A. C. Blumenthal, gathered in mournful silence while Dr. Nathan Krass conducted services at Temple Emanu-El. Later they joined with Harry Hershfield, eulogist, to bid farewell to Reichenbach, dean of American exploiteers and one of the most colorful characters ever known to motion pictures, or to the city rooms of most of the country's newspapers.

The end came after a painful cancerous illness of several months, during which Reichenbach's almost unbeatable grit, keen intellect and steeled nerve fought so vigorously as to cause amazement to many old students of medical science. But the odds were too great.

Reichenbach was born March 17, 1882 at Frostburg, Md., the son of Charles and Matilda Reichenbach. He was one of a family of eight, of whom six survive. They are Walter, Leon, Joseph, Howard, Elsie and Mrs. Lee Hass. He is survived by his widow, Lucinda Bacon Reichenbach.

Reichenbach was a major in the World War but never used the title because he did not feel that he had won it fighting. He served as attache of the American Diplomatic Corps and was assigned in charge of enemy propaganda on the Western Front. For five months he was with Lord Northcliffe in England. He was personally responsible for bombarding the enemy lines with over 45 million pieces of propaganda. He served continuously with the American Diplomatic service for three years from 1916 to 1919 and was awarded the victory medal and the New York State military medal.

For 13 years he was advance agent for road shows playing one night stands. He was road agent for Henry B. Harris. Later he handled publicity for David Belasco, Florenz Ziegfeld, Klaw & Erlanger, A. H. Woods and John Cort. He resigned his post with Morris Gest to join Jesse Lasky and help establish the Lasky Play Company. He left Lasky to become Metro's advertising and publicity director. Then to World-Equitable, later becoming a partner in the Frohman concern. He then opened a free lance publicity bureau but never had more than two on his staff.

He was an ardent fight fan and his favorite pastime was attending the fights at Madison Square Garden with Mayor Walker.

His last public appearance was as toastmaster at a testimonial dinner for Harry Hershfield.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

THE BOSTON TRANSCRIPT editorially makes protest concerning the screen's typical manner of presenting irrelevant credits and the limited footage given to casts, in the following terms:

Via the Films

Habitual attendants at the motion pictures have observed here and there of late certain subtle forms of advertising creeping into them. They are not flamboyant, not intrusive, they do not exasperate the spectator who wants his money's worth of picture and nothing more...The only question is whether this may not, like some radio advertising, become too insistent, come to be lugged in with no rhyme nor reason except the exploiting of a brand of merchandise. Evidently the question has come up in Hollywood, for now one of the great potentates of the motion-picture industry announces that in the films produced by his company there will be no such advertising.

We do not find, however, that he touches upon another phase of motion-picture advertising, and that is the interludes during which coming shows cast their shadows before on the screen. In some cases this takes the form of the most arrant ballyhooing. Some of the producers manage these advance announcements so cleverly that they form part of the entertainment — but it might be wished that one and all would curtail this feature of their programs and give a few seconds more to the projection of the cast on the screen, so that the spectator could get the glimmering of an idea what players are taking the minor parts. It seems to us that this is of more importance to the audience than reading the names of the electricians and assistant vice-directors and call-boys and general utility functionaries and general odds and ends. They may be most necessary to a perfect production, but the public might as well read a page in the city directory for all the contribution the names make to an intelligent enjoyment of the show.

THE SAN FRANCISCO NEWS presents an article by Mrs. Walter Ferguson in which she raises protest against the famous old newsreel habit of continuously photographing the army and the navy. She says:

I grow angrier and angrier as I sit these days at the movies and am regaled with the news reels.

During the past six weeks, according to faithful count, not one single program has neglected to show soldiers, guns, battleships or military maneuvers of some sort.

Entertainments are made hideous by reminding us that in every corner of the earth, from Cape Horn to Copenhagen, the boys are drilling, drilling, drilling.

We see the huge battleships So and So demonstrating what a fine retaliation she would make if an enemy vessel sneaked up on her. Munitions are wasted on an unbelievable scale.

Whether all this stuff is subtle propaganda, I do not know. Probably not. But as an audience of one, I'm announcing that I'm fed up on it.

Most of us merely resign ourselves to the inevitable and take militarism for granted, but it's hardly logical to argue that all this play of belligerency will not bring about disastrous results.

The trouble with the pacifists is that they are too pacific. The men who love and honor war shriek its glories to the heavens, while those of us who dream of concord are content with timid expostulation.

A VERY considerable portion of the repute and status of the motion picture in the public mind is built upon the attitude and expressions of the daily and periodical press. The press and the public react upon each other, consciously, verbally. The motion picture is quite as intimately related to that same public, but in this relation neither is so articulate. In consequence of this, what the press has to say of the screen assumes a special importance to the motion picture industry, and constitutes a broadly based report that can be had through no other channel. Motion Picture Herald will from time to time present the more significant expressions of the press.—THE EDITOR.

The solemn Associated Press has purveyed to the newspapers of America the following important dispatch:

COPENHAGEN, July 6—His first visit to civilization was too much for Otto Knudsen, Eskimo hunter of the Lauge Koch Arctic Expedition, who became violently demented when he saw his first movie at Thorshavn, the Faroe Islands. His companions overpowered him and lashed him to his berth in the steamer Tjaldur, which brought him to Copenhagen yesterday.

This may be news, but it is certainly not the first instance in which a motion picture has put a spectator into a state of mind where he was fit to be tied.—THE EDITOR.

THE NEW ORLEANS TRIBUNE feels that the motion picture might well pay heed to and invite criticism from broader fields of thought, giving voice to the attitude in a friendly editorial which says:

Censorship Or—?

The moving picture industry has had its troubles. Here and there its corporations have been reorganized. At a time when everything is coming under critical review, we find a good deal of dissatisfaction expressed with the movies. Some of this we believe is warranted.

The movie is no longer a minor industry. It started in a penny arcade but it has become a national amusement and has circled the world. Whatever we may say about it at home, we must all be rather proud of the fact that it not only brings dollars into the United States, but that it advertises the United States abroad. Partly on this account, those of us who are friendly to the American movie want it to be better. While we applaud the initiative and ability which has made it successful, we recognize its defects. The movie people intelligently set up a censorship of their own under Mr. Will Hays, to correct some of these weaknesses.

Of course the public is always suspicious of a censor whose work is paid for by people who have a commercial interest in the matter being censored. Some believe that some of the pictures released by Mr. Hays' organization are harmful to morals and not what should be given America and the world in the way of amusement.

On the other hand, many of us are only too well aware of the dangers of official censorship. For when we go in for official censorship we take chances not only with the discouragement and destruction of creative art, but we risk interfering with free speech and free thought.

The Federation of Churches of Christ, through its Department of Research and Education, takes exception to some of the methods followed by the Hays organization. We do not know what plan the Federal Council may have to improve moving pictures, and we are always made nervous by the idea of religious censorship. But we are convinced that the owners of moving picture industries would do well to invite the constructive criticism of their industry by the leaders of thought, religion, education, political and artistic thought in America.

The moving picture industry is new. It is great. Its progress has been marvelous. It enjoys enormous patronage and in our opinion should and can have additional patronage. It is time, however, for it to take constructive steps to improve its product.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

July 1, 1931.

Mr. Hiram S. Brown,
President, R. K. O. Corporation,
1560 Broadway,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Brown:

Any movement that tends to foster patriotism, instill love for country in the minds of our youth and encourage confidence among our people in the ultimate welfare and prosperity of the United States is deserving of the support of every loyal American. It is for this reason that I am happy to endorse the program, sponsored by your organization at the suggestion of the Vice President, to extend the facilities of the stage, screen and radio in promoting patriotic demonstrations.

Yours faithfully,

Herbert Hoover

President Hoover's personal endorsement of RKO's Patriotic Week is evidenced in this reproduction of his letter to Hiram S. Brown, head of RKO.

Edward L. Klein To Work Abroad

Edward L. ("Eddie") Klein, a pioneer distributor of American films in foreign markets, leaves soon for Europe to establish headquarters in Paris, from which city he will make periodical visits to London, Berlin and other Continental film capitols, representing American producers and distributors in England and on the Continent in the distribution of their product abroad. Klein says he will arrange for the cooperative production of multilingual pictures with American, British and Continental producers for the purpose of internationalizing film production and distribution.

Edward L. Klein

For the past 13 years, Klein has operated from New York, making annual trips abroad, each extending from eight to nine months. At present, Eddie Klein is making New York headquarters at the offices of Winkler Film Corp., 25 W. 45th St.

S. O. S. Corporation Offers New AC Sound Apparatus

The S. O. S. Corporation, recently moved, with J. A. Tannenbaum, Inc., to 1600 Broadway, New York, has announced a new AC operated sound-on-film apparatus for two projectors.

The equipment consists of two sound heads with photo electric cells; optical systems, exciter lamps, lamp mounts, AC power supply. No motor generators or batteries are used.

Seth Parker to Studio July 20

Seth Parker (Phillips Lord) is clearing up his radio broadcasting so as to arrive at the Radio lot in Hollywood July 20 with twelve of his company to appear in his support in a Radio picture.

Lily Damita, Radio star, leaves July 11 for a six weeks' vacation in France, following which she will return to Hollywood for the third Radio picture under her contract.

Big Market for Non-Theatrical in Educational Field

tion, long evinced by educators and definitely expressed in the Society for the Advancement of Visual Education, has been even increased by the addition of sound and dialogue to the powers of the screen. Now the organization named has such commercial interests as Electrical Research Products to assist it practicably in its work. It is pointed out, however, that two conditions are necessary before educational motion pictures can advance with the rapidity that their efficacy in education seems to support. They are:

1. Entrance into the field of enough responsible and resourceful producers of educational pictures to assure a steady and varied supply of authentic subjects.

2. Development of a technique that most effectively combines the best principles of talking picture production with those of pedagogy.

With respect to the first condition, it is pointed out that at present there are only a few hundred educational subjects, many of which have not been produced directly for the classroom. The lack of subjects is laid to the fewness of schools with equipment. On the other hand, the fewness of equipped schools is laid to the lack of suitable subjects. It is therefore the opinion that production of educational films must keep pace with developments in the equipment field if this division of the motion picture industry is to advance rapidly.

The second condition is involved in the first, referring especially to the absence now in the educational field of enterprises comparable to the Hollywood studios making regular programs of pictures under the best technical and creative supervision.

Still another factor, one which would grow in importance as the first available market neared saturation, is the number of schools in outlying districts not having electrical power. This number, of course, is continually being diminished as progress extends power lines to the rural regions. There also remains the possibility that a portable supply of suitable power will be developed.

Wampas Child Benefit to Feature Many Child Stars

The Writers-Wampas benefit in Hollywood on July 12, "by children, for children, to help children" will be featured by the appearance of numerous child screen stars, including Jackie Cooper, Mitzi Green, Nanci Price and Leon Janney.

The entire proceeds of the two performances, matinee and evening, will be turned over to the Parent-Teachers' Association to aid in feeding the needy school children of Los Angeles.

A CONTRAST IN MUSICAL TREATMENT

Some more or less pertinent observations on the importance of music in American and foreign-made photoplays now extant—John Barrymore in "Svengali" — Emil Jannings in "Der Grosse Tenor."

By JOSEPH O'SULLIVAN

FOLLOWING that mythical line of least resistance which distinguishes the mediocrity of commercial product from what is considered as the hazardous adventures of originality, seems to be an obsession with the master minds of motion picture fabrication in this land of ours, at least so far as the fusion of picture and sound, particularly music, is concerned.

Evidently, this is a set policy on the part of the big business men responsible for the screen entertainment of our great Grand Rapidized country, although it must be obvious to the most standardized intelligence that triteness is a vice more persistent and deadly than any other form of malady to which the arts (and certainly motion pictures must be included in that category) are subject.

It is true that Old King Sonos raised the very dickens when he first invaded filmland. While Old King Cole had only three fiddlers at his command, Old King Sonos has all the fiddlers, piccolo players, trombonists, human and inhuman larynxes, and noisemakers galore ready and only too willing to do their utmost. The entry of Old King Sonos into Cinemaland was accompanied by a fanfare that was terrifying. He ran amuck in a copious cacchination of cacophony, rhythmic rantings and the tantalizing tintinnabulations of Tin Pan Alley, reinforced with realistic recordings of grinding, shrieking and raucous noises that were deafening. After two years of an orgy of sound the old boy seems to have contracted nodes on his vocal chords. In the beginning he didn't have much of significance to say, but he said it in a loud voice. What he accomplished was to demonstrate that he could make at least fifty-seven varieties of noise. This should not be held against the old chap; he had simply discovered he had a voice in films and just had to use it, pertinently or impertinently. He couldn't be expected to articulate intelligently all at once.

But the minds that guide the destiny of pictures seem to have come to the conclusion that he still hasn't much of significance to say—and they're not letting him say it, at least not in Hollywood.

One is forced to this conclusion when such an interesting adventure into the realms of materia musica as Du Maurier's "Trilby" is distorted into a melodramatic melange of hypnotic hysteria too obviously for the purpose of affording John Barrymore, great actor as he is, the widest latitude in the exposition of his brilliant histrionic gifts. The resultant picture thrills hardly compensate for the lost illusions of those who had sensed in Du Maurier's story possibilities of unusual musical treatment that would mark a distinct advance in photoplay-music productions.

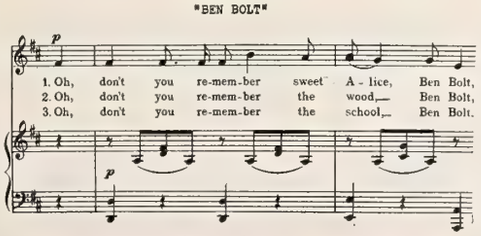
Svengali, as Du Maurier conceived him, was first of all a musical creative genius who used his hypnotic powers in playing upon a human instrument as a great violinist would express himself upon a Stradivarius. He found that medium in Trilby, and so began that strange alliance from which the author evolved a fascinating study in musical megalomania.

But the photoplay stresses Svengali as the hypnotist who uses his talents and sinister powers almost solely to dominate women. Conspicuously absent from the picture were those scenes in the Latin Quarter studio described by Du Maurier where the virtuoso-hypnotist weaves his musical spell upon Little Billee, Taffy and The Laird as

This rollicking German ditty is the principal motivating song in "Der Grosse Tenor." It is first sung by Winkelmann (Jannings) in a beer garden, surrounded by his admirers. Later it recurs when the great tenor discovers he has regained his voice and decides to return to the operatic stage.

he plays divinely the Chopin Impromptu in A flat or Schubert's Rosamonde, or improvises with devilish artistry; and of little Gecko rhapsodizing on the violin the Hungarian love plaints, czardas, gypsy dances, under the hypnotic eye of the dirty Pole; and of Trilby rendering "Ben Bolt" in a voice which Svengali described as one that has "its roots in the stomach, and blossoms on the lips like the voice of Madame Alboni —voce sulle labre—un cri du coeur!"

Nor is there shown that unforgettable scene which the novelist paints of Svengali and Gecko improvising on "Ben Bolt," playing it in fugue, canon and counterpoint—in minor, pizzicato, con sordino—adagio, andante, allegretto, scherzo—exhausting all its possibilities of beauty, till their susceptible audience was all but crazed with delight and wonder. What an opportunity ignored in the picture!



"BEN BOLT"
1. Oh, don't you re-mem-ber sweet A - lice, Ben Bolt,
2. Oh, don't you re-mem-ber the wood,— Ben Bolt,
3. Oh, don't you re-mem-ber the school,— Ben Bolt.
p

Du Maurier, the author of "Trilby," used this plaintive old ballad as the theme around which revolves the sinister psychological drama of the musician-hypnotist, Svengali, and the artist's model, Trilby.

Here, indeed, we find one of the most glorious subjects that could be devised for the perfect exposition of talking-music-picture art, ruthlessly cast into a commonplace mold—Du Maurier's "Trilby" metamorphosed into a Hollywood "Svengali" for Mr. Barrymore. There is no doubt but that Mr. Barrymore does act—so valiantly, so sinisterly the charlatanism of the role evolved for him, that the musical-psychical significance is submerged and the trite hypnotist emerges triumphant to make a film holiday.

If the masters of our home-made product have any intention or inclination to produce pictures in which music has a really integral function, it would be well for them to observe, analyze and emulate some of the recent importations that have been showing in and around Broadway.

At the Cosmopolitan theatre that splendid actor, Emil Jannings, held forth with much gusto in "Der Grosse Tenor," built around the adventures and career of a grand opera tenor in Vienna and South America. In such a setting the music flows as freely as the beer and wine of those blessed locales. Herr Albert Winkelmann (Jannings), gifted with a golden voice and lusty for the good things of life, breaks forth into song in one of those dear old beer gardens, and the music-loving populace crash the place and join, en masse, in the chorus. They also crash the opera house at night when he is billed to appear, acclaiming him in "Othello." They carry their saengerbund banners and gemuethlichtkeit to the boat when he sails for Buenos Aires, and the frauenverein and maennerchor again lift up their voices in the Teutonic equivalent of bon voyage and good luck. Upon his return from South America where his voice had failed him, his admirers, not knowing of his failure, again assemble their larynxes in a mighty chorus of welcome. Later, Winkelmann's voice returns and he makes a triumphal reentry on the Vienna stage in "Lohengrin."

This is all very natural in such an environment where music is as much a necessity as beer and cheese, and the result is a delightful transcript of Teutonic musical life. While no attempt is made to have the music serve in a narrative capacity or in any way usurp the dialogue, the motivating theme is distinctly a musical one and is imbued with what the Germans call stimmung—a sincerity of emotional-artistic expression characteristic of true interpretation.

The musical arrangement of "Der Grosse Tenor" was under the very able direction of

Honeymoon Lane

(Sono-Art)

Eddie Dowling Returns

Eddie Dowling returns to the screen after a long absence in "Honeymoon Lane," produced by V. & D. Productions for Paramount release, and the Broadway star "wows" them. Ray Dooley, Vaudeville and Follies headliner, stands out conspicuously with a comedy part that has had few equals in talking pictures.

A San Bernardino audience howled with glee through almost the entire length of "Honeymoon Lane" on preview despite the fact that the picture has yet to make another visit to the cutting room.

The picture has romance, plenty of real comedy, action and drama. If the preview crowd is any criterion the public will like it immensely and the kids will go for it big.

Here is the story of Mother Murphy (Mary Carr) who struggles to make ends meet in a Hot Springs hotel despite the competition offered by a neighboring resort, which boasts a gambling casino. Tim, the dealer (Eddie Dowling), has difficulties with the owner (Noah Beery) after he has confessed his love for the latter's niece (June Collyer).

Tim determines to open a competitive gambling concession, but Mrs. Murphy's kindness (as well as her cherry pie) brings about a change of heart, as it does in the three crooks (Raymond Hatton, George Kotsonaros and Adolph Millar), who arrive in answer to Tim's message. By a fluke the King of Bulgravia pays a visit to the little hotel, is captivated by the pie, and the success of the place is assured.

The audience found Armand Kaliz particularly amusing as the kind-hearted king. One of the scenes which brought forth the greatest amount of laughter was that in which royalty and crooks battle over the famous cherry pie in a midnight raid on Mrs. Murphy's kitchen.

The picture brings Ray Dooley to the screen and brings Eddie Dowling back for the first time since he made "Rainbow Man."

The fame of "Honeymoon Lane" as a legitimate show, plus the names in cast should bring the public in and the picture will sell itself.

The Smiling Lieutenant

(Paramount)

Musical

Maurice Chevalier, gay, debonair, smiling lieutenant of the Austrian army, who falls in love with the leader of a feminine orchestra and is forced, through an accident, to marry a princess, literally captivated an audience at the New York Criterion with his pleasant voice and fetching mannerisms.

The generally considered able support furnished the star was headed by Claudette Colbert, Charles Ruggles and Miriam Hopkins, all of whom came in for a good share of the liberal praise bestowed upon the film as a whole.

Set in old Vienna, this musical effort, the directorial work of Ernest Lubitsch, whose work was accorded much favorable comment, revolves around the romantic adventure of Chevalier, who, as a happy-go-lucky officer of the royal guard, meets his fate in a beer garden, then is overtaken by another fate because he couldn't restrain his mischievous eyes.

Charles Ruggles, who appears only in the opening sequences, tells Chevalier of a girl he had seen in a beer garden, playing a violin and leading an orchestra of girls. He had fallen in love with her by long distance, and needed Chevalier to help him in meeting her. Chevalier agrees, sees the girl, falls in love with her and their romance begins, to the exclusion of Ruggles.

The king of the neighboring country of Flausenthurm visits the emperor with his shy, quiet daughter, played by Miriam Hopkins. Chevalier, officer of the guard, sees his sweetheart across the street and smiles at her, but the smile is caught by the princess instead, and she is insulted. To appease the anger of the king and the insult to the princess, who has by this time achieved a decided attraction for Chevalier, he is ordered to marry the princess.

Despondent, he goes to Flausenthurm, and there one night finds his first love. The romance starts anew, until the unhappy princess discovers where her husband has been spending most of his time. On a pretext, she brings Miss Colbert to the palace, where they first slap each other's faces, then become fast friends. The violinist realizes she must lose Chevalier, so she undertakes to teach the mouse-like princess how to attract her husband. The transformation is complete and sudden, and Chevalier, returning to the palace, comes upon a new sort of princess wife, the kind he had always wanted.

There is much trifling and many amusing lines in the film, to judge by the continued smiles and hearty laughs which greeted every appearance of the star on the screen.

George Barbier, as the king of Flausenthurm, was greeted enthusiastically for his amusing, expert treatment of the role. The cast throughout, comment indicated, did much to bring out the humor of the story, and the fine touches in the work of the featured players.

The musical numbers were apparently enjoyed by the audience, particularly as rendered by Chevalier and Miss Colbert, both as to lyrics and melody.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Ernst Lubitsch. Based on "The Waltz Dream," by Leopold Jacobson and Felix Dormann; and the novel, "Nux Der Prinzgemahl," by Hans Muller. Screen treatment by Ernst Vajda and Samson Raphaelson. Music by Oscar Straus. Lyrics by Clifford Grey. Photographed by George Folsey. Release date, August 1, 1931. Running time, 88 minutes.

Comedy

A slight lack of suspense and story interest seemed to be the principal criticism of an audience which viewed this Spencer Tracy-Warren Hymer film at a Coast theatre. However, the patrons, as a whole, extracted a good deal of amusement, as evidenced by their laughter, from the work of Warren Hymer in particular. Jean Harlow plays opposite the two, acting the foil for the pair of romance chasing, globe trotting sailors, who have a particular partiality for blondes, no matter what the port.

Much praise was accorded Ben Stoloff for his direction of the film.

The two sailors, on their way around the world, or anywhere else, spend their time ashore looking up romance, and generally finding it somehow or other. But the trouble is that every girl Hymer finds seems to have been Tracy's girl some time previously, which leads to many a conflict, fistically, between the two buddies.

In France, Hymer meets Jean Harlow, as a diver in an itinerant carnival, and falls in love with her. Tracy tries to discourage him, since he has known her in past times, but Hymer believes him attempting to steal his girl. Tracy discovers that the girl is merely after Hymer's money, though Hymer is really in love with her. When he becomes angry at Tracy's interference, Tracy recovers Hymer's money from the girl and restores it to Hymer.

The two sailor buddies, then, take up their travels again, good friends once more and in search of new blondes to conquer.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Adaptation and dialogue by Gene Towne and Paul Perez. Directed by Benjamin Stoloff. Photographed by Ernest Palmer. Art director, Joe Wright. Recording by Gene Grossman. Release date, June 28, 1931. Running time, 60 minutes.

The Girl Habit

(Paramount Publix)

Comedy

"The Girl Habit" is a refreshing comedy that made the audiences at the Paramount theatre forget the blistering heat of Broadway. The picture was good for a constant flow of laughter, with Charlie Ruggles responsible for most of the chuckles.

The dialogue of the piece is snappy, as well it might be, for it is an adaptation by Owen Davis and Gertrude Purcell of the play by A. E. Thomas and Clayton Hamilton.

Under the direction of Edward Cline, the action proceeds with a steady pace. The laughs have been well timed.

The comedy of the picture centers around Charlie Floyd's flare for "nibbling" (flirting). Even though engaged to one of the city's debutantes, Lucy Ledyard, this man-about-town finds it difficult to refrain from being nice to

"Salvation Nell"

(Tiffany)

Melodrama

Antithesis of the so-called gang picture, yet surcharged with the theme of the futility of crime and, presented in melodramatic form, is "Salvation Nell," seen at the Warner Beacon Theatre on upper Broadway, outside the theatrical district. It is a picturization of faith and love triumphant, with only a comparatively few feet of film allotted to the subject of regeneration.

Helen Chandler takes the title role which Minnie Maddern Fiske made so well known on the stage when the Edward B. Seldon play was produced at the now-gone Hackett Theatre by the actress' husband, Harrison Grey Fiske.

The story, as implied by the title, concerns a girl who squanders all her love on a worthless poolroom idler and finally draws him to a new evaluation of living. Nell Saunders (Miss Chandler) ignores the admonishments of Myrtle, her more sophisticated roommate and fellow-waitress, and gives her wages to Jim Platt (Ralph Graves), with her love, and in return loses her job. Jim, with money for his poolroom accomplishments in view, sends her to the saloon of McGovern (DeWitt Jennings) for a new job. There Mooney (Matthew Betz) in a wager tries to kiss her. Jim lurches in upon the scene and, with suspicions aroused by a two-weeks spree intermingled with loyalty, attacks Mooney and gets a five-year sentence for manslaughter.

McGovern's saloon is closed by the police, and Nell, again out of a job, is advised by Myrtle, who has taken the easiest road, to join her. Maggie (Charlotte Walker), a Salvation Army girl, intervenes and Nell casts her lot with the Army.

Jim, in the silent contemplation of his cell, convinces himself of Nell's faithfulness, but on release from prison he joins two other ex-convicts in a plot to rob a bank. He learns Nell's address and comes into the room just after Major Williams of the Salvation Army group (Jason Robards) has told Nell of his love. Jim orders him out.

Nell wrings from Jim the facts of the bank stickup plans but falls short, because of her love, when she starts to give him up to the police. Jim's philosophy, that everything is all right until one is caught, is her greatest stumbling block in attempting to dissuade him from his plans, even after Jimmy, their boy (Wally Albright), whom he sees for the first time, has won him. She bars her husband's exit; he strikes her, and vanishes through the window. She keeps her engagement at the Army meeting, Jim decides against going through with the bank job, and he finally comes to her at the Army headquarters.

James Cruze, in his direction, has kept Graves' character development consistent from start to finish, and the player has achieved the same result with his characterization. There was indication from the audience that it felt Maggie's dialogue in the saloon scene was overdone, but that was the only place where this was evidenced.

The important function which sound can play in the motion picture in creating atmosphere before the story of the production begins to unfold itself is brought out in "Salvation Nell." The playing of a scanty-pieced band in the distance, during the showing of the titles, was unmistakably a Salvation Army group.

The program listed the role of Madame Cloquette, keeper of the raided establishment, but the role was not represented in the picture as shown, an indication of censorial shearing.

Produced by Samuel Zierler and distributed by Tiffany. From the play by Edward B. Sheldon. Directed by James Cruze. Continuity by Walter Woods. Dialogue by Selma Stein. Recorded by RCA Photophone. Length, 7,653 feet. Running time, 85 minutes.

Wild Horse

(Allied Pictures)

Western

Real entertainment of the Western kind, with more than a thrill or two, seemed to be the verdict of an audience at a Santa Monica house where this latest Hoot Gibson number was shown. The youngsters, especially, gave wholehearted approval to Hoot and the horses which he rides as though he meant it. Gibson, to judge from the vociferous reaction, is a real favorite with the younger generation.

There is enough and more action throughout the film to satisfy, apparently, the most avid patron in the audience. The picture retains the swift pace all the way, with the exception, comment indicated, of the sequences in which dialogue was the predominant feature of the film story.

Hoot, an itinerant horse wrangler, acquires a place with a rodeo outfit, by dint of some particularly fancy riding. In the course of the action, he contrives to capture a wild horse, a bank bandit and a murderer, with thrills spaced throughout the sequences.

The audience greeted with hearty applause the exciting events in Gibson's own rodeo, with bronco-busting and steer bulldogging rated the most exciting. Hoot proved himself a finished and thrilling horseman, while "Skeeter Bill" Robinson earned numerous laughs with his comedy antics and laughs. The cast in general was accorded praise for its satisfactory work.

The trained horses in the cast came in for a good share of the honor, a fight between two of them being rated one of the highlights of the film, and being roundly applauded.

The Night Angel

(Paramount)

Drama

An audience at the New York Rivoli seemed not over-enthusiastic about the Paramount Edmund Goulding effort, "The Night Angel," in which Nancy Carroll and Fredric March portrayed the chief roles, Miss Carroll as the daughter of a cafe owner, the vociferous "countess"; and March as the young prosecuting attorney of Prague, who sends the mother to jail for two years, and falls in love with the attractive daughter.

Edmund Goulding was author of the original story, prepared it for the screen, directed the cast and edited the film for final release.

Principal among the audience comments was the seeming lack of finish in the story, as though all that was inherent in the story's possibilities, was not fully realized in the film production. The work of Miss Carroll and Fredric March earned praise from the patrons, though Miss Carroll was termed as over-acting a bit in one or two sequences. Allison Skipworth as the Countess von Martini was roundly praised for her performance, equal attention being given to the work of Allan Hale as Biezl, strong man of the cafe and lover of Yula, the daughter.

March, as Rudik Berken, prosecutor, and engaged to marry a neighbor, played by Phoebe Foster, instigates a raid on the cafe of the countess and sends her to jail. The daughter, in whom he has become interested, is given an alternative of going to a hospital as a nurse in training or being sent to the reformatory. On the eve of her mother's release from jail, she leaves with Biezl and returns to the cafe. Berken follows her, is drugged by Biezl and is cared for during the night by Yula, who acknowledges her feeling for Berken. Biezl finds them, and in the resulting fight, Berken kills the strong man in self-defense.

At the trial, the prosecutor is saved through the self-defense testimony of Yula. Acquitted, he returns to his fiancee but is sent to Yula by the girl, who realizes the attachment of the two for each other.

The film is set in Prague, settings being limited to the interior of the cafe, the home of Berken, and short sequences in the streets of the city and in the hospital grounds. The entire film, comment indicated, was rather too much confined to a limited set of circumstances and settings.

Produced and distributed by Paramount. Directed by Edmund Goulding. Story, adaptation and editing by Edmund Goulding. Photography by William Steiner. Release date, July 18, 1931. Running time, 71 minutes.

The Mystery of Life

(Universal)

Study in Evolution

"The Mystery of Life" is a study in evolution as expounded by scientists, but presented to the screen audience in the language of the layman.

Life in all of its stages from the amoeba to the present civilized man is presented pictorially and in motion, with many microscopic shots to enlighten the average person not schooled in science.

Accompanying the pictorial presentation are explanatory remarks by Clarence Darrow, noted attorney and exponent of evolution, and Dr. H.

In endeavoring to prove the theory of evolution, many scenes in the film are devoted to comparisons of the framework of the lower forms of animal life and man.

All the forms of life from the lowest to the highest, as we know them today—the jelly fish, reptiles, mammals, man—are presented in this treatise on this widely discussed subject, which first was expounded by Darwin, and since has aroused controversy throughout the world.

"The Mystery of Life" has been playing at the Cameo Theatre in 42nd Street, just off Broadway, in New York. This small house has been pretty well filled during the run of the attraction. A pedestrian, on seeing the marquee sign, was heard to comment: "What is that, a 'Men only' picture?"

Produced by Classic Productions, Inc. Distributed by Universal. Directed by George Cochrane. Edited by W. W. Young.

Maciste in Hell

Drama

Based on the epic Inferno of Dante, the Warner in New York is showing "Maciste in Hell," produced several years ago by Pittalugia Studos of Turin, Italy, and now synchronized with operatic score and appropriate sound effects at the Metropolitan Studios in New Jersey.

The New York audience sat fascinated through the picturization of what the Inferno, pictured in words by Dante, might well have looked like. A blazing furnace-like labrynth of caves and deep caverns, in which men, who looked like beasts, and are meant to be the devil subjects of Pluto, the king, and Lucifer, the emperor of the kingdom of darkness, is fantastically displayed on the screen.

The story concerns Maciste, virtuous and unusually strong physically, who is the worst enemy, in his righteousness, with which the denizens of the nether-world have to contend. Pluto dispatches one of his chief devils to the Earth to garner new subjects for his kingdom and at the same time, to attempt the capture of Maciste.

The devil is thwarted in his efforts to take Rosabelle, whom Maciste loves, despite the fact that she has permitted herself to sin, and has a child by a prince, with whom she had fallen in love. The devil, does however, capture Maciste, and he is taken to Hell. There he displays his great strength, and for a while, resists the wiles of Prosperpine, unfaithful wife of Pluto, and the daughter, Luciferine. Unaware of the danger, he succumbs and kisses Prosperpine, which act automatically condemns him to live in Hell forever.

But in the course of a rebellion against Pluto, instigated by the chief devil, Barbarici, Maciste, whose strength is great, takes the side of the king and aids in vanquishing the rebels. Given his choice, he asks to be set free, but is trapped by Prosperpine. Meanwhile, the prince returns to Rosabelle, and the prayer of their child on Christmas Eve is sufficient to set Maciste free from the chains which bind him in Hell.

Photographic effects were generally commented upon as perhaps the most striking feature of the unusual screen offering, with considerable praise for the manner in which the sound effects and operatic score have enhanced the film as a whole.

General reaction was to the effect that "Maciste in Hell" was a film unusual in its theme, interesting in its portrayal and striking in the matter of settings and photographic presentation.

Produced by Pittalugia Studios of Turin, Italy. Distributed by Olympia Macri Excelsior Pictures Corp. Based on the Inferno of Dante. Directed by Guido Brignone. Settings by Jules Lombardozzi. Cameramen, Ubaldo Arata and Massimo Terzano.

Western

A newly appointed deputy sheriff goes after the notorious Polka Dot Bandit against a background of what was generally conceded to be most interesting and striking Western scenic effects, in this film of the old West.

The bandit, Eddie Hearn, has held up the express office, shot the agent and run for it, dropping the money on the way. J. P. MacGowan, as the father of the heroine, retrieves it, and is about to pursue the bandit when he is shot.

Wounded, he returns home, and suspicion, even that of his daughter, falls upon him. But the deputy learns the real identity of the bandit, and sets out after him. Of course, he succeeds in capturing him after much hard riding and a good deal of shooting. Incidentally, and romantically, the daughter, played by Doris Phillips, is equally successful in capturing the deputy, Bob Custer.

Robert Bradbury, who handled the story and produced the film, has, in the opinion of many, done well in bringing in snow-capped Western mountains with splendid effect. Al St. John, in the comedy role, drew laughs from the audience at a New York house.

Produced and adapted by Robert Bradbury, under the supervision of Trem Carr. Photographed by Archie Stout. Recording by Balsley and Phillips. Release date, May, 1, 1931. Running time, 61 minutes.

A Contrast in Screen Music

Willy Schmidt-Gentner, who also wrote the music of "I Sing You a Love Song," one of the striking numbers in the production. What might be called the musical theme of the picture is a song entitled "Ich Bin Ya So Vergnügt ("I Am So Happy"). This rollicking ditty is sung first in the beer garden in the opening scenes by the irrepressible tenor, surrounded by his hero-worshippers—mostly women—who join in the refrain with lusty lungs and much sonority. A free translation of the refrain is: "I am so happy, am so gay! Just like a lark in sunny May, that sings and flies away. An inn with good old beer to drink —and pretty maids that kiss and sing. This is my favor'd place to stay. The world is glorious and gay—Hooray!"

The significance of this unpremeditated lay is emphasized later when, his voice apparently gone (although he, himself, is the only one who realizes it) Winkelmann is urged by the opera director to return to Vienna and resume his career. But the great singer, always the actor, pretends to be happy on his little farm and scoffs at the idea of again being the paid slave of the masses. He wouldn't even consider it! He is contented where he is, with his garden, his cows and his pigs. He is playing the comedy to the end, and as he plays he unconsciously begins to hum his favorite song, "I'm so happy, I'm so gay." As he hums his voice acquires its old resonance; it grows in volume and rises in a mighty crescendo. His glorious voice has come back and he will sing again! And so—on to Vienna and his triumphal return to the stage in "Lohengrin."

The opera scenes are extraordinarily well done. Evaristo Signorini, who plays the part of the singer who substitutes for Winkelmann in the South American opera house, has a brilliant voice. His number, "Pierrot's Love" is an original song written for the production by Willy Schmidt-Gentner. The records synchronized with Jannings' singing as Winkelmann are those recorded by Marcel Witrisch, noted tenor of the Berlin Staats Opera, one of Germany's most gifted singers, and reveal a noble voice in the singing of Lohengrin's "Farewell to the Swan."

There are several other foreign films now showing in New York which deserve the serious consideration of our picture makers. Notable among these are "Zwei Herzen im ¾ Takt" at the Europa theatre, and "Le Million" at the Little Carnegie Playhouse. These pictures demonstrate what can be accomplished when musical intelligence is made to foregather with other intelligences of motion picture production.

Headline Film Finished

"Women Men Marry," Headline picture, has been booked into the New York Beacon week of July 10. M. D. Sikawitt, president, has announced from Hollywood the completion of "A Private Scandal," next production at the Tec-Art studios. Marion Nixon is featured with Lloyd Hughes. Charles Hutchison directed. Theodore Von Eltz, Walter Hiers, Lucille Powers, Edward Phillips and others are in the support.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre business, according to weekly gross receipts obtained by Motion Picture Herald, has failed to recover from the slump which started with the first heat wave. A new low record was set during the "Current Week" with 22 theatres reporting the lowest grosses for the last 12 months. No new highs were registered. Last week 19 new lows were reported, with 20 reported the week previous. Business generally was below that of the "Previous Week."

A PARAMOUNT RELEASE

"Honeymoon Lane"

HOLLYWOOD—If some producer in this village does not discover in Ray Dooley, discovered years ago by us Follies and vaudeville fans, a candidate for one of America's favorite screen comediennes, then that is what's wrong with pictures. "Honeymoon Lane" reveals the secret and several southern California preview audiences have confirmed the suspicion we old timers have harbored for years; namely, that Ray is very funny and very clever. Eddie Dowling and Ray Dooley have been co-featured in a thoroughly entertaining comedy romance.

"ALOHA"

with

and RAQUEL TORRES

NOW, when the season for real money pictures is at its ebb and powerful attractions are few and far between, Tiffany gives them to you.

"ALOHA," absorbing story of a gorgeous wild girl who couldn't be tamed—"DRUMS OF JEOPARDY," a real spell-binder among mystery stories—"CAUGHT CHEATING," laugh-riot success of the season—"THE COMMAND PERFORMANCE," ultra modern story of the intimate frivolities of royalty—"THE SINGLE SIN," soul-stirring drama of a girl whose shady past constantly clouded her life.

These are ready NOW . . . and the 1931-1932 Tiffany Program will soon be announced . . . "Keep Your Eyes On Tiffany."

COLUMBIA IS THE GEM OF HOLLYWOOD AS FAR AS I'M CONCERNED"!

... says
Harriet Parsons
Hollywood Correspondent of the Hearst News Service!

At the moment Columbia is not only the gem of the ocean but the gem of Hollywood as far as I'm concerned. With all the major studios slowing down to snail's pace because of general conditions, plucky little Columbia is forging ahead full blast. Harry Cohn expects to have six pictures in production soon. He's signed directors Roland V. Lee and Edward Sedgwick. The former will megaphone "The Guilty Generation" and the latter leaves M-G-M after seven years to put Jack Holt and Ralph Graves through their paces in an untitled newspaper yarn by Howard Green. Cohn has also purchased "Men of Her Life" by Warner (Flaming Youth) Fabian, and there's a story, as yet untitled, set for Buck Jones

A Capital Investment that keeps on paying its own way

THEATRES can no longer continue to operate profitably without the best sound.

WESTERN ELECTRIC—the world's sound standard—is a real capital investment—the same as a well-built house, comfortable seats, attractive decorations—all paying their share of dividends

WESTERN ELECTRIC assures you unmatched apparatus—made to Bell System standards of precision and quality by a company in business to stay. It guarantees you patent protection.

ERPI SERVICE, too, prevents costly breakdowns —maintains highest possible quality of reproduction.

That's why Western Electric is a profitable, capital investment

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

MIGHT I ADD MY EARNEST ENtreaties to those you are receiving asking for reports from exhibitors on the talkie pictures they are showing? No reviews make up for "Straight from the Shoulder Tips" or "What the Picture Did for Me." I cannot tell you how much I miss them in your otherwise excellent magazine. Please tell the American exhibitors how glad and grateful I would be for their help again. In the old silent days they helped me to get many pictures that proved good for the public and at the box office, and to avoid many duds that without their help I would undoubtedly have been caught with. I have always found that most of the pictures that do well in your houses do well here also.

With thanks in anticipation of your help in this to us a very vital matter.

(Miss) E. A. McKibbon, West End Picture House, 108 Shankill Road, Belfast, Ireland.

(As so often remarked here before, Motion Picture Herald finds a majority of its readers better served as to measures of exhibition values by the directly statistical box office reports from key cities, than by the older and once so highly successful department of exhibitor opinions entitled "What the Picture Did for Me." The performance in the key cities is rather definitely the performance for all the rest of the world.—THE EDITOR.)

On Length of Features

"LAUGHING SINNERS," WITH JOAN Crawford. In this picture there is a big letdown from the usually good pictures that Crawford has made.

For the first time Miss Crawford seems to overact and her attempt at a singing dancing girl was very far-fetched. Why should they put such a makeup on Crawford—a rube with whiskers? Meant, I suppose, for laughing purposes, but it only added to the general weakness as an audience picture.

Here is another angle that is going to be serious this year. I notice that in the new Reviews in Motion Picture Herald, most of the pictures are being made in short footage, some 70 minutes, some less. Every short footage picture means that anywhere from $7.50 to $15 will have to be spent for shorts to make schedule. An added expense to the already overburdened small-town theatre.—A. E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

Comments on Pictures

JUST WISH TO PASS ON A FEW COMments on "What the pictures did to me" recently.

"The Spell of the Circus"—Chapters 5 and 6. This serial is not pleasing my crowd. Lots of action in it, but they don't like the stars, and the worst part is the shortness of the chapters. Chapter 5 ran only 13 minutes, while Chapter 6 ran 12 minutes. This is the length of the old one-reel comedies.

"Renegades" (Fox). Warner Baxter and Myrna Loy very good in this and Noah Beery good in support. An extra good picture and runs 1 hour and 31 minutes. On the style of "Beau Geste." Pleased a good Saturday crowd.

"The Dancers" (Fox). Just fair. Direction and players weak. Story pretty good. Lois Moran, Mae Clarke and Phillip Holmes never caught the interest.

"Dude Ranch." Played this after playing him in two inferior ones, so it did not draw, but it is a great farce comedy. I sat down and laughed at it for an hour straight and any picture that can make an exhibitor laugh these days is some picture. Mitzi Green and Eugene Pallette steal the picture, but June Collyer and Stu Erwin and Jack Oakie are good. Good for Saturday.

"Part Time Wife." Everything great about this but the title. The kid and the dog are great and all the players do well. A very pleasing story—no gangsters, no sex, no smutty wisecracks—it's almost a miracle.

"The Big Trail." The big trail proved a cow path to me and it was muddy. Did not draw much and did not please much. El Brendel was liked.

"Parlor, Bedroom and Bath." A pleasant surprise. Had 'em laughing almost all the way through it. Buster Keaton, Reginald Denny and Cliff Edwards very good, while Charlotte Greenwood did not catch on. Pretty rough in spots where Buster wrestles with girl; in fact, just a little too rough. That's not funny—it's vulgar.

"Laughing Sinners." Joan Crawford fine in this and has good support in Clark Gable and Neil Hamilton. Believe they had Gable and Hamilton mixed in the roles. Both are popular, but Hamilton should have been the hero and Gable the villain. Gable is getting very popular, but is better in the "not-so-nice" type of roles. Story not very good and direction just fair, but players put it over. And don't let me forget Marjorie Rambeau; she can act and shows it.—L. L. Levy, Iris Theatre, Kerens, Texas.

A Knockout!

The "Buy Right—But Buy Now" campaign which you are carrying on in the Motion Picture Herald is a knockout. This is a darn good example of real journalism.

More power to you!

With all good wishes.—Fred J. McConnell, Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., New York City.

Walker Answers Nathan

Talking pictures are firmly established and "this foundation is being protected through the training of new acting, writing and directing talent," said Stuart Walker, Cincinnati stock producer, now temporarily in Hollywood supervising dialogue for Paramount, in answer to the recent statement of George Jean Nathan that talking pictures will be as much an anachronism in five years as silent pictures are today.

"Notre Dame" Film to Start

Texas Houses Open Before August 23, Sunday Law Date

The new Sunday opening law goes into effect in Texas on August 23, though certain houses are opening earlier to give the movement added emphasis.

Publix is reported to have opened in Mexia on June 20, where it met with opposition from legal and reforming bodies during previous attempted Sunday openings.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

Answer to Question No. 85

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 90 — Before threading film into a sound reproducing projector, tell us just what examination of parts you would make. (B) what are the most vital points in threading sound film into a projector? (C) What will be the effect of a wrong loop setting? What is the exact distance between the center of the picture aperture and the center of the sound aperture of all projectors, following the correct film path of course?

The question was: (A) Explain just how you determine when your intermittent movement is in need of adjustment. (B) Tell us, in minute detail, just how you proceed to adjust the intermittent movement of your projector, telling us what make it is. (C) Just at what point do you ask for a renewal of your intermittent sprockets, explaining, in detail, how you determine whether or not they need renewing.

This first set of purely projection questions certainly flooded the market. For the first time, while they have not been counted, I am sure there are well over 1,000 answers. I cannot possibly print all the names of those answering correctly, but will set before you certain ones who gave answers of exceptional excellence, as follows:

C. Rau and S. Evans, Lester Borst, Thomas Riddle, Joseph E. Bliven, Alexander Thomas, B. L. Day, Dick T. Bann, Frank T. Marion, George Thompson, Ben Edwards, Bill Doe, R. D. O'Brien, John Steele, Andrew Schaefer, F. K. Post, Thomas Dunbar, Benjamin, Shawnison, Neut Van Vaukenburg, James Devoy and G. M. Myers.

The above, remember, do not by any means constitute the names of those sending correct answers. I name only those making exceptionally good replies.

I have concluded to split up the answer, different sections being best answered by different ones. First, we will hear from James Devoy on Section (A).

"If the projector be running smoothly and quietly and the picture is perfectly steady on the screen, then we have a perfect condition, with which it is never well to meddle. On the other hand, if there be movement in the picture, or if the intermittent movement begins to develop noise, then its condition should be promptly checked.

"To test the movement, place the movement squarely on "the lock." Then, using your fingers, try to rock the intermittent sprocket circumstantially; also to move it endwise.

"If there is anything more than a barely perceptible circumferential movement felt, when the movement is cold or if the sprocket can be moved endwise sufficiently to feel it, then that movement should be taken out and a spare movement installed, if one there be.

"The test for circumferential movement should be made with equal care on each of the four sections of the lock. That is to say, on each channel if it be a star movement; on each of the four pins if it be a Powers movement. In this test great care must be exercised, remembering that a thousandth of an inch movement at the sprocket will mean a great many thousandths of an inch on the screen.

"Summing up, any circumferential play of the intermittent sprocket over and above the amount which may be barely felt WHEN THE MOVEMENT IS COLD, is too much. When the movement is hot you should not be able to feel any at all. There must be no perceptible end movement. Don't forget that both the driving and driven movement will expand considerably as they heat up, and while there will also be some expansion in the frame carrying the bearings, it will hardly be sufficient to compensate for the expansion of the parts themselves."

And now we will listen to Messrs. Rau and Evans on section (B). They say:

"Our projectors are Simplex, Model M. To adjust their movement, which is a double bearing, the entire movement is removed from the projector mechanism, laid on a bench or table, with the main oil cup pointing directly upward in a center position, making certain that the movement is squarely on the lock. Next the six cover screws are loosened, whereupon the weight of the loosened cover plate will shove or push the two elements of the movement together by weight (gravity) just sufficiently to effect the necessary adjustment. Then, being very sure the adjustment is not disturbed, tighten the cover holding screws, replace the movement and the job is finished, so far as concerns circumferential movement.

"If there be end play in the intermittent sprocket, which, of course, means end play in the star shaft itself, loosen the two set screws in the collar at the end of the shaft, pulling outward on the sprocket, at the same time shoving in the opposite direction on the collar. Tighten the set screws and all should be well.

(Note: I am not certain, but believe the collar may well be rotated slightly, to avoid possible indentations made in the shaft by the collar set screws in its former location. —Ed.)

"Caution: Do not exert too much pressure in shoving and pulling, lest you set the collar up too tightly. No friction should be set up. Just fit the collar up snugly, but without mechanical binding."

We will listen to Brother Van Vaulkenburg on (C). He says:

"I ask for renewal just as soon as any perceptible wear is shown on the under side of the intermittent sprocket teeth under the action of a good strong magnifying glass, which latter I induced friend boss to purchase. Just as soon as "undercut" can be seen on the wearing side of the teeth, the sprocket is due at the junk pile.

"In case the projectionist himself installs new parts, then two spare intermittent sprockets should be kept on hand, coated with vaseline and wrapped in a soft cloth, protected by being packed in a small wooden box."

Minneapolis, Minn.

DEAR HERALD:

We are indebted to Mr. L. O. Kirkeberg, manager of the State theatre, a Publix house at Mankato, for courtesies shown us when we called on him last Tuesday. We found Mr. Kirkeberg a very delightful gentleman and we wish to take this means of expressing our appreciation for his kindness.

At the time we called he was having a matinee and promptly at the hour for the burial services for Mr. Isaac Ruben, a well known and high respected theatreman of Minneapolis, he stopped the show and a Congregational minister appeared on the stage and conducted a short memorial service in honor of Mr. Ruben.

We understand that all Publix houses throughout Minnesota were instructed to hold similar services at that hour and Publix is to be commended for showing this mark of respect to the memory of Mr. Ruben.

In the passing of both Mr. Finkelstein and Mr. Ruben, the Minnesota theatre circle has two vacant chairs that will be difficult to fill. The industry has indeed lost two highly respected and much loved members, and the community in which they lived and labored will feel the loss of these two most excellent citizens.

When you are in Minneapolis and you meet a stranger on the street, you will be perfectly safe to say, "Good morning, Mr. Johnson." You will hit it every time. There are 2,115 Johnsons listed in the telephone directory (we counted 'em) and that's too much Johnson, if you ask us.

Jack Oakie in "JUNE MOON" impersonated some of the present-day song writers just about as we had them pictured, a little wabbly in the head, and the lyrics Jack wrote for his songs had about as much sense to them as the bulk of the stuff we are forced to listen to when they have all the exits locked.

When it comes to playing goofy parts we will have to take off our hats, etc., to Jack and Zasu Pitts; they're the two biggest goofs on the screen, and when we see them play we wonder why they didn't cover 'em up the night of the big frost. They are both most excellent players and that's why we never aim to miss one of their pictures. Sometimes when we see Zasu play a goofy part we feel like we wanted to give her a spoonful of red pepper and rub cowitch on her back to give her a little pep, and when she makes us feel that way you may know she is playing her part.

The other day when we rounded a sharp turn in the road we came within an ace of plowing into a flock of bovines on the highway and smearing raw beef all over the landscape. Whenever a cow gets her mind set on a bunch of grass on the opposite side of the road, a Buick, Lincoln or an Austin doesn't mean a thing to her. We never saw a cow or a bull that didn't think it had the right of way, and we have seen some of 'em sitting behind steering-wheels, too.

A New Theatre

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Schindele of Granite Falls have built themselves a brand new theatre since we called there two years ago and have it equipped with excellent sound. it took nerve to put that much money in a theatre in a town the size of Granite Falls, but what Joe lacked in nerve (if he lacked any) was made up by the good looks and popularity of Mrs. Schindele, both of which are big assets to any theatre. We predict that they will make a success.

Charles Closson of Anoka has put a lot of "fixin's" in his theatre and made it look like a city show house. Charlie is building an outdoor peewee golf course which he intends to run in connection with his theatre. He is putting a lot of money in it. He asked us what we thought of the venture and we told him we didn't know, but we hoped he'd make it go. We never like to predict something we don't feel reasonably sure of.

Charlie's uncle used to be a member of the county board of supervisors when we were county clerk "Out Where the West Begins," and if Charley runs true to the old stock, he doesn't have the word "failure" included in his vocabulary, and besides that, Mrs. Closson is just the type of woman to greet the public at the box office. We hope they win.

There now, it's just as we told you, whenever we hit a state it starts raining. It rained about all the time we were in Wisconsin and it began clouding up and getting ready for business as soon as we got over here with Ole and Tillie, and it set in to rain this afternoon and is still at it. Wisconsin and Minnesota could well afford to put us on a pension, and it's a darn outrage that they don't do it; there's nothing fair about it.

Accredited Pictures

Some lady writer, writing for the HERALD recently, made the statement that in the cities where they were showing accredited pictures, the business had picked up wonderfully and receipts far exceeded expectations.

What she meant by accredited pictures were those that had been approved by the Federated Women's Clubs and other civic organizations. Accredited pictures are what the exhibitors have been yelling for for years until they have lost their voices and contracted laryngitis. If the women's clubs have been responsible for accredited pictures being made the exhibitors will thank God for the women's clubs and will want to know what pictures they are; they'd like to play some of 'em. We wonder sometimes if there are not too many latitudinarians writing scenarios and hollering through megaphones. "COMMON CLAY," "KING OF KINGS," "SUNNYSIDE UP," "THEY HAD TO SEE PARIS," "TRADER HORN," "SEED," "CONNECTICUT YANKEE," "SKIPPY" and several others are accredited pictures that help to keep this business from becoming topheavy. Wherever we go exhibitors claim they can do good business when they get a good picture, and when they say good pictures they mean what that lady meant by accredited pictures.

It's the same old thing: you can get ducks if you've got a good shotgun, but you can't bring home much game with an old rusty muzzle-loader. There are too many flint-locks being used out in the production field.

We were just on the point of writing some more poetry, but we happened to remember that George is not a very ardent student of Longfellow and Tennyson and would be likely to bluepencil it. So, folks, you will have to get along the best you can. We're sorry, but 'taint our fault.

Next Monday will be election day here in Minneapolis, and, according to the opinions as expressed by the candidates for mayor over the radio and in the press, the other fellow ought to be in the penitentiary, and the chances are that he is right about it. This campaign reminds us very much of dear old Chicago except that up here they use popguns instead of machine-guns. One dear sister stopped us on the street today and wanted us to vote for her candidate. We told her that, unfortunately, the laws of Minnesota would look with disfavor upon our severing connections with our home town of Neligh, Neb., long enough to cast a ballot in Minneapolis, that if it was Chicago it would be all right. She agreed with us.

Three Loop theatre managers place depression last on the list of "What's Wrong With Loop Grosses." Mediocre pictures was the first reason, double featuring was second, season and weather, third, and depression, last. Double featuring, the managers said, encourage fans to wait for pictures to come to the neighborhoods instead of going to the Loop first runs. Balaban & Katz, the managers pointed out, have noted a marked increase in business at the Granada and Marbro since the houses switched to double bills. This gain, however, has been more than offset, according to the managers, by the shortening of Loop runs and consequent lower grosses.

Unions Make Concessions as More Chicago Houses Close

Theatrical unions in Chicago are planning further concession to exhibitors as the offer of one free week during June, was apparently insufficient to stem the tide of closings, expected to reach well over 100 houses in the city this week.

It is understood one exhibitor representative offered the plan, now being considered by the unions, to continue the one week salary rebate of union employees through July and August for all theatres open.

Vitaphone to Offer Cartoon And Travel Series This Year

SHORT FEATURE

Sennett Finishes Current Schedule

Mack Sennett has completed 24 of the 26 two-reel comedies for Educational release, at the Coast plant. Neither of the two remaining numbers are titled as yet, though production is very nearly completed, winding up the current season's product.

The studios will continue without interruption, with work already started on several of the new season's numbers. The 1931-32 schedule calls for 26 two-reelers and 18 one-reel comedies.

Rehearse Radio Comedy

The second of a series of six Clark and McCullough short comedies for Radio has gone into rehearsal at the Coast plant, under the direction of Mark Sandrich. Tentative title is "Hard to Get."

Mascot Serial at Roxy

"The Vanishing Legion," first Mascot serial, will have a showing at the New York Roxy this week, with general release following in succeeding weeks.

In Educational Comedy

Charles Judells, stage comic, has been signed for the "heavy" role in an Educational-Ideal comedy which William Goodrich is directing on the Coast.

REPORT PUBLIX-F & M TIEUP A TEST

Would Give Fox Units 60 to 62 Weeks

Publix Will Continue to Produce Its Own Stage Acts For New York Houses

By ED DAWSON

The reported tieup whereby Publix theatres will play Fanchon & Marco stage units is, it is said, an experiment. The hookup will be tried out for three months, it is understood, and if at the end of that time it is considered feasible the policy will become permanent.

Publix, under the plan, will close its Long Island studio, moving what production force is required to supply shows for the New York and Brooklyn Paramount theatres, which are not included in the proposed tieup, to the company's new studio in 44th street between 10th and 11th avenues.

Such a tieup with Publix would give F. & M. a total of 60 or 62 weeks bookings. Between 1,500 and 2,000 stage people will be employed for these units.

Publix units, it is understood, have cost the company an estimated $4,400 a week, whereas the F. & M. "Ideas" represent an outlay of only $3,200 weekly, thereby effecting a saving of $1,200 weekly on each unit. It is said that Publix plans through this tieup to make a weekly saving of at least $30,000, or $1,500,000 annually.

This move, it is said, will definitely establish Fox, through its subsidiary, Fanchon & Marco, as the most powerful vaudeville agency, gauged by the number of playing weeks offered.

The F. & M. outfit will be operated so as to furnish regulation vaudeville as well as complete musical comedy units along the lines of the present "Ideas."

Doc Howe of F. & M. has been in New York for conferences with the Publix executives. They have been in executive session constantly.

Harry C. Arthur of Fox theatres, when asked concerning the reported tieup, said that he knew nothing about it.

Wilmer & Vincent Placing Vaudeville in Six Houses

Straight vaudeville will be returned to six Wilmer and Vincent theatres in as many cities, starting September 1, the acts being booked direct. Joseph V. Egan, general manager, said the change was being made because not enough box office pictures can be obtained for three-day showings. The houses are the State at Allentown, Pa.; State, Reading; Mayan, Harrisburg; Embassy, Altoona; Lyric, Richmond, and Wells, Norfolk.

RUTH PETTY

Here she is, boys,—the little St. Louis "torch" singer who has taken Jerseyites by storm, not only with her beauty and showmanship, but with that great blues voice of hers. Ruthie has been featured in Johnny Perkins' Gang, at the Warner Stanley in Jersey City for the past 10 weeks, and now that Perkins is going to vacation for the remainder of the summer, she is going to tour the Publix circuit with a unit. Believe It or Not (apologies to Ripley), during her engagement at this house Ruth has sung a total of 200 songs. She has learned at least 25 brand new numbers and the balance of them are old songs that have been requested by the audiences. She has sung so many songs that she claims her throat has been "crying," for the past few weeks. The management has announced that when Johnny comes back in the fall, Ruth and the rest of the gang will be with him, so when she comes through your town, don't any of you try to keep her there, because Jersey claims her now.

Incidentally, Ruthie is like that other St. Louis woman in the St. Louis Blues—she has 'em following her around by her apron-strings.

Francis X. Bushman on Air

Francis X. Bushman, former film star, will be heard over an NBC-WJZ program each week for 10 weeks, beginning Friday, July 10.

Third Year With Capitol

Louise Bave, coloratura soprano, celebrates her third anniversary with the Major Bowes Capitol Family, on the air, July 10.

Musical Shows' Tunes Vie with Popular Songs

Songs from Broadway musicals now are giving popular numbers a run for the money, with show tunes joining in the ranking of the country's best sellers, and going on the leading radio programs.

"Dancing in the Dark," one example of the rise of the show song to the top rung, is from "The Band Wagon," the score of which was written by Howard Dietz and Arthur Schwartz. Best known of other songs in the show were "I Love Louisa," "New Sun in the Sky" and "High and Low." "Dancing in the Dark" is successor to "Something to Remember You By," a hit of last season, and also authored by Dietz and Schwartz. Harms, Inc., publishes the score of "The Band Wagon," as well as songs from "The Third Little Show," "Crazy Quilt," "Wonder Bar" and Ziegfeld's Follies of 1931.

Vacationing Organists Make Broadway Home

Arthur Gutow, well-known theatre organist, has been vacationing in New York for the past week. Gutow is featured soloist at the Publix, Michigan Theatre, Detroit.

Another recent visitor, was Rex Koury, organist at the RKO Proctor's 4th Street Theatre, Troy, N. Y. Rex came down to New York on his vacation to visit old friends, but it seems he has met more new ones than old.

Merle Clark will be at the Brooklyn Paramount for the next four weeks. Clark is not vacationing, he'll have to work plenty, but inasmuch as he hasn't been away from the Paramount Toledo for the past three years, his assignment here can be classed as a vacation. Elsie Thompson the "Sweetheart of the Organ," is slated to take Merle's place for the four weeks.

To Broadcast Pageant

James Cruze will present a pageant of pioneer life in the Salt Lake valley at the University of Utah, on Saturday, July 25. It will be broadcast over an NBC-WJZ network.

New York to Paris

Maurice Lawrence, who for the past eight years has been supervisor of musical activities with the Paramount-Publix Corporation, has just been appointed head of all music activities in the Paramount Studios at Joinville, near Paris.

Helen Hudson, whose deep contralto voice charms radio listeners from WGN, was at one time prima donna of many George White "Scandals" and had one of the highest, richest soprano voices outside of opera. Miss Hudson was singing leading roles in the "Scandals" opposite Tom Patricola and Gordon Dooley, when she lost her voice during a performance, and the now famous Helen Morgan, then playing a secondary role in the show, was hurried into her part. Now, after a lapse of years, Miss Hudson's voice has returned, but instead of being a soprano she finds herself with a contralto voice particularly adapted to the crooning of "blues" songs.—Walter Preston, NBC baritone, has just finished lyrics for a modern charm number, "Cute and Sweet." Music is by William Wirges, well known NBC conductor. Publication is expected shortly. "Mississippi Lament," a serious composition by Preston, has been heard in quartet and trio form in recent NBC programs.

Watching stars in another firmament twinkle is one of the pleasures that stars enjoy, according to Ann Harding, winsome star of many films, on a recent visit to the NBC studios in Chicago. "Marvelous" was all she could say as she glanced through the observation windows in the studios where programs were being thrust through the air.

Though he had danced to music played by an orchestra in which Norm Sherr was pianist in Shanghai, China, in 1923, Harold Holman, junior production man in the NBC Chicago studios, didn't discover the fact until he met Sherr during a recent broadcast of Verne Buck's orchestra over an NBC network. Sherr is pianist in the orchestra. Holman, whose father is an American engineer in China, lived in that country for several years.

John Kuhn, Sioux Indian chief who plays tuba with Harry Kogen's orchestra has found a dramatic role which he fits perfectly. Kuhn, who was born on an Indian reservation and lived many years in the West, leads the band of Indians heard frequently on the Empire Builders program of old days in the West.

When Bobby Meeker, now playing at the College Inn, set out to assemble his band, some six years ago, he toured the universities of the Midwest, picking the best dance musicians from the many organizations to which he listened. With his group of tune-making collegiates he toured the East and West, playing at many of the most fashionable hotels and summer resorts throughout the country.

East and Dumke, NBC artists, have been partners on the stage and radio for nine years. . . . A little crayon drawing of an airship holds a place of honor among the possessions of Wayne King, popular young maestro. This little drawing came from a small boy who hearing over the air of Wayne's exploits in the air and the description of his plane, had a mental vision of the ship. Without ever seeing the plane he made this drawing which is almost a perfect reproduction of the style of ship. Although the picture does not approach perfection as a work of art, Wayne had it framed and treasures it among the many gifts that have come to him from his radio audience. . . . The present orchestra arrangements heard in the playing of the theme song for the Amos 'n Andy broadcasts is composed of three violins, one cello, one saxophone and a piano. Incidently, the theme song is "The Perfect Song," from the picture the "Birth of a Nation."

STAGE SHOWS

New York Paramount

Week ending July 9

An entertaining show all-around prevailed this week. Show opens with an impressive and entertaining orchestral productions overture, conceived and ably conducted by Edward Paul. Staged as a scrim presentation with historical settings surprisingly authentic, as the orchestra played historical airs, "1776" was by far the most entertaining orchestral production offered here in a long time.

Jesse Crawford's organ concert is on the "Organ Solo" page.

The Boris Petroff-Publix stage-show, "Rio Rosa" opens naturally with a Spanish patio setting in which Ted Mack, house m.c., leads the orchestra as Vera Kingston sings the introductory song, with the 12 Bobby Sanford Girls following in a snappy dance routine which they perform in abbreviated cowgirl costumes. Well-done and the audience liked it. The scene shifts to a beautiful desert scene in which two of the team of Theodore, Enrica and Novello offer a graceful ballroom dance routine mixed with a little adagio. An adagio-ballroom routine done in full dress certainly seemed out-of-place in this setting and the audience apparently sensed it because they seemed reluctant to give them the applause they deserved. Wilfred DuBois, an expert juggler, entertained the audience the entire time he appeared but his act did not rate all the time given it. The entertaining part of the next number, a dance routine by the Sanford girls, proved to be the fine playing of Ted Mack and his stage-band. Mack, a personable and popular young chap, leads his band throughout the show and offers plenty real music, but he is not permitted to do much else except a little introducing once in a while. He is a very good showman and has great versatility. Bert Gordon, Jewish comedian, using Vera Kingston for his foil, gets all of the laughs for this show, with his witty chatter and funny antics. Morton Downey, on for two songs, "Lady Play Your Mandolin" and "That's How I Spell Ireland," stopped the show and was forced to sing two more numbers, "Please Don't Talk" and "Carolina Moon," before the audience would think of letting him go off. A comedy song and dance, which gets a load of laughs, is next done by Bert Gordon and the 12 Sanford girls and is followed by a comedy burn-up bit between Bert and the girl member of the dance team, as a sort of prologue to the trio's tango dance. The trio, Theodore, Enrica and Novello, perform one of the most entertaining and graceful tango routines ever offered in this house. At the finish of the dance, the entire company come on for finale.

"Psychic" at Milwaukee Warner

Gene Dennis, stage "psychic," is scheduled for an engagement at the Warner in Milwaukee, after which she will return to the New York Beacon for an indefinite time.

Rome and Dunn at Capitol

Rome and Dunn, harmony duo, will be seen with the cast of the New York Capitol stage revue this week, replacing Kate Smith, who is ill.

San Francisco Fox

Week ending July 8

The circus is in town this week and has pitched its tent right on the stage of the Fox theatre. There are clowns, elephants, ponies, acrobats, aerial artists, ringmasters, tanbark and sawdust. The calliope is about the only thing that is missing and how Fanchon and Marco overlooked this in arranging their "Circus Idea" is a mystery.

Walt Roesner and the Fox Concert Orchestra offer the "Mauve Overture," made up of familiar airs from the operettas of Pixley and Luders which were written largely in the nineties, when the circus was in its heyday. One recognizes tunes from "Prince of Pilsen," "King Dodo" and "Woodlands." Joaquin Garay offers a new song, "I'm Through With Love."

Ringmaster Gatchett, in traditional boots, tight breeches and high hat, cracks his whip and introduces Lillian St. Leon, equestrienne, who rides a chunky horse around a ring, dancing on his broad back and performing the usual stunts, while a pair of clowns draw out the laughs. Jerry, an Alaskan husky, also takes a ride around the ring and bows to the applause.

Carl Sayton and partner, European gymnasts, do some clever balancing stunts, and perform them so smoothly that their difficulty scarcely is realized. Three boys from the audience come on the stage and try their hand at riding the horse, with the aid of the regular circus training gear, and get some good laughs.

Gatchett and Hooper, in the role of the ringmaster and the rube, offer a skit before the curtain that proves one of the hits of the show. They uncork a lot of new jokes, sing a song or two and imitate musical instruments. Gags without an odor is their specialty.

Miss Bee Starr is introduced as "America's Ballerina of the Air" and does a lively dance on a vertical rope, ending with fifty one-arm somersault lifts. She has a record of more than one hundred of these without a stop.

The concluding act is that of Adela Nelson and her three elephants. She has the bulky animals rolling over the stage on barrels, crawling, dancing, clowning and performing on two legs.

Salt Lake City Orpheum

Week ending July 4

Featuring as its headline attraction this week Harry Fox, musical comedy star, the RKO Orpheum presents a well balanced and highly entertaining bill. Fox, in addition to presenting his own offering, acts as master of ceremonies for the remainder of the show. Harry is an accomplished chap and is ably assisted by a pretty and talented miss.

Opening the bill are the Pasquali Brothers in a spectacular acrobatic novelty. They easily might be called three super-athletes. Next come Three Small Brothers, who say nothing but present an array of tap dancing that is in a class by itself. Rounding out the bill are Ray Mayer and Edith Evans. Miss Evans has an unusual voice, while her partner is an accomplished pianist.

Very good attendance has been enjoyed.

ORGAN SOLOS

EARL ABEL (San Antonio, Texas), presented as his organ solo for his homecoming week the following well known numbers which were very well received: "Hail, Hail the Gang's All Here," "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," next a brand new tune entitled "In a Five and Ten Cent Store." This went over great with the patrons, proving generally that they are still Earl Abel fans. Next a pretty peppy parody on "I'm Alone Because I Love You," "Love Is Like That," "What Can You Do?" then a tongue- twister based on "Walkin' Baby Back Home" and a closing chorus of "Hair Has Turned to Silver." This chap is still the fair-haired boy of San Antonio.

LOU BONDER (New York City Park-Plaza) presented "A Literary Indigestion" as the title for his entertaining organ presentation. Opening with special "expressive" lyrics to "Something to Remember You By," and followed by a slide bearing "big" words, Bonder then orally explained that all these big words, in common English, mean "Clear Your Throats." A chorus of "Ho-Hum" was next sung and also a special chorus of "Hill-Billy Town," with words formed by letters of the alphabet forming sentences. Bonder played four songs together, two sentences of each making up the song as a contest between the girls and boys, and then a chorus of "Saint Augustine," the boys shouting out the "Um-Pahs." A stuttering chorus of "Betty Co-ed" proved very funny. Then the audience went in to the serious singing of "Roll On, You Mississippi," "I Wanna Sing About You" and finished with "Dream a Little Dream."

BETTY HAMMOND (New Orleans Publix Strand) has a fine novelty in her all-waltz solo which is handled so skillfully that the monotony of three-fourth-accent on the first beat-time is never apparent. Miss Hammond opens with Tschaikowsky's "Flower Waltz," pauses for a moment to tell the audience she is presenting a program of waltzes selected from operetta, musical comedy and old favorites, the titles of which she will not divulge, but will leave as a memory test. Follows "The Blue Danube" played in fine style, the oldtimer, "After the Ball," which got a hand before it was over, "Memory Lane," "Alice Blue Gown" which also was interrupted by applause, and a closing song slide of "For You." The registration for these numbers was particularly effective.

JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount) has changed his routine of presenting his program and this week is offering a story to introduce the songs and to connect them. The program consisted of "Just One More Chance," "All Dressed Up With a Broken Heart," "I'm Losing You" and "Now You're in My Arms." The solo was very well played and Crawford's only mistake was in using all the same type tunes.

PAUL H. FORSTER (Syracuse, N. Y. Fox-Eckel) had the foresight to arrange his organ novelty in a vein to impress and make sing, the audiences who would be in the majority at the showing of "Daddy Long Legs," the current picture. These, he figured out, would be older folk, so he selected a program of songs he thought they would know and like. He surely made a good bet, because young and old sang every song on the program. Forster used as his opening barrage, five real old timers, namely, "Smiles," "Dixie," "Old Black Joe," "When You and I Were Young Maggie" and "Roses of Picardy." Then he switched to two of the newer hits, 'When I Take My Sugar to Tea," and closing with, "Hello, Beautiful." Besides being very popular with the audience at this theatre, Forster has created a great following for miles around by his Saturday morning radio broadcasts, when he presents a program of all-request numbers.

EGON DOUGHERTY (Astoria, L. I. Triboro) presented not only an entertaining presentation for this week, but one that was novel, inasmuch as the audience sang a program of waltzes and only one of them, a popular number. Dougherty entitled this solo, "Viennese Serenade" and opened with a slide explaining that Vienna was the home of song and beautiful waltzes and that he had selected the most singable of past and present waltzes for the audience to sing. Incidental music from the "Merry Widow Waltz" was played as the audience read the slides. The numbers were; "Dance Away the Night," "Merry Widow Waltz," "Sari," "Deep in My Heart" and two choruses, one German, one English, of "Two Hearts." As the show caught, Dougherty took four or five bows and could easily have taken an encore.

"MAC" BRIDWELL (San Antonio Majestic) offered a novelty solo recently, in which he made good use of the popular Dave Smason, house master of ceremonies and Joseph Bell, the singing usher. Bridwell entitled the solo "Egyptian-Ella," apparently in honor of the new song of that name, which he introduced for the first time to this audience. After the first chorus was played, "Mac" had Bell sing a chorus and after this, the audience knew it pretty well, because they all joined in on the third chorus. For the next two numbers, "Blossom of Buttercup Lane" and "One Little Raindrop," Bell played a guitar accompaniment as Mac played the organ.

The presentation closed with the playing of "Selections from Souvenir," Dave Smason playing his violin as Bridwell accompanied him. The entire solo was well done and received good response.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

"Lend Me Your Ears!"

THE manager of one of Times Square's deluxers has a reputation for spending very little or no time at all around the portion of the theatre used by the cash customers.

Which accounts, undoubtedly, for the way the service staff functions. This house can insult a patron more times per minute than all the others put together in the course of a year.

Their latest method, as viewed by an eye witness, is to elbow any patron who insists on locating a seat. This appears to be the greatest crime a paid ticket holder can commit. Of course he should sit in the rear of a huge theatre just because an overbearing usher orders him to.

Times Square or Podunk; you can't get away with such stuff forever.

Just to prove that it pays to build up the personality of the manager in a small community, we listened to the owner of a group of small theatres tell about one house where he played up the manager's name and let him circulate around town until this manager was one of the outstanding leaders of the entire community.

As for it's reaction at the box office, may we inform you that this little theatre has played over forty benefits for local organizations and sponsored all sorts of worthwhile drives, etc., until now, the theatre and it's manager are the pivots around which everything revolves.

Circuit organizations, please note.

Cultivating the goodwill and friendship of your projectionists will pay more substantial dividends than some of the stocks you may have lying around.

The men in the booth can not only make your screen fare better than usual, but can save you thousands of dollars annually through careful attention to the equipment, carbons, etc.

Besides, they are always willing and anxious to look after little things around the theatre to show their appreciation for being treated like human beings.

These facts were forcibly brought home to us on many of our recent trips around town. We rarely pass up a visit to the booth when we stop at a theatre. Not that we are particularly concerned over projection from the technical side of the question, but we are very much interested in the part it plays in modern theatre management.

At last we've found out why the picture industry grew to such tremendous proportions. It was NOT because of it's popular appeal and entertainment values to suit tne average pocket-book; it represented about the only way that all the "big shots" could find positions for their numerous relations, (blood and "in-laws").

When it was still in the adolescent period, they started to run out of jobs in the production and distribution fields . . . ; the situation became tense . . . ; new relations were coming along much faster than prospective jobs. . . . SO a hurried meeting of the "brains-of-the-business" was called and as a result thev discovered that unlimited jobs . . . paying unlimited salaries . . . could be made available at once, (if not sooner,) by acquiring nationwide theatre circuits.

Result: several thousand theatres under circuit banners . . . all the relations are happy . . . and they are so busy fighting for each other's job that they can't spare time off to annoy the "big shots."

In line with the—"give us the pictures and we'll sell 'em"—cry from house managers; what a pleasure it would be if the producers would keep feeding us b.o. smashes like "Daddy Long Legs".

Besides being perfect for any theatre in the land. here is the kind of picture which lends itself admirably to exploitation of every sort. These two angles together provide the nourishment which keeps showbusiness alive. "Chick."

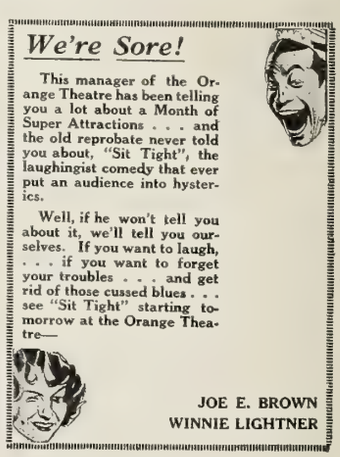
Gives A wist To Ads ng "Sit Tight"

During a period he called "Month of Super Attractions," Dick Moss, manager of the Orange Theatre, Orange, Calif., created some excellent advertising on "Sit Tight," featuring Joe Brown and Winnie Lightner.

Instead of merely announcing the fact that such and such a picture was to appear, or giving the picture a personal endorsement, etc., Moss featured large-face mats of the two stars in ads and let the message come from them. A sample of one ad which we are reproducing here will give you a good idea of how the series was made up. The last ad read: "We're leaving tonight, folks, . . . and the manager says he's glad. . . . Can't get his staff to work—doorman doubled up; . . . usherettes rolling in the aisles, . . . and we saw the old boy himself with tears of laughter streaming down his cheeks." All copy carried a generous margin that gave the ads plenty of white space.



We're Sore!
This manager of the Orange Theatre has been telling you a lot about a Month of Super Attractions . . . and the old reprobate never told you about, "Sit Tight", the laughingist comedy that ever put an audience into hysterics.
Well, if he won't tell you about it, we'll tell you ourselves. If you want to laugh, . . . if you want to forget your troubles . . . and get rid of those cussed blues . . . see "Sit Tight" starting tomorrow at the Orange Theatre—
JOE E. BROWN
WINNIE LIGHTNER

As another plug for the "Super Attraction" month Moss had his usherettes distribute cards to patrons as they were taken to their seats, on which was printed an endorsement by the usherette along with words to the effect that she might have the pleasure of escorting the patron at each performance. Still another gag was the distribution of cards to tailor shops where they were placed in the pockets of all newly pressed suits.

Your ads are impressive, Dick, and it is a pleasure to pass along a sample for the benefit of other Club members. Glad to hear that business is so good out your way. Remember us to Jeff Lazarus and shoot some more stuff along in the near future.

Practically every theatre in the country at some time or other has engineered a tie-up for window display, but there are many valuable windows which are not producing results at the box-office because the mere dressing of the window is insufficient to become a magnet for the box-office. It requires just as much showmanship in the copy and text views in connection with such tie-up as the actual securing of the window itself. In this respect, may we add a word of caution to showmen who go in for this sort of thing on a large scale by suggesting that they supervise the dressing of the window as well as the placing of the theatre's copy so as to bring the best possible results both from the standpoint of attracting attention to the window as well as to the theatre.

Shepherd Says His Mickey Mouse Club Greatest On Earth

Claim to being the sponsor of the "greatest Mickey Mouse Club in the country" is a statement flaunted squarely at our several thousand members by a Southern representative, one "Sonny" Shepherd, manager of the Biltmore Theatre, Miami, Fla., so if any other Club member sees fit to take issue with the above assertion let him come forth, for until then we'll have to pin the medal on this enterprising manager from Dixieland. His club is only four months old and already numbers over 1,200 members. He further states: "If anyone doesn't believe that it brings in business, just dare 'em to write me!"

Enrolled in the club are kids described as about the best of Miami's younger element, some of them possessing almost big time talent when it comes to putting over songs, radio broadcasts, revues, etc. In fact, they are so good that Jack Fink, manager of the Miami Capitol Theatre, has set aside a day for them to appear in his Capitol Anniversary program, when Shepherd will stage a Mickey Mouse Revue at a special morning show.

A recent stunt that was pulled, in which these youngsters were featured, was a tie-up with the local fire department to exploit "Heroes of the Flames." More than 500 "Mickies" were in the theatre attending one of their meetings when the alarm was rung and answered in regular fashion at a vacant lot opposite the theatre. The theatre was emptied in record time and the kids then witnessed a series of fire drill stunts put on for their benefit. Photos of both club and fire drill appear on this page.

As this member points out, the possibilities connected with a successfully managed club of this kind are many and his contention is based on a theory that once you make friends of women and children, the rest is easy. The newspapers are favorably inclined towards kid stories, as several enclosed clippings disclose. Sonny, we will now pass along your appreciation to William Michalson at the Fox-Capitol, Portchester, N. Y., and will hope to hear more about your doings down in Miami. And what about the rest of the boys in your town? What are they up to these days, we'd like to know!

Asbury Managers Avert Stampedes As Fires Threaten

Quick thinking and action on the part of theatre managers often avert what might turn out to be a catastrophe and the following three examples of preparedness displayed by Asbury Park managers and assistant managers may serve as a reminder that the following may happen to YOU some day.

A four-alarm fire brought down electric wires and threw the Majestic theatre in darkness. Not knowing how long this condition would last, and being unable to learn, Manager Goldsmith made his way to the stage, and held the attention of the audience with a rapid fire ad lib monologue until he learned that a resumption of the show would be impossible because of the fire. The patrons filed from the theatre in an orderly manner, and a possible catastrophe was averted.

At Asbury Park, New Jersey, the entire city was thrown in darkness for about fifteen minutes. This happened during the supper show, when Manager Stonebrook of the Paramount and Manager Jonasson were dining at home. Assistant Manager Warren Walker at the Paramount made an announcement from the stage that quieted cat-calls, etc., and held everyone in the theatre, not a single refund being necessary. Assistant Manager Hadley Whitfield at the Mayfair, being a talented vocalist, put across several unassisted numbers until the lights came on. No refunds necessary, and many complimentary remarks were heard concerning the house staff's presence of mind.

Van Hook Comes To Life With A Couple New Stunts He Used

Round Tabler R. W. Van Hook, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Morrilton, Ark., comes to life for the first time since becoming a member of this organization with the contribution of a couple of gags on recently played pictures.

For "Sin Takes a Holiday," Van Hook used a street ballyhoo of car with banners reading: "Watch This Car for 'Sin Takes Holiday,'" and for a follow-up on opening day he had a blindfolded couple in the driver's seat with banner reading: "Rialto—Now." The idea of two local citizens blindfolded was a means of arousing interest, so Van Hook tells us, and the stunt helped pull them in.

The old wagon which Van Hook used with "Fighting Caravans" was an aid to putting this picture over 100 per cent, even though it rained cats and dogs. Banners were placed on each side and the antique vehicle was horse-drawn through the town.

All right, Van, the Club will accept your apology for being a tardy contributor. Just watch your step in the future, that's all. We want to be kept posted as to what kind of showselling is going on around your town and you are the Club representative there. So do your duty.

Lamm Ties Up With Chief Of Police As "Last Parade" Plug

Before leaving to take charge of the Variety Theatre, Cleveland, Julius Lamm engineered a corking piece of publicity in connection with the showing of "Last Parade" at the Ohio Theatre, Mansfield, Ohio.

Faced with the fact that the release of so many gangster pictures had created a scarcity of new stunts and searching for a new angle, he hit upon the idea of securing a personal endorsement from the local Chief of Police. As the result of a personal interview and private screening for the official, Julius crashed the local daily with a two-column story with cut carrying the chief's own by-line. In the story, the chief aired his views on crime in general and in a very subtle way got across an endorsement of the current picture. In addition to the newspaper story, this aggressive manager had posters made up in frames that bore a quotation signed by the chief, for distribution in the good spots around town.

Very nicely put across, Julius, and we're sure that this different angle on exploiting gang films will have its appeal to other members of this Club. Between you and Louis, this organization can always hope to receive interesting contributions. Let's know how the new job is going along and what's doing at the Variety. We'd reproduce a cut of that poster, but it's too faint to show up well. Next time send us a good one.

Cruciger's Tie-Up With Telegraph Co. Is Novel Lobby Gag

A tie-up with his local telegraph office for use of a ticker in the theatre lobby proved an effective means of arousing interest in "Behind Office Doors" for Richard Cruciger, manager of the La Roy Theatre, Portsmouth, Ohio. The company placed one of their electric typewriter telegraph machines in the lobby and the message on ticker tape was sent out from their office. As it came through the machine a uniformed messenger boy tore it off and handed it to each patron. The message read: "See what goes on in conference—'Behind Office Doors'—La Roy Theatre starting (.....)."

The Club is indebted to City Manager Floyd D. Morrow for sending in the above and he also reminds us that he used a card gag on "Fifty Million Frenchmen" that was effective. A small-size envelope bore the following copy: "An Interesting View of Gay Paree. Manufactured by French Photos, Inc. (Warning, Do Not Mail.)" Inside was a stock mat reproduction of film ad of lady pulling up a stocking. Oke, Floyd, and remember us to all the boys out in your town. The Club will remember your threat to make regular contributions to this department.

ROSEN'S "MOUSE" JAMBOREE

When it comes to doing things up "brown," Victor Rosen of the Warner Theatres in Santa Barbara, Cal., need not take a back seat for anyone. As witness his Joe Brown-Mickey Mouse celebration in that city not so long ago.

Mickey Mousers swarmed the Plaza in front of the newspaper building, while Joe Brown helped judge their pets in the newspaper-theatre parade. These few pictures will help convey just how grand an affair this was in many ways.

It was a glorious day for the theatre's Mickey Mouse Club membership and marks another step in the unlimited line of exploitation and institutional propaganda made possible through this now famous cartoon reel.

"Crashing" the Club pages in any form whatever is only possible when some subject possesses possibilities. We don't attempt to tell you what is good or bad in pictures, but if there is some worthwhile angle that will help build up your receipts in any picture or short released it will "crash" the Club pages by reason of the various showmen's activities in connection with the picture.

This, "Mickey Mouse" has succeeded in doing so often that in the recent check-up of exploitation on pictures, it was revealed that we had as many stories on "Mickey" as we had on some of the leaders among the best exploitation subjects released.

Rosen's fine work in ths district he handles under Moe Silver is too well-known for us to comment further at this time. The mere fact that he successfully engineered as big a stunt as this one is sufficient proof that he knows how to put things across in a showmanlike manner.

These "Mickey Mouse" activities are proving a popular trade stimulator in many sections and those in a position to do so, are urged to take advantage of the opportunities offered.

BEST FORMS OF THEATRE ADVERTISING!

Many Slants Are Available, Is View Of J. W. Creamer

Strange things happen in this business of ours, for instance, just seven years ago Motion Picture News through its Managing Editor Mr. J. S. Dickerson wrote to me at Chillicothe, Mo., and asked me to write an article on "HERALDS VS. ALL OTHER FORMS OF ADVERTISING FOR THE SMALL TOWNS," and now Chick Lewis asks for an article on what I consider the most valuable form of Theatre advertising and why.

In reading over my article of seven years ago, I still agree with it, in the sense that Heralds are the best form of advertising for the small town, that has only a Weekly paper.

. . . . But to get back to my present assignment. . . . .

Must Advertise

Shows may come and shows may go, but advertising in some form or other will live on forever. Today more so than ever before managers are closely scrutinizing where every dollar goes that is spent for advertising. Now we are rapidly discarding forms of advertising that only a few years ago we thought we couldn't get along without. We are waking up to the fact that times are changing and that we must change with them. Perhaps the one form that has been most universally discarded is outdoor advertising. Why? This is an age of speed, and with everyone in cars, what time have these people for looking at one sheet, 3's, 6's, 8's or even 24 sheets? True these may be seen and probably are by people who are walking, but why waste your money advertising your shows to a minority of the people in your town? Of course I'll admit there are exceptions where a billboard is a mighty good place to advertise, and I have one of my own, which is a three sheet located right on the busiest corner in town. Thousands of people pass it every day walking, but it is only to them that I appeal in this manner, to the people riding, the billboard is never seen. But understand I said I had one billboard, not a dozen or so, therefor I do not consider that I am wasting money. The trouble with us managers is that we cannot get it through our head that we can stop a certain thing. We use this or we use that and have done the same for years, and we get in such a habit of doing it, that we cannot realize that the reason we do waste money in this manner is merely from force of habit, and not because it is needed.

Various Forms

Take up various forms of advertising, and we find that Radio advertising is excellent if judiciously used, but it is available to so few managers that I will not consider it in this article.

Lobby displays are worthwhile if you have a location where people are continually passing, but if your house is off the beaten track, money spent on art work or lobby display is wasted because so few people see it. If you figure that a certain display will not sell tickets enough to pay for itself, then discard it before it is built. Should your house be poorly located and still within seeing distance of say a busy corner, then a flashy electric display is an excellent advertising medium.

Bus or inside street car advertising. You are compelled to have your display card stuck up right alongside a lot of high powered, specially prepared and attractive copy, and what chance have you to fight this copy? You have the same ratio again of where everybody in the car or bus cannot possibly see each and every ad card. You are spending too much money in one spot, in which everyone you are trying to sell cannot possibly be interested.

Window Displays. There was a time when I was strong for them. But we worked them to death, and too many windows were grabbed off on a too flimsy excuse for a genuine tie up. Window displays are okay at times and are not expensive.

Street Ballyhoo. Among the better class of theatres I believe that this has had its day. I am firmly convinced that sometimes these ballyhoos cheapen the theatre.

Tire Covers. They will sell a lot of people, but the cost for feature picture use is prohibitive to some theatres. Used to put over such as a "Cool Theatre" campaign, where the same tire covers can be seen for week after week, then I say that they are okay.

Trailers. No theatre should try to get along without them.

Heralds. Okay, but I would certainly print up a week's program on the back thus trying to sell several pictures at the same opportunity. They should be distributed from house to house by clean, respectable boys or young men whom you can form into a Theatre Club to take care of such work.

Window Cards. Tacking them to every unprotected spot that lifts its face to the sun, in the hope that somebody will come along and spend five minutes reading them is a piece of foolishness. Window cards in merchants' windows will, unless care is exercised be found many times stuck behind one of the merchant's displays, or in any spot that is vacant. There is a right way and a wrong way in the placing of cards in windows. Stand in front of a merchant's store and watch the people passing. Those that walk from the right towards the left are the ones who walk the closest to the window, while those walking from left towards the right will walk the farthest away from the window. Now is your card so displayed and so angled that it will be seen by those who walk the closest to the window? Just a little simple thing, but you can easily waste money by haphazard placing of cards.

Which Is Best?

Probably by now the reader is wondering just what in the world is a good way in which to spend money for advertising, and my answer is the same as hundreds of other men have said, the daily newspaper. Your ad in the paper is going to be read by people who buy the paper. To put it another way the families in your town pay their money for the reading of news and of course your ads. They are interested in the paper and its contents or they would not take it. It may be true that in the papers that your theatre ads are bunched up with a lot of other theatre ads, and in case they do its up to you to make your ad stand out from the rest of the mob. Watch the pages of the Round Table Club, in every issue will be found hints and examples right along this very line. If the rest of the theatres go in heavy for black space (and most of them do) then you be different and use white space and plenty of it, make your ads stand out naked almost, cut out every non-essential, play up the feature name and star's name in large black type, that's what the public wants to know. No one can deny that the theatre goer in looking over the theatre ads wants to find out WHAT pictures are playing and WHO is in them.

Budget Must Fit

In these days of cutting of budgets, it is very important that every inch of newspaper space counts. One of the important things is to try and get your ad in the same location every day. It can be done and I have proof of it right in this town. Locations on Women's Pages are good, because most of your audience is made up of women. Keep off the Market and Classified pages. Try to prevent your paper from running Funeral Home ads, etc., on the same page with your theatre ads. Especially ask them to keep the Muscians' Union ads that are trying to fight talking pictures off the page with theatre ads. Speak to your paper and they'll see your point of view.

Summing it all up . . . . from the number of interested people reached day after day, from the widespread distribution given you, from the quick delivery service given you, and at a reasonably low cost, the newspaper is the best

As this series goes on it gets more interesting, is the consensus of opinion from those who are following it. So we continue this week with expressions on the subject from Cliff Gill, well known publicity director of the Minnesota Theatre in Minneapolis, and, J. W. Creamer, city manager of the Fox Theatres in Muscatine, Iowa.

Creamer is among the first in the series to lay stress on forms of advertising other than the newspaper and considering the fact that his experience has carried him into typical towns where the best selling medium must be sought for, his story ought to appeal to the mass of showmen who are situated somewhat the same as he.

Next week we feature a special article in the series from Jack O'Connell of Toledo, Ohio. O'Connell is one of the outstanding showmen of the middle west and a leader among advertising men. Don't miss his many slants on the question of "What Form of Advertising Is Best for the Theatre, and Why?"

Selling Angles Must Be Flexible, Says Cliff Gill

If the perfect medium of theatre advertising could be conceived, it would probably consist of a 24-sheet size newspaper, carried to the reader on the shoulders of an army of stilt walkers, its advertisement gleaming out on the pages from borders of marquee lights.

Inasmuch as the above picture must remain for the time being, just a press agent's dream, he will have to content himself with selecting from the various media represented in his nightmare the one or the ones that will do the work most effectively for him. He will have to find the most effective medium for his particular theatre. There is no one best medium for all.

The people who pay quarters and dollars for picture entertainment, and those who could be induced to do so, are the people with whom every theatre manager is concerned. His instruments of selling must be flexible enough to reach the mall. If his house front is unfortunate enough to be situated on a street removed from the better lanes of traffic, he might bring his front and marquee to those centers of traffic by means of billboards, or window cards, or newspapers. Mighty as is the later medium generally, the humble sandwichman has right to feel more important than William Randolph Hearst when it comes to selling country store night at the Italo Theatre, Beachdrift, Maine.

Flexibility in advertising recognizes the potential strength of every medium and the limitations of each. It is of importance to the theatre manager who is interested in getting a message delivered and not in who delivers it.

MEYER STRIKES NEW NOTE WITH CO-OP!

A fine example of cooperative advertising that hits the nail right on the head during a time when a majority of the population in this country is timidly awaiting a written guarantee that prosperity is just around the corner, is brought to the attention of the Club by Fred S. Meyer, managing-director of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee. The following copy is taken from a boxed notice carried in the upper left hand corner of a full-page ad run recently in all dailies by Milwaukee's largest department store:

By All Means See "The Tailor Made Man"

It's playing at the Alhambra theatre this week . . . and it's a dandy movie.

Of course, like all movies, it's a bit over-dramatized in spots, and in some instances a shade improbable. But, we liked it immensely . . . not alone for its excellent entertainment, but because its underlying theme is based on a principle we believe vital to the prosperity of everyone in this community.

We are of the opinion there should be more people like "The Tailor-Made Man" (William Haines) . . . who believes that those who have should spend, so that those who haven't might earn—and spend . . . for the mutual benefit of our city, state and nation.

We feel it would be good if every Milwaukeean would see "The Tailor-Made Man" . . . not a "preachy" affair at all . . . but a lively, interesting picture with an optimistic note. Its moral is wholesome and fundamental; its message a bracing tonic for those who might be losing faith in the "return of prosperity."

Hats off to Fred Meyer! It is our opinion that if every theatreman in this country would take a similar step prosperity would be a great deal nearer than just around the corner. See if YOU can sell this idea to your leading department store merchant.

Rosenthal's "Keep Cool" Week Is Fine Hot Weather Stunt

A most timely suggestion for boosting attendance in hot weather is made by Bob Rosenthal, manager of the Mark-Strand Theatre, Albany, N. Y. It has created plenty of talk around his town and the old B. O. is showing that it is a financial success as well as a great promoter of good-will. Here tiz:

"Keep Cool Week" was promoted with the co-operation of a local newspaper through that sale of a double truck for a run of two weeks. Fifteen of the leading merchants were included in the deal and stress was put on all kind of appliances used for relief during hot weather. These articles were displayed in the mezzanine of the theatre and were also advertised, along with the event, in all specified stores and through all sales.

Note the attractiveness of the display shown in the accompanying photo. Run your eye right down the line, starting from the left, and you'll see electric refrigerators, ice cream company ads, fans, cool wicker furniture, summer dresses, light footwear, etc. Then, there is a section devoted to the "Past and Present" methods of house-cleaning, suggested by the contrasting items of brooms and hand-washers as compared with the modern vacuum cleaners and laundry methods of today.

This tie-up looks like a corker to us and we are passing it along with as little delay possible on account of the heat wave which has swept over practically every part of the country. Now is the time to hop to a stunt of this sort and we hope that every manager who tries it out will profit as handsomely as Rosenthal did. And many thanks to him for remembering his fellow members. We shall look for another sample of his work in the near future.

Did You Order Your Club Pin?

Glover's Lobby On "Skippy" Is Big Help For The Box Office

H. S. Glover of the Majestic Theatre, Shreveport, La., had an unusually attention-getting lobby display to advertise "Skippy."

The fronts and sides on both sides of entrance appeared like a boarded fence on which was written copy pertaining to the picture such as title, cast and play dates together with cut-outs and stills.

All lettering on the fences gave the appearance of a youngster's first attempt at lettering with many of the letters reversed and turned upside down, but sufficiently clear to make out.

At the corner of each fence adjacent to the entrance were life-like cut-outs of Jackie Cooper in a sitting position with his arm on his knee and his face resting in the palm of his hand.

Just above the entrance door appeared, "Now Shooting—SKIPPY." And just inside the doorway was a panel on which there was more eccentric lettering together with pictures, etc.

The lobby front was the talk of the town as was evidenced by the many favorable comments received by the manager. And it undoubtedly sold many extra tickets, too, which, after all, was the primary reason for the elaborate display.

Burmester Sells His Golf Shorts With Rousing Campaign

Backing up his opinion that in the current Bobby Jones series of golf shorts he had one of the "sweetest lot of pictures to sell he'd seen in many a year," Bud Burmester, owner of the Hollywood Theatre Corp., Fort Worth, Texas, proceeded to put on a rousing advance campaign to tell his public that Jones, in picture form, was on his way to Fort Worth.

During the four weeks advance work here are some of the efforts Burmester put forth: 50 twenty-four sheets at strategic points leading to various golf courses; 25 one-sheets backed, using 7 for window tie-ups and the balance for display on golf courses; 3,000 heralds (colored) for Golf Clubs; 15,000 heralds in local laundry packages for home distribution; lobby display in theatre made by athletic equipment store, showing types of clubs Jones used; especially designed cards for hotel lobbies, and miniature golf course players who made hole in one were given privilege of buying two tickets for the price of one.

In addition to the above he got up a 150-foot trailer showing Jones making his rounds, every street car carried a Jones banner on fenders, ushers were dressed in plus fours for the opening and a special preview of the first picture shown to all local professionals. The caddies were also let in for a special performance.

As to how it turned out, Burmester states that he was more than repaid for the work he put in on the above campaign. As we have stated before, a picture of this type is both seasonable and portrays a sport which is popular from Coast to Coast. We believe there are many angles for tie-ups and exploitation in this series which make it possible for Club members to reap a handsome return. These are being set down as fast as they come in. In our opinion, as in Burmester's, it is a choice series to build trade over a dull period and if practical for a manager to play, it's his own fault if he doesn't cash in to the fullest extent.

Boucher Sends Two Campaigns; He Also Puts Over a Robot

We are in receipt of an interesting collection of show data from that tried and proven Round Tabler and one of the Club's Big Men from the South, Frank Boucher, manager of the Warner-Maryland Theatre, Hagerstown, Md. This time he sends along campaigns on "Ten Cents a Dance," "Father's Son" and the somewhat out-of-the ordinary exploitation of Miss Katerina Televox, a robot designed by one of America's leading electric concerns.

Boucher led off his campaign on "Ten Cents a Dance" with an ad entitled "A Syncopated Advertisement," featuring a jazzy poem in addition to mentioning theatre and playdates. Other ads followed, with a good break on readers and a syndication of the Dance Girl's story. The distribution of imprinted napkins also rounded out the campaign.

Strong ads also featured Boucher's efforts on "Father's Son" and he again received a fine break from his paper in the way of attention-getting readers. A point Boucher stresses in connection with his work (and he used it consistently to plug this picture) is getting the most out of your program board. He searches the picture for selling angles and finds that it makes interesting selling copy for the board and may be changed from day to day. An enclosed letter of appreciation from an out-of-town Boy Scout Troop, as another part of this campaign, testifies to the amount of good will built for the theatre among this organization.

In case other members have an opportunity to visit their local Westinghouse dealer and arrange for a showing of Miss Televox (the robot) Boucher's advance campaign will surely be of interest. The tie-up was effected with his local Edison company and a most elaborate campaign mapped out for the one-day appearance of the robot.

This consisted of a special announcement trailer; lobby cards and banners; special, large newspaper ads by theatre and Edison Co.; special window displays; light bills carrying notice of appearance of robot; a parade from train to theatre; reception at theatre; special 15c school matinee; contact with all civic clubs and school officials; trucks with banners and donation by Edison company of special door prizes. From a glance at Boucher's summary of expense it appears that the electric company bore the greater portion of the entire campaign.

If any Club member is interested in arranging for a showing of Miss Televox we would suggest getting in touch with your local lighting company. It will be a most novel treat for your patrons, we feel sure, providing it can be brought to your town at no great expense. We further believe that its value would lie in the fact that it is away from the run-'o'-mine added attraction and also that most of the expense would be born by the electric company. In view of all this, we are sure that Frank Boucher's advance publicity will prove beneficial to anyone arranging for the above attraction. Thanks, Frank, for these live tips and we know that we can depend upon you for future contributions.

PROGRAM MAILING CARD!

Fred Weiler, manager of the Victory Theatre, located in a residential suburb of New York City, has built up quite an impressive mailing list for which he has prepared an unusually attractive and effective mailing piece in the form of a weekly program card.

This card, as illustrated here, measures 4½ by 7 inches and is printed on good brown stock. Type matter is set into a standing cut and border and altogether this makes an impressive weekly program that is not hard to keep and tells its little tale without making you wade through too much other stuff to get at "what's playing tonight?"

Incidentally, Fred has found worth-while revivals mighty profitable despite the fact that his location makes "clear" product tough to get. Overcoming this situation as best he can, we now find the Victory being steered into calmer waters via the showmanship of its skipper.

Getting back to the program card; we have several of these on hand at Club headquarters and if any members would like to see one, drop us a line and we'll to glad to send it on.

Baughman Secures Heavy Co-Operation From Local Editor

Earl Baughman of the Victory Theatre, Salt Lake, Utah, got a wide range of publicity through the newspapers in announcing the theatre's inauguration of stage shows in conjunction with the showing of feature-length pictures.

Starting on Sunday before the Friday opening, Baughman got lots of publicity through the newspaper columns on the amusement pages daily till opening of show.

Inasmuch as the stage show was an innovation to the Victory patrons, the newspapers were more than glad to give it plenty of publicity.

Thanks to the newspapers, the stage show was well received and largely attended throughout its entire engagement.

Club Index for Month of June

Herewith we list the many items of exploitation, etc., which appeared on the Club pages during the month of June. By keeping this issue close at hand you can refer to it whenever necessary as a means of locating some particular form of show-selling. We hope our members and readers are finding this service useful. The Club would welcome suggestions to improve it.

WARNER THEATRE HOLDS PREMIERE!

View of the main entrance of the newly opened Warner Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, which recently held its premiere showing before an enthusiastic audience of local celebrities and first night movie fans. Manager B. M. Robbins can be seen at the right of the booth, apparently searching for his watch.

Copley Puts Title Letters To Good Use Selling "Cimarron"

The eight letters spelling the title "Cimarron" were used to good advantage in two different tie-ups on the picture bearing this name when it was played by H. G. Copley, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Vancouver, B. C.

In one tie-up Copley and his local newspaper co-operated in the promotion of various merchant ads, each one carrying one of the letters as the puzzle gag. Suitable awards were made to those who correctly pieced together the letters.

The other method consisted of placing the eight letters in eight scattered store windows in the shopping district adjacent to the theatre. The letters were cut out of beaverboard, nicely made and mounted and used separately from an attractively framed 11 x 14 mounted on a card 22 x 28, with good selling copy around it. These found good window space in desirable locations usually not open for this theatre's advertising. The idea of hunting in the windows for the letters appealed to all merchants interested. The same awards named in the newspaper contest were given in the store window tie-up.

Both of the above gags can be put over at very little effort and expense, the merchants in most instances donating the awards for publicity received, or, in some cases the merchant and theatre jointly sharing cost of the gifts. Copley tells us that both gags were the means of arousing interest in the picture and hopes that some brother showman will also benefit from his experience. Let us know what else is doing up in Vancouver, Copley, next time you write the Club.

Gift of Radio Set Stimulates Trade, Says J. J. Scholer

The gift of an electric radio was a popular highlight of a campaign made on "Ladies' Man" by J. J. Scholer, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Phoenix, Ariz., the award being made on the last playdate.

The radio was promoted from a local radio dealer who also aided in other ways to assure a large attendance, especially on the night the radio was given away. On the night the radio was given away from the stage, the sponsor put on a dancing and piano act at his own expense.

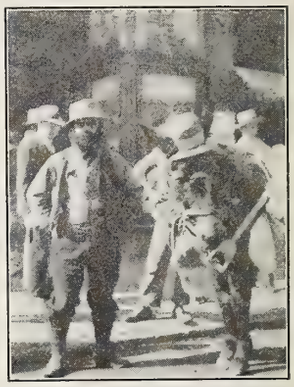
The radio dealer also plugged the radio contest and theatre in his regular Saturday morning hour over the radio for three Saturdays; at the same time plugging the pictures playing at the theatre. The dealer also placed three 40-inch co-operative ads in the local paper and two ten-inch ads in two other papers.

Cultivation of your local radio man's acquaintance is a valuable asset if it will result in securing the same amount of co-operation which Scholer obtained through his dealer. Furthermore, there can be no doubt that the latest in radio sets has a distinct appeal to the public, if you are in doubt as to what to get in the way of an attendance-boosting gift. The Club would like to hear more about what you are doing to sell shows down in Phoenix, Scholer, so don't forget to keep us posted.

Street Ballyhoos Effectively Used By Manager Stearn

Two different street ballyhoos were used to good effect in advertising "Gun Smoke" and "Mr. Lemon of Orange" when Manager Harry Stearn played these pictures at the Orpheum Theatre, Wilkesbarre, Pa.

For "Gun Smoke" the ballyhoo consisted of a man dressed as a gold miner of years ago accompanied by a mule on which was camping paraphernalia and signs on both sides reading, "The Gold Strike of 1931—Gun Smoke vs. Cowboys—Richard Arlen, Mary Brian, Orpheum Theatre." The merchant who defrayed expenses of the ballyhoo was given a credit line.



For "Lemon of Orange" a man appeared on the streets in the make-up of El Brendel, with a pig on leash. Banners on the pig read, "see what happens to a squealer in 'Mr. Lemon of Orange'." Stearn also used a special lobby display consisting of lemons and oranges strung across the entire lobby one week in advance of the showing. Cut-outs and stills of the picture were also included in this display.

Both of the above stunts created attention and comment from pedestrians and were a big help putting over these two pictures, Stearn advises. So there they are boys, all yours for the taking, if you can use them. Next time you put over a good stunt, we'd like to hear from you again, Harry.

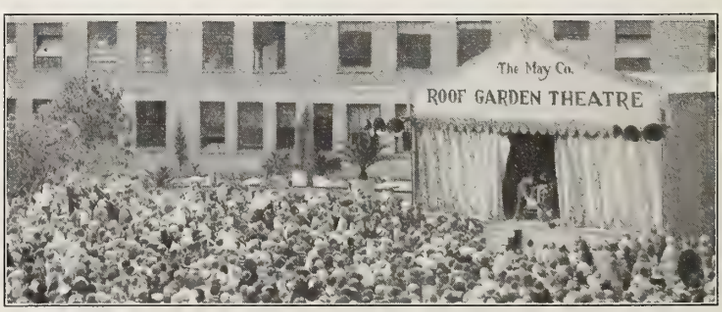
Carroll's Big Baby Contest Went Over Top In New Jersey

In announcing the finals of a Baby Contest over in Hudson County, N. J., Charlie Carroll, manager of the Warner Stanley Theatre, Jersey City, secured a double truck in a widely read newspaper of that section. A number of prominent merchants co-operated by offering special sales of children's merchandise and the two pages were well filled with ads. Photos of winners of preliminaries in the contest were published along with coupons to be filled out with votes for the finals.

The Warner Ritz, Roosevelt and DeWitt theatres were also tied in with the preliminary part of the contest, but the finals were staged at the Stanley where the big campaign ended with a baby-land display consisting of various exhibits supplied by many Hudson County retailers. Banks and laundries also co-operated with large sized ads.

As stated before, we believe that judiciously promoted Baby Contests are a sure-fire means of boosting business over the dull months of the year. Many of our Club members are at present either in the final stages of this sort of promotion or about to start a contest. To those who are casting about for a worthwhile stunt for this season of the year we can heartily recommend that they give this one a trial.

THE HEN-YARD STRUTS ITS STUFF!



When exploiting "A Fowl Affair," Educational Pictures arranged a tie-up with the May Company, one of the largest department stores in Los Angeles, for the "personal" appearance of the hen, rooster and duck characters in original comedy costume. The show was part of the May Company's Kiddie Easter party and Billy Leyser, director of publicity for Metropolitan Studios, acted as M. C.

SOCKING SUMMER SLUMPS!

Some Money-Getting Ideas to Stimulate Summer Business?

By E. S. C. COPPACK, Managing Director
Paramount Theatre, Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y.

Revamp These Suggestions to Suit Local Conditions

E. S. C. Coppack was responsible for the fine "Institutional Merchandising" story which appeared on the Club pages some time back. At that time we promised something more from this aggressive showman and here it is.

Certainly, anything pertaining to the subject of stimulating summer business is not only timely but vital during the hot dog days. What Coppack is passing along here are all tried and successful ideas. With a reasonable amount of revamping, to suit local conditions, the majority of these suggestions can be adapted for most any other house.

Unfortunately, a lot of us are prone to resign ourselves to the fate of the time-honored summer slump. Fortunately for show business, each year sees a decreasing effect of the hot weather with the coming of cooling plants and more sincere managerial endeavor. Thousands of theatres that formerly closed now remain open and play to profitable business. Needless to say, that profitable business is in no way accidental in the summer, because the theatre is faced with all manner of opposition and it is only through intelligent effort and honest-to-goodness hard work that the summer bugaboo can be licked.

COOLING PAPER

The first thought of most of us is to tell the people that the theatre is really comfortable during the summer months. Our usual medium for this is cooling paper, either sniped or on regular stands. It is not necessary to discuss this such a great deal as it was thoroughly covered in the June 26 issue of the HERALD. However, there is one little angle that has proven very successful in plugging the late show. Filling stations will usually give space to a hanging card with this copy: "After your drive, enjoy a complete performance at the cool Paramount Theatre. Come as late as 9:15."

A POST CARD NOVELTY

In thousands of residential communities a regular mailing list can be made to do a good turn by bringing the people a simple message on your cooling plant or the comforts of your theatre, prepared in a manner different from your usual layout. Reproduced here is a specimen of a card that got splendid results. Many of the lithograph companies now include in their service cut-out paper hangers about 30 inches long made to resemble icicles. For an outlay of three or four dollars and the trouble of tacking these cards to strips of wood, the marquee bursts forth with a new valance idea that adds novelty to the appearance of the front and helps a lot toward giving a cool impression.

DANCING IN THE LOBBY

Since the last show on these hot summer nights has a pretty good attendance, we have tried another little stunt that has met with favor. The radio dealer across the street very kindly gives us one of his instruments to be placed in the lobby and as soon as the last show breaks, an usher selects a hot dance program, easels are pushed against the wall, the cooling plant is left running for 30 minutes and those of our patrons who wish to have the privilege of dancing to good music on a good floor. It is surprising how many patrons stay for these lobby dances. While they are dancing, the theatre cooling plant keeps them more comfortable than any local dancing pavilion could.

ORGANIZATION NIGHTS

The smaller the community the more active are local organizations and lodges. We have been quite successful in bolstering business on off nights by putting on the stage a guest artist from the Masons, Elks, Rotary, etc., dedicating the night to the organization. Of course, through pride the members of the organization attend in a body, buying regular admission tickets and feel proud of the fact that the theatre is publicizing them. All in all, it is one of those stunts that costs nothing, but usually makes the ticket machine sing a song.

MIDNIGHT MATINEE

In communities where people are out fairly late on summer nights at swimming pools and so forth, a midnight matinee or "owl" show is usually successful. It is our policy to run the picture that opens the following day, thus making a preview, but giving the folks an organ song fest or a song cartoon, a comedy and a picture, for a flat admission price and it seems to get good results. As an added novelty, of course, there is the dancing in the lobby after the show and we have never had experienced difficulty in getting some local bottling works to provide free refreshments. Sounds attractive, doesn't it?

REFRESHMENTS

And since we are talking about bottling works, why not use them for the regular matinees? Your local grocer or tea company might be interested in serving iced tea. Possibly the ice cream company would serve these new confections that are put up in paper cups. They are usually glad of the publicity and it appears to me as another one of those bits of exploitation where everybody wins.

PARKING

Statistics show that almost every American family operates at least one automobile. Any business for the theatre is probably remote from your locality and necessitates the people coming by auto or bus, usually in the old family chariot. We have found that they are more apt to return if the theatre gives consideration to their parking problems. In some crowded areas it is impossible to secure a lot for free parking, but even in a business place such as downtown Kansas City, parking garage owners and lot owners are almost invariably interested in a plan that will publicize their service and, in return for mention in your herald, they will probably cut the parking rates in half for your patrons. If the garage or lot happens to be within a couple of blocks of your theatre, this is too good a bet for the manager to pass up.

BOY SCOUTS

I have noticed in the Managers' Round Table Section of the HERALD subjects bringing out the value of institutional advertising. One of the best of such stunts is to assist some Boy Scout in attending a camp for two or three weeks during the summer with any simple contest: a popularity vote, collecting the largest number of stubs, best record distributing heralds, most proficient in scouting activities, etc. A thing of this kind is always good for space in the papers and usually gives you an opportunity to secure an interesting lobby exhibit of scoutcraft. The expense of sending a boy to camp would probably be about $15 as against the hundreds of dollars in tickets sold to parents of scouts endeavoring to secure a prize.

SWIMMING STUNT

Here is a simple one that works easily. Photograph the theatre staff wearing bathing suits that are sold by some nearby merchant. He will be interested in using a cut of the photograph in display ads in the newspapers and the photograph itself in his window. The expense: nothing.

BEACH IDEAS

Even in inland towns where there are no beaches the owners of amusement parks might be interested in giving you space on a diving float bearing large copy about the theatre in return for your standing part of the expense of erection. On the boardwalk or in the midway concessionaires are always in need of prizes. Why not let them award a guest ticket or two in return for a large card on your attractions prominently displayed?

And, by the way, how about putting stickers on your cooling plant on the bath house mirrors or inside the lockers? A pass or two to the superintendent will probably square this stunt.

And in the same parks, the miniature golf operators are still on the search for new hazards. How about a simple wooden replica of your theatre? Such a wooden structure about two feet wide can easily be put together by any handy man around the house and makes a nifty looking hazard, at the same time being a reminder of your show.

LOBBY AND MEZZANINE

Speaking of golf, why not use one of those Scanlon putting rugs in the lobby? Out in Omaha at the Paramount Theatre there is a complete nine-hole course in the lounge. Why pay 25c to just play golf when for the same amount you can play golf and see a great show?

THEATRE PERSONALITIES

Most of us overlook the fact that the fellow who is writing advertising for other business houses gets as stuck for ideas as we do. If approached in the right way, he will probably be glad of a little help in the way of a suggestion. Here are a few: A cut of a theatre personality—organist, master of ceremo-

Here is the text of a longhand post card used by Coppack for a large mailing list:

Dear Friend,

We've found the most delightful way of keeping cool . . . just the place you will like . . . no fans, no draughts, not too cold. There is a marvelous $60,000.00 air conditioning plant that makes weather to order. Bill and I go as often as possible because while we rest in that glorious, healthful coolness we enjoy splendid entertainment. Meet us there and we'll all cool off . . . it's the beautiful Paramount Theatre on Bay St. in Stapleton.

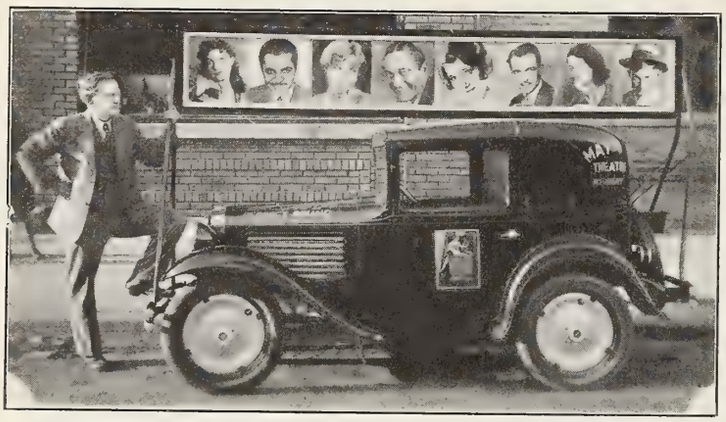
VEST-POCKET AUTO GOES TO WORK!



A familiar sight in Maysville, Wis., and environs, is the little Austin that does a street ballyhoo for C. W. Doctor, owner-manager of the May Theatre. Note the rigging that this manager constructed for the mounting of stills on current and coming attractions. At the left is the figure of the Doctor himself.

Hiehle's Ad Space Four Times Greater Through Swap Stunt

The promotion of a "Swap Ad" contest in his local newspaper is resulting in four times the usual amount of display advertising for Ed Hiehle, manager of the Midland Theatre, Newark, Ohio. All that is necessary, says Ed, is to give the newspaper the guest tickets and the paper does the rest.

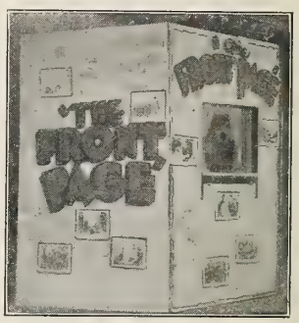
Considerable has been published on these pages in reference to "Swap Ads," so we will not again go into detail. Briefly, as the accompanying cut will point out, the idea is for people to insert a "swap" advertisement in the classified column and receive a free ticket to the theatre. The gag usually arouses interest because of the fact that the cost of the ad is offset by the guest ticket.

To those managers who have a nearby college to draw upon for patronage we can also recommend Hiehle's plans of promoting special College Nites. In his case there is a Dennison co-ed school about six miles away from Newark. In order to get a contact with the student body he held a Dennison Nite, with the time generally allotted to shorts given over to a special "pep" program. The school faculty and Glee Club were invited guests and along with the house organist the whole gang joined in the festivities with songs, etc. Hiehle also has a special bus and theatre ticket combination rate which admitted the student to the theatre and paid for transportation both ways.

The above is an excellent method of building up student patronage and the Club can heartily recommend Hiehle's way of going about it. The occasion was, of course, supported by an ad in the local paper. It would also seem that the idea of arranging transportation was a thoughtful one. As Ed wrote the Club he was mailing out bulletins on both Midland and Auditorium attractions to the rural districts and it is the Club's sincere hope that it is pulling them in. Keep up the good work, Ed, and don't forget your brother showmen.

Novel Lobby Flash On "Front Page" Is Made By Phil Engel

A novel and attractive display on "Front Page" was recently made by Phillip Engel, manager of the Strand Theatre, Perth Amboy, N. J. You will note by the photo on this page that Engel built a compo board front around the ticket booth on which were attached a number of newspaper front pages, together with stills from the picture. The photo is a bit faint but clear enough, we think, to give you a fair idea of how the display was fashioned.



The above is an idea which ties in neatly with this picture and can be put in effect at very small effort and expense. Thanks, Phil, for remembering the Club and we will expect to hear some more from you as to what your neighborhood needs in the show-selling line. If you run across Walt Murphy kindly give him our very best regards. The personal information in your letter will be used in another department in the near future.

Jones Making Good Headway With Small Town Newspaper Ads

Lack of adequate newspaper advertising facilities is necessarily a handicap to any exhibitor trying to build patronage for his theatre but we note from a recent letter sent the Club by Clayton E. Jones, manager of Jones & Lyons Family Theatre, Sheldon, Ill., that these two progressive showmen are getting by very nicely.

What we have reference to above is that so many small town newspapers are not able to correctly cast mats for display ads. In order to combat this circumstance and make the ads stand out Jones and Lyons have adopted a method of running a series of long boxed ads with alternate bold and medium bold face type. The box effect is in heavy black rules and serves to emphasize the message. The Club recently published several of this type of ad so we believe that most readers are familiar with the layout.

We could, however, make one suggestion to the above members if they wish to vary their advertising with mat display. It is often possible, through their newspaper, to arrange with a larger publisher in some neighboring town or city to do the necessary work, so we would suggest to Clayton that he take up this matter next time he calls on the local advertising manager of his paper; that is, in case he wishes to accomplish this purpose. The Club also notes that you plugged the Herald Award of Merit when you reopened the Family and we don't doubt that this different twist in advertising made the desired impression. Thanks for keeping in touch with us and don't forget future contributions.

SOCKING SUMMER SLUMPS!

By E. S. C. COPPACK

nies, etc.—enjoying a fountain drink. Such a cut can hardly be overlooked by anybody with the fountain's streamer.

FATHER'S DAY

Put this thought away for next year, but don't forget to work it, as it certainly gets results. The expense of this stunt to us was a dollar necktie given to the oldest father at the County Poor Farm. The human interest angle made the papers fall for it hard with a resultant three-column cut. The thing got good will for the theatre and succeeded in bringing the manager and organist pictorially before the people.

REFRIGERATOR GIVE A-WAYS

Nearly everybody that sells refrigerators or radios knows that there is no place like a theatre lobby for getting mailing lists and to concentrate the attention of thousands of people in a short time. Electrical refrigerators are receiving a lot of advertising during the summer months and it is a fairly easy problem to secure one to be given away free in your lobby to some lucky patron. Who would not buy a 50c ticket if he had a chance of taking home a $200 refrigerator?

CRUISE CONTESTS

Listing stunts such as these to sock that old summer slump could go on forever. These suggestions are merely to refresh your memory and possibly give you an idea that has proven successful for some other fellow.

A new stunt that some of the boys are using this summer is the awarding of one of those four or five-day cruises being featured by the steamship companies. They are a great idea. A beautiful big liner wanders out into the ocean, fools around a few days and then comes back. The passenger has all the fun of a sea voyage with none of the expense of paying guides in foreign countries. As these cruises in themselves are merely promotional stunts by the steamship companies they should be glad to put their material before your patrons in return for a cruise or two given away by the theatre. Of course, the awarding of such a cruise suggests a lot of other angles such as popularity contests, etc.

After all, the only answer to socking that summer slump is a little bit of ingenuity and a lot of hard work. It can be done!

Lourie's Prelude For Gang Picture Captures Applause

Any Club member who wants to inject some realistic atmosphere as a prelude to a gangster picture will not go wrong in following out a scheme used on "The Gang Buster" by Joseph Lourie, manager of the Warren Theatre, Roxbury, Mass.

Joe informs us that the advance trailer on this picture is a corker, opening up with the rat-tat-tat of machine gun fire with the bullets spattering out word of the title. Immediately following the close of the first feature every light in the house was extinguished and for several seconds (not too long, he says, as it might frighten the audience) a narrow beam of light was played slowly over all parts of the house. While this was going on the stage manager sneaked a dummy gangster on the stage and the acting assistant manager sneaked over to the organ, neither act being observed by the audience. This took about a minute. Then, at a given signal from Joe to the booth, the spot was placed directly on the dummy, machine gun effect was let loose from the organ, the dummy wavered and was suddenly yanked off-stage. The spot was then extinguished and the trailer with its opening shots flashed on the screen.

All of which sounds like excellent atmosphere, Joe, particularly when you tell us the audience applauded for several minutes and that the grosses on this one were right up to the mark. And as you state, this stunt can be worked with any gang picture. You're right on par with brother Al of the Morton now for sending this gag along but you will have to keep right on in order to make the grade. So don't forget to keep the Club posted on Roxbury showmanship.

Morris Rosenthal Now A Fireman; Is Also Beauty Judge

A letter from Morris Rosenthal, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Wilkesbarre, Pa., discloses the fact that in addition to being a theatre manager he is also a fireman—in an advisory capacity. We don't know just what Morris will advise the local fire chief to do but can guess that he has "Third Alarm" booked and is planning to borrow a few engines and hooks and ladders when the time arrives.

Morris also adds that he is getting a great kick out of running Beauty Pageants, acting as both picker and judge. Next time you write, Morris, tell us how the gag worked out. Oh, yes, we also note that you've joined the Lions and feel like a lamb. That will give you a nice tie-up on the next animal picture you play, so we can see that you are covering all possible angles of this business.

Poag's Novel Lobby Displays Effective Sales Aid In Texas

They're on the job down in Del Rio, Texas, when it comes to selling shows via lobby display method, according to what we can see in a collection of snapshots sent the Club by P. J. Poag, manager of the Princess Theatre in that city.

The photo at left is a moving cut-out on "Reducing." The hand on Marie Dressler moves, and so does the indicator on the weight scale. The two centre photos would indicate that Poag believes in playing up his titles in a big way. The letters on "Hell's Angels" are 4 feet high and are strung across the entire width of the lobby. The letters cut out for "Paid" contained about 16 lights per letter and the lights were connected with a flasher circuit on the theatre, the word being spelled out one letter at a time. The photo at the right covers a shadow box containing six different colors which were operated on a flasher. The box measured about three by six feet and was used in connection with the Spanish version of "Captain Thunder."

Other recent stunts employed by Manager Poag includes a walking ballyhoo of a lady dressed as a man for "A Tailor Made Man" and a real Mexican sandwich man for "Rogue of the Rio Grande."

We like the looks of your work so well, Poag, that we're passing it along for the benefit of your brother members with the thought that they, too, will find your contribution interesting. By this time you have undoubtedly stored away a few more gags for the Club. Shoot them in the next time you write.

Gelabert Burns Up San Domingo With Rio Rita Campaign

Prior to being transferred from Santo Domingo to his favorite island of Porto Rico, Pedro Gelabert, Jr., tells the Club that he put over a real hot campaign on "Rio Rita" at the Capitolio Theatre.

Special decorations were made in the theatre which set the house back to the tune of $200 which, as Pedro says, is a lot of money down in S. D. Twenty-five banners, such as the one you can note across the front in the accompanying cut, were hung across principal streets and, all in all, it was the first time that these Islanders had ever seen a picture advertised in such a big way. Needless to say, the house was a sell-out.

Now, Pedro is over at the helm of the San Jose Theatre in Porto Rico (the house with the golden voice and the silver screen) and he says "wait 'till you see what I do to transform this house." Oke, Pedro, we'll wait but we'd much rather be able to catch a steamer and make a personal call. Don't forget to keep us posted.

Memories Of Past Awakened By Eddie Cline's Lobby Bar

A barroom replica of the bygone days was the novel manner in which E. J. Cline, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., transformed his lobby when playing "Ten Nights in a Bar Room."

The display consisted of a regular bar, brass foot-rail and apparently bottles filled with the "regular stuff." Pictures on the wall in back of the bar were obtained from regular paper supplied by the exchange.

Four panels on the bar itself facing the people as they came into the lobby advertised the picture, as "The world's most famous play, 'Ten Nights in a Bar Room'—starting Monday." "The miracle of dramas that has amazed the world! 'Ten Nights in a Bar Room'—starting Monday"—"Starts Monday—Wm. Farnum—'Ten Nights in a Bar Room'—Days that are gone, but not forgotten."—"The World's Greatest Miracle Drama." An empty keg was planted at one end of the foot-rail.

In these days of Sahara dryness (?) we don't doubt for one minute that this lobby display was the talk of Scranton, Eddie, particularly that old familiar rail. We are reproducing a photo of the lobby and hope that it will not provoke too much thirst. Don't forget us in the future, E. J.

Co-ops Put "Pays To Advertise" Over Top, Says Dummer

The adaptability of "It Pays to Advertise" to a variety of newspaper tie-ups was capitalized upon by the promotion of two corking single pages of co-operative ads when A. E. Dummer, manager of the Strand Theatre, Minot, S. D., recently put this picture over the top.

Dummer decided to use a slogan and trade-mark contest and with splendid co-operation from the daily paper and twenty-eight merchants the ads brought about a lot of publicity for his house. The first one was scheduled to run one week in advance of opening of the attraction; and the second, one day in advance of opening date. Each one of the prize winners of the contest was mailed a personal letter in which attention was called to attractions booked for the balance of the week. In all 353 replies were received, furnishing the house mailing list with many additional names.

These co-op ads on the above picture, or any other one that lends itself to this form of promotion, can be secured through the co-operation of your newspaper's advertising manager. The cost is small and the mouth-to-mouth publicity on the contest is extensive in comparison. The Club has published cuts of these ads from time to time and feels that most members are familiar with the make-up; if not, further information may be had by dropping us a line. Thanks, A. E., for passing along the above. We're glad to know the ads worked out so nicely for you. Let us know what else you are doing out in Minot.

A. B. BINNARD SAYS:

"Have been following the pages of the ROUND TABLE CLUB very closely . . . and must take my hat off to the boys for the many constructive ideas that are always there. It is really a big help to us 'way out in the sticks' to have such a contact with managers all over the country."

Colorado Manager Smears Front Page With A Red Imprint

Another instance of imprinting the front page of a newspaper with a theatre ad is brought to the Club's attention by Joe Rivkin, with the advertising and publicity department of Educational Pictures. The sample we have in front of us was sent in by the company's local branch manager in Pueblo, Colo., and in large red type the message reads: "Wipe Out the Menace of Gangs and Gangsters—'Hell Bound' at the Palm." The Club is not supplied the name of the manager who put over this front page gag but perhaps he will see this paragraph and acquaint us with his name. And how about a membership application?

Adams Back On Job With Striking Lobby Front; Also, Co-ops

Away from his job over a period of four weeks with an attack of "eyeeritus," as he describes the ailment, Bill Adams, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Brockton, Mass., is again back on the spot and is making up for lost time with a variety of effort on several recently played pictures.

In connection with his campaign on "Front Page" we'd like to particularly call attention to the accompanying cut showing the Colonial's lobby front, which is one of the most attractive we've seen up to the present time. We believe you'll all agree that it a most perfect reproduction of the first page of a newspaper, the mast head, two-column heads, cuts and other stories setting it off in great shape. Also note the big cutout of Menjou in front of the booth, flanked on either side with slashed pages. It appears to us that this piece of work is particularly noteworthy in view of the small sized lobby that this member had to contend with in order to produce a striking effect.

We also note that as soon as his eyes cleared he secured two cooperative pages, one in connection with the above named picture and the other a half-page on the Bobby Jones golf shorts. The masthead of the local paper appears at the top of the former ad, with copy underneath reading: "Special Worthy of Front Page Advertising." Many merchants are represented and the theatre ad occupies a commanding position on the page. Owing to the fact that the field was more limited on the golf picture, he was unable to secure more than a half page, but the display, as it is, is impressive and includes sporting goods stores, golf accessories, shoes, landscape architects, clothing, a milk dealer and a screen netting ad. We are also publishing on this page a photo showing how a Bobby Jones window display was arranged in one of the town's leading stores.

In connection with both of these pictures, the house newsette was attractively made up in true newspaper style to plug the coming shows. A generous sprinkling of photos and screen notes adds to the general appearance of this house organ.

Well, Bill, from the above we can make a guess that you have fully recovered the use of all your showman faculties, and now that you're in full swing again we will look forward to hearing a lot more about what you are doing, in order to make up for the lost time.

THREE THOUSAND SHOWMEN CAN'T BE WRONG!

SAM CHERNOW is the manager of the Sayre Theatre, Sayre, Pa., and his recent appointment to this post came about in the way of promotion from the assistant managership of the Capitol Theatre in Waverly, N. Y. Sam, now that you are out on your own we're sure you'll have some interesting experiences to relate to your fellow members. Shoot them along as soon as you can find the time. And we'd like to have one of your photos to give you a good send-off.

GLEN DOWNING is at the helm of the Paso Robles Theatre, Paso Robles, Calif., one of the T. & D., Jr., circuit of houses and he not only sends in his membership application but makes a request for a Club pin. That-a-boy Glen, let the rest of them out your way know that you're now a member of the greatest organization of showmen that was ever banded together. And let that account of that last live-wire stunt you put across come right along.

J. C. COMBS is the manager of the Palace Theatre, Crane, Texas, and it is a pleasure to include another member from the Southwest among this fast moving army of showmen. What was that last good stunt you put over the top, Combs? Let your brother members know all about it next time you write. And why not include a photo of yourself?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JESS CLARK manages the Palace Theatre down in Jacksonville, Fla., and he is proposed for Club membership by Earle Holden. We're happy to add your name to a large list of Florida managers, Jess, and will expect to hear a whole lot about what you are doing to sell your shows. Best regards to all fellow members in your town.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

G. DONALD SEASHOLTZ is in charge of the Capitol Theatre, Chambersburg, Pa., and we take this opportunity to acknowledge his application for membership in this great organization of showmen. Don, we take it for granted that you've found these pages interesting in the past and hope that future issues of this department will include some interesting accounts of your ideas on how to sell shows. Next time you write the Club why not send along a photo?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

E. C. QUALLS is the manager of the Carolina Theatre, Lexington, N. C., and this new member has declared his intention to contribute some of his picture campaigns to these pages. Okay, Qualls, and let that first one come right along so that the rest of the members will know what you are doing for this industry.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JACK RYAN is the City Manager of the Fox-Virginia and the Fox-Senator Theatres, Vallejo, Calif., a new member who has found these pages interesting in the past and who promises to help keep up the good work by sending in some of his own versions of how shows are put 'way over the top. That's the proper spirit, Jack, and we'll be looking forward to receipt of your next letter. How about that photograph of yourself?

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

JOE HERMAN is the manager of the Fox-Savoy Theatre, a fine house in the Bedford section of Brooklyn, N. Y., and since we are in receipt of his application for membership the Club may soon expect to read an account of what this manager is doing to boost patronage at his house during the warm summer months. Shoot in your ideas, Joe, so the rest of the boys may keep in touch with you.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

SILVERT SETRON manages the Aubert Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., and with the reported struggle for business among theatres out his way we are going to look forward to hearing some lively accounts of show-selling from this new member. Our regards to all brother managers out your way, Setron, and let's hear from you real soon.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

RAY G. STEVENS is the manager of the Capitol Theatre, Wallaceburg, Ontario, Canada, and a cordial welcome is extended to this new member from the Dominion. We haven't as yet received an account of Ray's show-selling activities but trust that he will soon write and let his brother members know all about what he's doing to put his house over the top. And how about a photo of yourself, next time you write?

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

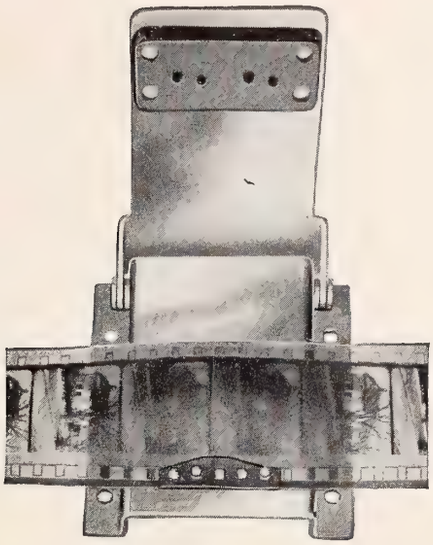
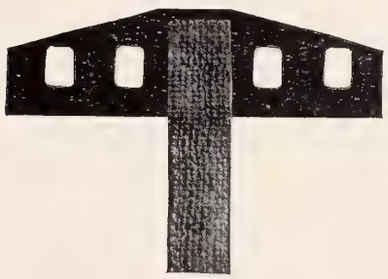
AN IMPROVED METHOD OF BLOCKING OUT SPLICES IN SOUND FILM





NOW the sound track need no longer be painted out at the joints to silence splice noise. The Eastman Sound Film Patch enables the laboratory worker to block out joints with greater ease, speed, and uniformity.

The patch is made of light-weight, opaque film. For convenience in handling, it is provided with a quickly detachable finger tab. With the aid of this tab, a simple but accurate registration block, and cement, the patch is quickly applied to the film.

Because of its design, the patch is practically inaudible in projection. At the same time it obscures a minimum of the sound record, and assures fast, accurate treatment of all splices. These factors make the patches and the block a valuable feature of Eastman Service.

Vol. 104, No. 3 — July 18, 1931

Buck Passers of the Dog Days

THE current period is the biggest buck passing season that has ever been observable in the three decades of this institution which we sometimes are justified in calling an industry. It is an industry when it works. Strolling from Times Square to Columbus Circle, from offices high and low, in three hours this week one dispassionate observer was confidently informed that there was nothing wrong with the business now—"but the bankers," nothing in the way of triumphant progress—"but a lack of aggressive leadership at the top," nothing to prevent a big season—"if the studios do right by us," nothing in the way now—"but the reluctance of the exhibitor to buy," and lastly "nothing can be done until general conditions change."

If one were to take the sum total of the expressions to be had in, on and about Broadway these days, nobody is running this business and everybody is waiting for somebody else to do something about everything. A few weeks ago Mr. Martin Quigley, editorializing in MOTION PICTURE HERALD, made remarks to the effect that we should get nowhere waiting for pictures so powerful that their mere release would set the world afire.

Those remarks are doubly applicable today. There is nothing automatic about this motion picture industry, with the possible exception of the item called depreciation. Some one ought to be doing something about everything else. It is hot weather and it is a lot of trouble, but there is an unparalleled opportunity right now for a lot of able persons to do a lot of things. This industry was built by men who ran it—who were not run by it.

Codfish and Pictures

SITTING in an airy office with lofty perspective across New York and Central Park it is possible on a warm July morning to think some poisonous thoughts about the current teapot tempest of efficiency talk which has risen from Mr. P. G. Wodehouse's candid, but perchance unappreciative, remarks that he was paid $104,000 for a year in which he did nothing for the screen.

This is merely a sharply pointed and personified example of the sort of talk about "studio waste" which has afflicted the atmosphere of this industry with increasing intensity for at least a decade. Since the motion picture is the great exhibitionist among industries, since it lives in a goldfish bowl, self-illumined by the crossing and double-crossing spotlights of a publicity machine, a generally distorted series of images greet the eye of the observer.

If some producer did "waste" $104,000 on Mr. Wodehouse it is of no cosmic importance. The fate of this industry does not rest on its wastes, its mistakes and its failures, even if in periods of stress nervous bankers and excitable executives do make them the subject of their chief concern and most vigorous vociferations in hot weather. Success depends on the hits, not the misses.

No other industry is quite so good a "story," in the sense of journalistic gossip, as the motion picture. That is why we are eternally hearing about the mistakes of the movies and their sins of omission and commission. Just off hand, out of the memory of a writer who has had considerable contact with American business for the last two decades, come recollections that: once a great motor car company had to call in its whole season's output because of a silly error in construction; once a great tobacco company's advertising department lost track of five carloads of costly enamelled signs, which were found in the warehouse four years after the brand they were devoted to had passed out of the market; once a great government spent $47,000,000 on a hydro-electric plant which has never done anything yet; once a great construction company had to build a bridge over a big river three times and drowned a tribe of Indians before it would stand up; further, every good American newspaper buys and produces twice as much copy as it prints; struggling authors write a hundredfold more novels, plays and stories than ever will be published; tons of costly fabrics which have been made in mistaken taste or have fallen out of fashion are sold off as junk remainders and remnants. Every business, like every human institution, makes mistakes. The fact that the race, and its various concerns, survive indicates that the mistakes are an essential part of the process of operation. It is the basic natural story. The codfish lays a million eggs and produces maybe, with luck, a dozen offspring. An elm releases several million seeds and maybe two or three become trees.

When the bankers and the efficiency men and the pet certified accountants of Wall Street learn to teach efficiency to the codfish and the slippery elm they will also be able to tell the motion picture industry how to make motion pictures. Meanwhile, a vast amount of advice, in some instances orders, emanate from authorities who can do nothing about showmanship but take the showman out of it and leave the ship becalmed.

Getting the "Selling Idea"

THE appointment of Russell Holman, advertising manager of Paramount, and A. M. Botsford, advertising manager of Publix, to the Paramount home office story committee, appears a constructive endeavor toward getting into the product more of those elements which experience finds to be merchandise at the box office. Steadily through the years of the rise of American industry the "selling idea" has been exerting increasing influence on, and, often dominance over, the product. After all, in this industry of amusement showmanship mostly means salesmanship. Also, now as never before, in this world of the screen, the motion picture can not be at any time considered sold until it has been sold at the box office.

THE LITTLE FELLOW

by W. L. Ainsworth

This article of timely and interesting import concerning the theatres of the lesser cities and towns comes from the pen of an exhibitor markedly well fitted by the nature and duration of his experience to make such expression. Mr. Ainsworth operates the Garrick theatre of Fond du Lac, Wisconsin. The article is taken from the annual issued in connection with the twentieth convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin held in June in Milwaukee. His argument for recognition of the institutional importance of the theatre in the small community, as an integral part of the community, cannot be set forth too often. A special interest attaches, too, to his citation of some of the exploitation advantages which the exhibitor in the lesser towns may utilize and enjoy to his own profit and that of his community.—THE EDITOR.

THE small-town theatre holds a prominent place in the motion picture industry. It commands the sincerest respect of those who make pictures and those who sell them. For, in the final check-up, it is small-town theatres that create the greatest part of the revenue for producers and the exchanges. It is a necessity in every community. It is the center of social and business life of the community. Through it, people in the small town get a visual contact with the outside world. Music, travel talks, noted plays and famous stars come to the small town through the medium of the talking picture screen.

Merchants of the small town realize the necessity of the theatre. It holds the public of the community and brings in those from nearby rural districts. For that reason, merchants are willing to co-operate with the theatre manager in advertising tie-ups that will be of mutual benefit.

In the majority of cases, the manager of the theatre is a native of his home town. He is usually active in civic movements. These things help to create good will and draw the attention of home people and those in the surrounding communities to his theatre and to attractions.

There is a belief that the key city theatre is drawing patrons away from the surrounding small-town theatre. This is true in some cases, but not where the exhibitor is "up and doing." The wide-awake small-town exhibitor realizes he is in a position to select his pictures from the entire market, because of little or no opposition in his town, while the key-city theatre, which is one of a number of theatres in its city, is obliged to take the entire output of a number of companies to assure it of a sufficient amount of product.

The small-town exhibitor can see releases in the key cities and select just what he wishes to show his patrons. He can also get the benefit of the advertising, of those pictures he chooses, from the big city papers and by playing these pictures soon after the key city showing has been made. Likewise he is in a position, because of his low operating cost in comparison to the theatres in the larger cities, to show these same pictures at a lower admission.

It is true that many people prefer, at times, to drive to other cities for a show, but if the local man is up to date in his pictures and right in his prices, he is in a position to receive the same kind of business from other nearby towns. If his prices are lower than those of the larger town, chances are more than even that he will retain the majority of his home-town business.

Truly the small-town theatre has its place in the sun, but the manager must take advantage of opportunity offered him. He must take pride in his theatre; keep it modernized, clean and up to date. He must be very critical in the selection of his pictures and, above all, must use every effort to give the public good sound reproduction—for, after all, a great many theatres today are going begging because of poor sound.

AD REELS REVIVED: INDEPENDENTS TAKE FIELD MAJOR COMPANIES QUIT

K.R.S. and C.E.A. Frame Standard Contract At Meet

The Kinematograph Renters Society, English distributor organization, held a recent meeting in London, to appoint a committee to meet one representing the exhibitors (Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association) for the purpose of framing a new standard contract.

Another committee was appointed for a discussion with exhibitors on trading conditions, particularly as affecting the small exhibitor. The Renters also discussed the possibility of "rationalizing" the Society's publicity matter.

The general council of Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association held its meeting in London last Wednesday, following the distributors' conference.

Return of Unit Production Plan Expected on W. C.

The Hollywood Herald on Thursday said that the return of the independent unit method of making pictures will supplant, to an important extent, the press mass production system. This is forecast by several moves within the industry, most significant of which is the previously mentioned plan, under discussion for some months, for the creation of a directors' guild to produce. No official announcement has been made, but it is understood that, among others, the name of Cecil B. DeMille, Walter Wanger, Lewis Milestone, Frank Borzage and King Vidor are mentioned in connection with the project.

DeMille has no contractual obligations at present, having finished with M-G-M; Borzage has one more for Fox, Milestone one for Howard Hughes and Vidor two for M-G-M.

German B. O. Holds Up

(By Cable to Motion Picture Herald)

Berlin, July 16, (Special Herald Correspondent) — Germany's financial difficulties which threaten the entire business structure of the country are not expected to influence the motion picture industry, for the present at least. Normal production and distribution facilities have existed during the entire hectic period, and up to now attendance has been satisfactory.

Equipment Field Gains 22 Per Cent In Last 2 Months

Indications that business has reached a trend upward is the unofficial report that theatre equipment sales have increased 22 per cent in the last two months.

May was considered the "bottom" month, with June registering an 11 per cent. increase. July, with present sales, will show a similar increase over June.

With this general trend upward, theatres are expecting an improvement beginning in September.

Offers to Clara from "Zig," Columbia, MGM, Universal

Clara Bow is no longer lonesome. Offers this week from Florenz Ziegfeld, Columbia, M-G-M and Universal are all under advisement, according to Clara's manager. She expects to resume work October 1.

Ziegfeld wired a "money no object" offer for stage work, but Miss Bow turned it down. Columbia raised the ante to "anything within reason," but this, too, was refused.

She says she will never again work on a long-term contract for any one, but will work on a picture-to-picture basis, making no more than 2 or 3 yearly and on condition that she have a voice in story selection and pick her own director and cast.

Selznick Quits Paramount; Joins Ranks of Independents

Paramount has unconditionally released David Selznick as associate producer. Selznick will make known his plans early next week. He will become an independent producer and has been on the Paramount lot since 1927, recently as executive assistant to B. P. Schulberg.

Manufacturers Turn To Non-Circuit Group

3,000 Members Instruct Allied States to Market Kinograms As An Ad-Newsreel

The sponsored advertising reel, instead of being the dead issue that its rejection by the major companies seemed to have made it, now receives new life from action in independent units to take quick advantage of the major companies, retreat from the field.

Following decision of Allied States to back a sponsored ad-newsreel, and the ambitious enterprise of Abe Heller and William MacKee, both announced this week, it is revealed that manufacturers are looking toward the independent field to pick up the sponsored film where the leading producers, acting under outside pressure, dropped it. Vigorous attempts will thus be made to nourish advertising reels to a prosperous state.

Still Retain Interest

However, at least Paramount and Warner Brothers will sporadically dabble in the sponsored reel field, as evidenced this week when Publix advised managers that it had contracted with Theatre Service corporation, to book at company houses a new series of style films sponsored by Fashion Creator's Guild, which will pay Publix theatres for playing the group. Warners, too, still has an interest in sponsored shorts, booking a new Flit chemical reel into its Strand theatres in New York and Brooklyn, then shifting it to the New York Winter Garden.

Practically all companies will contract to produce ad reels for national advertisers, but only on rare occasions will they undertake their exhibition in controlled theatre properties. The major companies, principally Paramount Publix, Fox, Warner Brothers, RKO and Loew's-MGM, adapted their attitude against ad reels because of newspaper antagonism, public agitation and the terrific pressure brought to bear by sales departments, which fought against sponsored subjects on the grounds that they are cheated of a booking each time a reel plays a company theatre. These vigorous protests by sales chiefs, understood to have influenced at least two major organizations to discontinue sponsored shorts, are known to have carried considerably more weight than the newspaper agitation given as an excuse for barring the reels.

Organization Completed

Allied States decision finally to enter the sponsored reel field is really the expression of 3,000 exhibitor members, independent theatre owners for whose opinion President Abram F. Myers was waiting before definitely launching the project. The members have now indicated that the association

COLOR FILMS MAKING COMEBACK IN PRODUCTION PLANS, SURVEY SHOWS

Quality and Cost Factors Corrected: Kalmus

Can't Measure Value in Dollars But Adds Life When Properly Handled, Says Lightman

Pictures in color, which have been dormant in the last few months, are on the way back, according to a survey of production schedules.

Correction of two objectionable features, it is said, have created this renewal of interest in the natural color product.

Heretofore:

The exhibitor has said that the quality of color was poor.

The producer has said that the quality was poor and the cost high.

During the last few months, when the demand for color in films has been stagnant, these two important factors have been corrected, according to Dr. Herbert T. Kalmus, president of Technicolor.

In discussing the color film situation with exhibitors, the general comment has been that the quality was bad and detracted from the entertainment value of a picture.

However, says M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, color will add life when properly handled.

Lightman, with other exhibitors, is of the opinion that the value of color, from the box office standpoint, cannot be measured in dollars and cents at the present time.

Dr. Kalmus, however, contends that the two primary objections have been overcome. During the last few months he told Motion Picture Herald, the quality has been improved and the cost has been lowered.

"Things are looking up sharply," he told a representative of the Herald in New York on Wednesday. "There is a definite renewal of businuess in the color field. Whereas the cost formerly was 8¾ cents a foot, it is now 7 cents.

"With the lower cost there is better quality. We have taken advantage of the slack period and corrected what might be called the objectionable features—quality and cost.

"You will find that every producer wants color in pictures. Paramount, beginning in August, will produce eight pictures in color. Radio has finished its first under the improved process, and is scheduled for four more. It is possible that Warner Brothers-First National will begin in October on a production schedule of six. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer may make 'The Merry Widow' in Color."

Dr. Kalmus said that Technicolor does not fear competition. "We do have anxiety," he said, "over inferior product."

A color patent filed in 1920-21 has just been issued to Technicolor, Kalmus said. Against this had been 230 claims, with Technicolor winning all. According to the head of the company, this gives Technicolor control of practically all processes now being used by competitors. This patent, filed 10 years ago, still has 17 years to run.

Gentlemen,

You may be interested in knowing that we sold the projectors we advertised immediately after the ad was inserted, in fact we had to return two checks sent in for them after they were gone. We also received a tremendous number of inquiries which had to go unanswered.

It seems as though the HERALD is the logical place to advertise equipment in for the results are almost always the same, a sure sale.

Denies Soviet to Produce on Coast

The Soviet government has no intention of sending representatives to Hollywood to negotiate for any plan to start production of sound pictures, says L. I. Monosson, president of Amkino Corporation, representatives in America of Soyuzkino, the combined motion picture industries of the Soviet republic, in denying reports published in some Hollywood papers.

Soyuzkino's sound schedule for 1931 calls for 32 features and many shorts. Four hundred sound units are to be installed in the current year, with 5,000 planned for 1932, it was stated.

Jedge, How Could You?

Miniature golf courses are bad enough, and night baseball doesn't help the motion picture box office any too much, either, but when the Justice of the Peace sits up in opposition, it is too much. In Harlandale, suburb of San Antonio, Texas, E. H. Talbert, who performs the functions of J. P., has taken to holding court every Tuesday and Friday night. They say it is a lot of fun for the spectators, and it must be, because the miniature courtroom is jammed—while the nearby cinema emporium is equally empty. The operators of the film house are all riled up over the situation, and have asked the judge please to do his "courting" during the day, and leave the night free for the motion picture business.

Paramount Nets 70 Cents a Share Second Quarter

Consolidated net profits of $2,225,000 after all charges and taxes and equal to 70 cents a share on 3,178,312 shares of stock outstanding at the end of the quarter is estimated by Paramount Publix Corporation for the three months period ended June 27.

The company reported for the first quarter of 1931 a profit of $3,515,000, equal to $1.12 a share. This makes a total net profit for the first six months of 1931 of $5,740,000, equal to $1.82 a share.

A comparison of earnings by quarters and for the six months follows:

First 6 months: 1931, $5,740,000; 1930, $8,440,000; 1929, $5,130,000.

Six months' earnings per share: 1931, $1.82; 1930, $2.98; 1929, $2.31.

Second quarter's earnings: 1931, $2,225,000; 1930, $3,606,000; 1929, $2,556,000.

Second quarter's earnings per share: 1931, $.70; 1930, $1.21; 1929, $1.14.

Screen Writers See Silver Edge To Contract Ban

Writers in Hollywood see a silver lining in the new no-contract arrangement being placed in effect among the larger studios. Fox, M-G-M, Warner-First National and RKO-Pathe are understood to have the rule already in force, following the furore over P. G. Wodehouse's recent statement that he had received $104,000 ($2,000 a week) from M-G-M without any of his work reaching the screen.

But Hollywood's own screen writers say that they will benefit by the 30-day contracts when the fall season brings production back to capacity and the studios begin calling for their services.

Universal Earns $255,783 Profit

Universal's ledger now is riding along nicely in the black, with the company, and subsidiaries, reporting a profit of $258,783, after all charges for quarter ending May 2nd, 1931.

Current and working assets of the company (including inventories) as of May 2nd, totalled $9,328,258, and current liabilities amounted to $2,412,382. This compares with current and working assets as of Nov. 1st, 1930, of $10,154,188, and current liabilities of $3,872,742. Surplus at May 2nd, 1931 was $4,279,954, which included $1,354,000 surplus arising through revaluation of land.

The company has effected substantial reductions in operating cost. Expenses for the six months May 2nd, were less by $538,977 than those of the preceding six months, and $485,506 less than expenses of the corresponding six months ending May 3rd, 1930.

Silents Still Used In Non-Theatricals

Although the entrance of sound did confine the non-theatrical field to a more narrow range, this branch of motion pictures still uses silent product to a greater extent than the industry generally believes.

This was proven with a test subject used in a survey by Visugraphic Pictures, of which E. F. Stevenson is president, and which played 3,000 accounts in two years, averaging an audience of 350 and more than four shows daily, all silent.

In June, the silent subject played 24 non-theatrical accounts on 35 mm. and at 65 accounts on 16 mm.

Rogers and NBC Mark Time

Buddy Rogers and National Broadcasting Co. have temporarily halted negotiations. Rogers is trying to get a release from his Paramount contract, it is said, so that he can broadcast half-time over NBC network, making pictures on a free-lance basis during the remaining half. NBC wants Rogers full time.

Believe Favorable Action Now Is Certain

Lightman, Following Conferences at Attorney General's Office, Meets Distributors

Adoption of the uniform contract which was agreed upon by exhibitor and distributor conferees at the 5-5-5 sessions in Atlantic City, by the distributors is expected within 30 days.

While nothing of an official nature regarding this could be obtained, it is believed that the conferences in Washington between John Lord O'Brian, assistant to the attorney general, and M. A. Lightman, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and P. J. Wood of the Ohio exhibitors association, have paved the way for early adoption.

See Loss by Delay

It is known that the MPTOA executives have been making "extraordinary efforts to complete the task of having the 5-5-5 contract adopted," for it is their belief that such action has been delayed to a point where certain opposition has arisen on the part of distributor executives. This opposition, it is said, has deprived the exhibitors of the concessions which they gained (or would have gained) through the new agreement.

Many of the distributors, it is said, have become reluctant to adopt the new contract; in fact, some having voiced the opinion that they had "better luck" suing theatre men breaching their contracts than they had had in arbitrating such differences.

"The value of the uniform contract to exhibitors," said President Lightman, "is of such importance that nothing should be left undone to bring about its adoption, for there is nothing to prevent the distributors from inserting clauses advantageous to themselves in their own individual contracts.

Predicts Early Adoption

"I really believe, however, that it is not desirous of the producer-distributor executives to put themselves in this unpopular spot if an effective and legal means of bringing about its adoption can be arrived at.

"I have the utmost confidence that within a reasonable time the contract as agreed upon at the 5-5-5 conference will be adopted by the distributors."

When asked his definition of "a reasonable time," President Lightman said: "Within less than 30 days."

President Lightman, who returned to New York following his conferences with the attorney general's office, has been in executive session with a number of the distribution officials. These business engagements terminated Thursday, and on Friday he left for Wrightsville Beach, N. C., for the state convention of the MPTO.

FEDERAL COUNCIL REPORT ONE OF MOST HEARTENING DEVELOPMENTS

By MARTIN QUIGLEY

The dominant note of the recent report of the Federal Council of Churches on motion pictures and the industry, and its aftermath in the form of widespread editorial comment in many of the most influential newspapers of the country, represent one of the most heartening developments in the history of the industry.

The Council survey, carried on comprehensively over a long period, naturally and properly, was a severe, rather than a sympathetic, examination of motion pictures and the industry's mode of operation.

In face of this, the outstanding conclusion expressed in the report is an emphatic insistence upon the need and the importance of a continuance of intelligent and lively cooperation of religious, educational and social agencies with the constituted authorities of the industry in the vital task of safeguarding the destiny of the screen in its essential objective, which is to provide good and wholesome entertainment.

Out of the industry's long experience in a conscientious effort to discharge its responsibilities to the public it has developed, through the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors Association, a workable and working scheme of self-discipline which has its principal expression in the Motion Picture Production Code. It has been plain from the start, and it continues equally plain, that furtherance of the industry's proper aims and ambitions for motion pictures necessitates intelligent and lively cooperation from those agencies whose chief commitment is to work for the moral, intellectual and social betterment of the public.

That many of these agencies are alive to the opportunity for constructive helpfulness in this regard is very properly emphasized by the Council report. Several hundred groups, with local, state, national, and even international, affiliations and contacts have consistently demonstrated a disposition to aid. Indeed, no small part of the extensive work of the organization over whose complexities Will H. Hays presides, is given over to the task of interpreting, in an intelligent manner, the ideas and idealism advanced by these groups.

Because the industry has continually sought this kind of cooperation, it is, indeed, heartening that the report of the Federal Council should so emphatically register the need and importance of this cooperation.

And it is of striking significance that the very things which the Council report urges as necessary and important to be done are the very things which the organized forces of the industry have been striving for years to do.

The Council report says:

"There is no substitute for a more refined demand at the box office window."

Here is a statement and a sentiment which have been continually put forward by the industry in proof of the need and the importance of social agencies addressing themselves to that part of the problem which is properly theirs.

Another quotation from the report:

"The motion pictures cannot be made good by the use of scissors."

Here, again, is an axiom of the industry. It points to the inutility of scissors-waving in the censor boards and emphasizes that elimination of evil at the source—which is the basic principle upon which the Motion Picture Code rests—is the only effective means toward the right end.

The Council's report disposes of the question of political censorship in the following:

". . . it must be patent that voluntary cooperative efforts toward social betterment, wisely conceived and well-directed, are capable of accomplishing something which the imposition of force can never accomplish."

This statement cannot fail to elicit hearty approval and acceptance by all who know the hapless record of political censorship of motion pictures, as well as by all those who know how deeply both evil and inutility are imbedded in the principle of political censorship.

The following are among the notable newspaper editorials which we append for the purpose of completing the record on this heartening development:

From The Christian Science Monitor:

"'Motion pictures cannot be made good by the use of scissors'. This phrase, occurring toward the end of a report by the department of research and education of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America dealing with public relations methods of the American film industry, points toward a constructive new attitude of social organization for film betterment.

"For years state censorship boards have been snipping out this and that scene to bring the films into conformity with a list of state 'don'ts'. Seldom can two boards agree precisely on what should be omitted, apart from certain large indiscretions which the producers have agreed not to commit. The total result of this scissors censorship has been to make some producers exercise ingenuity to put over the locally forbidden material in fashion so subtle that the censors either do not notice the objectionability of the disguised incident or regard it as sufficiently covered up to be allowed to pass.

"The Federal Council's committee recognizes that this deviousness is only deferring the day of a more generally commendable type of film play, a type that can only result from 'a more refined demand at the box office.' The report declares that the religious and social agencies have been at fault in becoming too much preoccupied with 'cuts' and 'eliminations'. Such omissions do not perform the needed service of lifting the tone of the picture thus edited. What is needed is that these social forces shall put the weight of their educational and moral influence behind the better elements manifested in motion pictures, to the end that 'the industry should be made to feel a demand for more socially useful pictures'.

"Here, indeed, is a constructive attitude toward the films, an urging of more than the negative snipping out of the bad in motion pictures. This changed method would mean a positive putting in of the good. Persons who understand the values of such social forces, having seen them at work in settlement houses and in civic enterprises designed for the benefit of the whole community, know that the most lasting improvements come from striving to make the whole body of community thought healthy. Cutting out an objectionable detail here and there has little effect upon the quality of the whole, for that makes no improvement of the point of view that first made the objectionable things possible. A wholesome attitude toward the entire problem, on the other hand, tends to work in relation to the whole good of the community. Undesirable tendencies assume their rightful minor relation with the whole when thus considered. From such a point of view the crime film becomes an anomaly, a misrepresentation of the life of the whole people, since the large majority of the people are law-abiding.

"What the report asks for is a broad social consciousness, supported by the churches and other organizations aiming at the public good, a consciousness that is essentially educational and constructive, that could make known to the industry its desire for the 'promotion of responsible citizenship, interracial understanding, industrial justice and international good will'. Such a movement need not be slow in making itself felt. Only an organized expression of the weight of this civilized and civilizing opinion, already in existence, would be needed to have an immediate effect that would give overwhelming support to the proclaimed—but too often unattained—program of the producers' organization toward self-regulation and self-improvement.

"Such an effect would, in its practicality, displace the present piecemeal and unrelated attempts of social groups to improve motion pictures. Will H. Hays, speaking for the film makers, remarks pointedly that 'motion picture producers cannot live by advice alone.' Clearly, the issue has been defined as a public responsibility, and the time is coming when social forces must recognize in an organized and positive fashion, as the Council's report states, that 'as a great agency both for instruction and entertainment the motion picture must become the purveyor of all that is best and richest in our culture, and the ally of the uplifting and refining forces of community life.' To help it do that the public and the social agencies must do more than wield the scissors."

From the Chicago Daily News:

". . . Mr. Hays (Will H. Hays) insists that an increasing number of admirable motion pictures are being produced. He asks the censors to carry on educational work among the great public and so increase the public's capacity to appreciate good pictures. The question of popularity and profit, he says, cannot be disregarded altogether. The industry is willing to receive from cultural and ethical agencies suggestions that are practical. Pictures must interest and entertain, and tests that are too narrow and illiberal for the present age are bound to prove unsatisfactory."

From the New York Herald-Tribune:

". . . The motion pictures cannot be made good by the use of scissors—that sentence from the long report of the churchmen upon the Hollywood industry is worth all the rest of the report. If standards are to be raised, it will not be done by waving pious scissors, but by building organically within the industry."

From the Utica (N. Y.) Observer-Dispatch:

". . . The industry should be made to feel a demand for more socially-useful pictures. This demand, as everyone must see, can only be registered at the box-office, which means that the majority must honestly want socially-useful pictures. The Committee has come to see that Will Hays alone, with the best will in the world, cannot compel the industry to observe his own standards of decency and good taste. Only the public can do that; no form of legal censorship can do it."

From the Hartford Courant:

". . . In all probability the movies will improve only as rapidly as popular taste improves. The process is likely to be slow, but the report of the Council makes plain that more rapid progress cannot be hoped for by the activity of self-appointed mentors who have assumed to be the arbiters of morals in the past."

BRITAIN NEEDS A WILL HAYS, BUT NEEDS FILMS FIRST, SAYS MOORING

50 Million Dollars Going To U. S. Each Year

But Might Have Been Spent on Lollypops Instead of British Pictures, Is Reply to Exhibitor

By W. H. MOORING, London

Britain may not waste much affection upon Will H. Hays, but according to a weighty British opinion, what Britain needs most is one just like him.

There is no personality in British film politics comparable to the Will Hays of America; there is no film organization in Britain with authority such as that of the group he controls. But there is sore need of one.

At the summer conference of British exhibitors just concluded at Brighton, England, a well-known London theatre owner, Major Arthur J. Gale, J.P.O.B.E., interested in several cinemas, including Britain's largest—the Elephant and Castle Trocadero, London—crystalized an argument against "the unfair system of film hire now operative"—for which he blamed American firms—into a plea for the appointment of a highly paid and highly efficient administrator with power to deal commercially with the many problems which from time to time affect the interests of exhibitors in particular and the industry in general.

Admits CEA Weakness

His advocacy carries with it a tacit admission that, as at present constituted and managed, the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association of Great Britain does not serve completely and satisfactorily the interests of its exhibitor members. In this suggestion Major Gale doubtless has the sympathy of a large majority of British exhibitors. It is said that "the moment provides the man." British theatres are just now so much under the weather that there is little doubt the moment has arrived. Where the man is to be found Major Gale has not indicated.

Major Gale told his fellow exhibitors all they already knew about the difficulties of existing booking terms. He threw his whole weight into a speech frankly hostile to America, in which he vowed that whereas, just before the talkers came, America was taking just about one million pounds sterling from this country each year, that amount had now increased to no less than ten million pounds a year. And that was additional to the running costs of talker apparatus which also went largely to U. S. A.

Impressive Figures But - - -

The figures sound impressive. They read like an argument for a selling policy, for a unified control of production activities, for intensive propaganda, and all those other things which America has, and Britain has not.

His fervent plea that British exhibitors should give more and more support to British films, in order apparently to transfer some of the ten millions per annum from

Seek Favorable Earnings Ahead

Interests who believe that motion picture stocks will make a much more favorable showing in the latter part of the year have been accumulating shares during recent periods of market weakness, says the Wall Street Journal, pointing out that June is normally the low point in the film industry, with 40 per cent of the year's profits being earned in the first six months.

"Loew's probably will report nearly $7 a share for the fiscal year ended August 31, and Paramount seems on the way to show close to $4 for the calendar year," the Journal said.

Publix Takes 7 Asheville Houses from Carl Bamford

Seven Asheville, North Carolina, houses have been brought under Publix management, in a deal with Carl C. Bamford. Bamford will operate the theatres.

The houses include the Imperial, Strand and Plaza, former Publix theatres, and the Paramount, Princess, Palace and Auditorium, operated by Bamford.

Seven-to-One Plan In France Is Near

A system of free licenses favorable to American distributors and doing away with the French quota as regards the United States, and other countries not imposing a contingent, is likely, with import restrictions lifted but for the exception that one French picture be accepted for distribution in the United States for every seven American films admitted to France, according to advices from Paris. It is understood that the new regulations drawn up by the Cinema Control Commission will continue in operation until June 30, 1932.

The new arrangement also is reported to involve the signing of a pact specifying the number of French-made pictures in German dialogue which will be permitted to enter Germany in exchange for French dialogue pictures made in Germany to be shown in France.

Offers Plan For Government Support of French Industry

M. Quinton, prominent in Paris film circles, has propounded a scheme for the formation of a French national cinema industry, with government assistance.

The idea provides for the building and equipping of studios by the government, and a circuit built along standard lines, with the municipalities having a share in them. The idea will be studied but is not regarded very highly.

MALOYS AND JACK MILLER INDICTED IN CHICAGO OPERATORS INQUIRY

Dreiser Takes "Tragedy" To Court; Paramount Brave

By Terry Ramsaye

The great "art" versus "industry" issue of the controversy between Mr. Theodore Dreiser and Paramount over the authenticity of the picture version of "An American Tragedy" was flung into the courts of the state of New York this week.

And of all places in the world for the staging of the legal jousting in this celebrated controversy the spot chosen is Yonkers, that village up the Hudson so long accursed by vaudeville jokesmiths. The excuse is that Mr. Dreiser's summer home is at adjacent Mount Kisco.

A literary decision from Yonkers should be subject to a ruling of reversible error on sheerly geographical grounds.

But anyway Mr. Dreiser has gone before Justice William Bleakley in the Supreme Court and there obtained an order directing the Paramount Publix Corporation to show cause why it should not be restrained from releasing its screen version of the ponderous novel at issue. A hearing is scheduled for Wednesday next.

With a certain bland hopefulness, inspired perhaps by the optimism of its legal department, Paramount Publix is proceeding to arrange to open the picture at the Criterion at advanced prices—about August 1, if the corporation's contention prevails in court.

From many sources and in the judgment of many previewers the screen version of "An American Tragedy" is an excellent motion picture. Mr. William A. Johnston of our Hollywood Herald remarks: "Here's a picture that talk makes supreme. Here's the talk that will make talking pictures supreme." Also both Mr. Jesse L. Lasky and Mr. Charles McCarthy of Paramount have told me in confidence that it is likely to prove Paramount's greatest picture.

All that, however, has nothing to do with it. The contention of Mr. Dreiser is that the picture is not the story of "An American Tragedy" as he wrote it. It seems that Mr. Dreiser's view was that "Clyde" his central figure was a victim of society, while the picture tends, his expert witnesses say, to show that society was a victim of "Clyde." Personally I hope that both contentions—both as to "Clyde" and as to "society"—are correct. Neither one of them ever did much for me or my business.

Mr. Dreiser's attorneys, Mr. Arthur Garfield Hays and Mr. Carter Hume, have signed a letter quietly mailed to several thousand persons and publications, quoting from their literary experts on the iniquities of the screen version, and saying:

> When the motion picture rights of the book were originally purchased, Mr. Lasky specifically stated that the producer wished to make a "gesture" and to present a picture of real merit, quite unlike the ordinary screen material. This was insisted upon by Mr. Dreiser before he would sell it. When your company acquired the talking rights this was likewise a condition, so much so that the contracts of purchase contained the rather unusual clause:
> > "TENTH: The Purchaser agrees before production of the first motion picture photoplay to be made pursuant hereto to submit to the seller the manuscript intended to be used as a basis of or from which there may be adapted said motion picture photoplay for such comment, advice, suggestions or criticisms that the seller may wish to make with respect thereto and to afford the seller the opportunity of discussing with the scenarist of said motion picture the manuscript thereof and the Purchaser agrees it will use its best endeavors to accept such advice, suggestions and criticism that the Seller may make in so far as it may, in the judgment of the Purchaser, consistently do so.

Now if you will read again the last four lines of that quoted contract clause, it will probably be agreed, without resort to costly counsel, that Paramount wrote itself into a position to do as it jolly well might like about how the picture was made and what was in it.

Of course, once again the motion picture industry, has failed to avail itself of sage advice. Last week, modestly approaching through another writer and publication, Mr. Walter Winchell and The Daily Mirror, I suggested that the whole matter be simplified by dropping the Dreiser by-line and changing the title to "Did She Fall or Was She Pushed?" That is really what the story is about anyway—and I submit it is better box office.

True Bills Voted Against Four Other Officials

State Senator Who Championed Bill Requiring Two Men in Booth Also Is Indicted

True bills voted Wednesday and indictments charging conspiracy to commit five illegal acts were returned Thursday by the Cook County grand jury against Tom Maloy and four other union officials, Joe Maloy, brother of Tom and head of City Picture Operators, licensing department, and Jack Miller, president of the Exhibitors' Association of Chicago. Bonds of $10,000 on each count were set, and criminal court hearings will begin in early August. Conviction on any one of the five counts carries a penitentiary sentence of one to five years. Union officers named besides Maloy are: Tom Reynolds, president; Ralph O'Hara, operators' union organizer and business agent of the theatrical janitors' union and Maloy's bodyguard; Frank Clifford, Maloy's assistant business agent, and Emmett Quinn, union steward.

Indictments against union officials specify five counts: conspiracy to obtain money under false pretenses, to do illegal acts injurious to public trade, to violate city ordinances governing licensing of picture operators, to do illegal acts injurious to property of others, and to commit a felony. The latter charge refers to slugging and shooting of Milton Krueger, owner of the Hinsdale theatre, 18 months ago in the Paramount Exchange here after he had discharged one operator and attempted to work in the booth himself to save money, which would save him from closing. Krueger held a union card at the time. The charge referring to violation of city ordinances covers alleged collusion between union officers and Joe Maloy, who, in the city office, is alleged to have licensed unqualified applicants for operators' permits. Joe Maloy also faces this charge and an additional one of malfeasance in office. The charge against Miller is compelling payment of money to settle labor disputes. Evidence indicates Miller paid to the union more than $65,000 collected from exhibitors.

Miller's statement says no compulsion entered into any deals he had with the union as the exhibitors' representative. He says he is an employee of the exhibitors and only carries out their instructions. The charges imply, according to Assistant States Attorney Charles Bellows, that Miller acted in collusion with the union. Maloy's statement charges a plot to suppress union labor, but State's Attorney John Swanson answered that it was an effort to help union labor by ridding their organization of racketeer and hoodlum control and said a vice-president of the American Federation of Labor was and is still engaged in his (Swanson's) office. Indictments were kept secret on instructions from grand jurors last night, but when re-

"ADAPTABILITY" PRINCIPAL FACTOR IN SELECTING BOX OFFICE STORIES

High Pressure Salesmen Are Ruled Out

Novels and Plays Today Must Pass Through Many Hands Before Being Purchased

Producers today are extending themselves in an effort to minimize the gamble in the purchase of box office novels and plays.

One of the first steps taken by producers to make story selection more nearly foolproof has been the elimination of high-pressure salesmen among the authors' and publishers' representatives.

Today one primary factor stands uppermost in influencing the buying of suitable screen material.

The word "suitable" is used judicially, for box office performance, after all, is the one factor that can determine the quality of story, cast, direction, photography, general production technique, etc.

However, the primary factor, to put it concisely, is "adaptability."

In this producers concur. It is a study of "adaptability," they say, which today is making the purchase of screen material more foolproof than in the earlier days of the motion picture.

Producers today are endeavoring to place the buying of stories and plays upon a scientific basis—not literally so, mind you. And it is this so-called "scientific" principle, which has eliminated the possibility of high pressure salesmen pawning off mediocre literary material on the producer, and eventually on the exhibitor.

Best Sellers

(Note: Through the courtesy of Baker & Taylor the 10 "Best Sellers" also will be published monthly.)

May 18 to June 16

1. Father, by "Elizabeth."
2. The Road Back, by Erich M. Remarque.
3. Call Her Savage, by Tiffany Thayer.
4. The Good Earth, by Pearl S. Buck.
5. The Midnight Mail, by Henry Holt.
6. Years of Grace, by Margaret A. Barnes.
7. The Windmill on the Dune, by Mary E. Waller.
8. Ships of Youth, by Maud Diver.
9. Cupboard Love, by Nancy Hoyt.
10. Heart's Garrison, by Diana Patrick.

Originals Lead

Less than half of the pictures for 1931-32 will be adaptations of novels and plays, the preponderance of the list being original stories. Following is the number of novels and plays which each company will transfer to the screen:

Plays		Novels
9	Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer	5
2	Columbia	5
10	Warner-First National	8
12	Paramount-Publix	14
7	RKO Radio	4
3	United Artists	5
8	Universal	7
8	Fox	13
3	Sono Art-World Wide	1

Each company has its own method of story selection, but in every case the plan is similar.

In Paramount, a story or play must first pass muster with a home office cabinet of five—Richard Rowland, N. A. Doran, Russell Holman, A. M. Botsford and Maude K. Miller.

Rowland, head of the old Metro company and later general manager of First National, is conversant with production, distribution and exhibition (having operated theatres in Pennsylvania); Doran of the publishing family, and a student of literary values, contacts the authors and publishers; Russell Holman, advertising manager of Paramount and author, has a keen sense of story values; Botsford, advertising manager of Publix, studies stories from the exhibition standpoint; and Miss Miller of the production department, like Doran, studies story values with an eye to picture production.

When a story is presented to Doran, perhaps in galley form, it is sent to a reader in the production department to be synopsized. Members of the cabinet of five study it individually, with production technique, cast, direction and box office in mind. If the majority favors the yarn, B. P. Schulberg in Hollywood is contacted.

"But," replies Schulberg (this might be the conversation), "Arlen is all booked up. Anyway, we have two other stories similar to that."

Unless it is an exceptional story, that long distance conversation probably will put finish on the deal. Another story on the shelf.

"Columbia," says Joe Brandt, president, "makes a thorough reading of any story which looks likely as screen material. The East determines type value, while in the hands of the Coast executives is the actual buying."

Further, Brandt pointed out, Columbia goes to the exhibitors and to managers with a questionnaire to determine the type of picture which the public wants.

Both Paramount and Columbia executives say that under the present day procedure of buying screen material there is little chance of high-powered author and publisher representatives pawning off unsuitable material on the studios.

In this connection, Florence Browning, assistant to, and speaking for, J. Robert Rubin, vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, said that it was practically impossible for a literary agent to "put over" a story not suitable for picture production.

The East and the West offices, she said, work in close harmony constantly, and neither will buy a story without the confirmation of the other.

"We never buy a story," she explained, "until we know definitely that it can be made into a picture. We can't be rushed into a buy today until we know what we can do. If another company wants a novel or play, let them have it.

"If in the East here we have a story in mind we send it to Mr. Mayer and Mr. Thalberg, and they discuss its possibilities with associate producers, directors and others. All are called upon to make suggestions for treatment. If, after these conferences, a story does not seem adaptable we don't buy it, that's all."

Miss Browning, as did Holman, pointed out that stories are not purchased as "best sellers," for often times they are added to the libraries in manuscript form. If they become "best sellers" that is an added advantage. But even as such they may not go over 26,000 in retail sales, which, as Holman says, is insignificant as compared with theatre attendance.

There really is no set sales quota for "best sellers." Ten thousand, says Francis Ludlow, editor of The Retail Bookseller, a Baker & Taylor publication, may constitute a good sale, whereas two or three books a year may go as high as 100,000. During the course of 12 months, he says, not more than 75 books can be rated as really "best sellers."

Ludlow called attention to the fact that many of the "best sellers" establish that record in the first month after publication. Others, he pointed out, build in popularity in the second and third months, especially those books authored by unknown writers.

In this connection, Miss Browning said that number of sales was used only in determining the price to be paid for a story, but that it had little or no influence on the actual purchase.

And now it is the author's representative's turn to talk.

Talking is Leland Hayward, vice-president of the American Play Company:

Hayward finds objection, in some instances, to the policies of the companies in story consideration. One error, he finds, is that there is no one in New York with definite authority to buy.

Judging a novel or play from the synopsis, he says, is another thing that is wrong.

"I would put in charge of the story department," he continued, "a person who is worth, and gets, a lot of money—someone whom the executives would have confidence in. I wouldn't want them to send me synopses. The situation will never be cleared until they stop reading synopses.

"The process is like going through the neck of a bottle. One hundred to 150 synopses will go to the Coast in one package. Imagine a man like Mr. Thalberg, who has the production of several pictures on his mind, trying to go through such an assortment."

Hayward finds, he says, that too often the producers won't buy a new type of story until it has proven good; and likewise many won't consider a story until they have read the reviews, then they all want it.

"It is stupid," he said, "to buy a 'best seller' just because it is a 'best seller.' If it proves to be one so much the better."

Hayward said that it is a poor policy to resort to high-pressure salesmanship in selling stories, for should a story sold by such methods prove poor screen material it would work to the detriment of the agent's reputation.

Buying suitable screen material is not foolproof, those in charge of this phase of production admit, but each day they are experimenting in effort to minimize the gamble. The gamble, however, will never be completely eliminated, they point out, because of the human equation.

SMALL THEATRES MAY CONVERT RCA PACT

By Signing Rider Exhibitors May Obtain Two-Year Optional Service Contract

The smaller exhibitors who purchased RCA Photophone equipment at the outset when the 10-year service contract was in effect, may now convert this agreement into the two-year optional contract, according to information obtained at M.P.T.O.A. headquarters.

It was observed at the exhibitor offices that "while a definite cut in service charges is not obtained, yet it must be remembered that RCA service runs only two years and it is reasonable to assume that when a new contract is negotiated that the then prevailing price will prevail in the renewal. That price is $32.50 per month per one service per month."

President M. A. Lightman of M.P.T.O.A. said that in his discussion with E. O. Heyl, the new general sales manager of RCA Photophone, he found the RCA executive's attitude fair, and there was displayed a willingness to cooperate with the exhibitors.

When the action of RCA was called to the attention of Erpi by a MOTION PICTURE HERALD representative, an executive said that Erpi was not considering deviating from its 10-year contract.

Seattle Has One-Third Less First Run Seats Than Jan. 1

Seattle has one-third less first run seats now than at January 1, according to a survey. Then there were approximately 15,000 seats in seven downtown first runs, Fox West Coast having 8,350 in three houses; RKO Orpheum with 2,650 and 4,000 in independent theatres.

Today there are 4,750 in Fox West Coast's two houses; the same 2,650 for RKO and 3,000 in independent houses. There is no indication of an early opening of dark houses.

New Admission Tax Measures Up In Florida Extra Session

Featured in the second extra session of the Florida legislature was a proposed tax on "luxuries," which included a theatre admission tax of five cents on admissions up to 25 cents, 10 cents on prices over 25 cents and up to $1 and 10 per cent on all over $1.

The purpose of the extra session was to enact revenue-raising measures. Beside the House bill, a Senate measure would place a 10 per cent tax on all theatre admissions over 25 cents.

Fox West Coast Selling Houses Found Not Paying

Fifty to 75 Fox West Coast houses will be sold within a few months and several will be closed, under a plan of disposing of theatres which are not paying, says The Hollywood Herald. The Westlake in Los Angeles closed Saturday and the Egyptian in Hollywood Wednesday.

New Quigley Enterprise

"The Hollywood Herald"

Martin Quigley, of Quigley Publications, New York, Chicago and Hollywood, announces an addition to the powerful chain of American film trade journals under his control. This is the Hollywood Herald, with offices at Pacific States Life Building, Hollywood, where Wm. A. Johnston, well known to American and British readers of the Quigley journals, is installed as editor of the new paper, with Leo Meehan, who is appointed its general manager.

Thus the Quigley group is now predominant in every field. Its Motion Picture Herald (weekly) has a certified circulation of over 18,000; Motion Picture Daily is equally strong; the Motion Picture Almanac is established as the principal year book of the industry; Better Theatres is unique as a monthly study of cinema progress throughout the world — and now comes the Hollywood Herald, a daily studio centre publication, to complete the group.

In its expansion plan, Tobis expects to open 16 Europa theatres in Boston, Washington, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Minneapolis, Newark, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Jersey City, Buffalo and New Orleans.

Tobis Theatre Corporation now operates houses showing foreign talkers in New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore.

$1,000,000 On Independent Product According to Mannon

Alfred T. Mannon, returning to the Coast from New York, said $1,000,000 will be spent on independent production on the Tec-Art lot.

He believes production curtailment by major companies gives the independents the greatest chance they have ever had.

Maloys Indicted With Jack Miller In Chicago Inquiry

ports of the action leaked out regardless, Assistant State's Attorney Bellows confirmed the information.

Bellows characterized the case as one of the most vicious he had ever prosecuted. He said efforts to intimidate, terrify and harm witnesses, and to bribe officials were numerous and flagrant during the investigation.

Independent exhibitors who freely testified before the grand jury were jubilant over the indictments and believe elimination of the second man in the booth and reduction of the allegedly oppressive wage scale is not far off, which will permit reopening of many theatres here and prevent closing of many others. Aaron Saperstein, president of Allied Theatres, Illinois, who has been furnished a bodyguard since the early stages of the investigation, stated there was no quarrel with union labor, but only a request for the elimination of superfluous permit men and greedy, oppressive officials. Late grand jury evidence showed union cards signed by Reynolds issued to Louis Bader, the alias used by Leo Brothers, convicted of the murder of Jake Lingle, Tribune gangland reporter, last summer. Other evidence showed Reynolds received $8,500 annually from Electrical Research Products, besides a salary of $5,000 annually from the union. Quinn also received $150.50 for every sound apparatus installed in Chicago. The jury was told that the union books closed 14 years ago, and since then only permit men taken, who return 10 per cent of their salaries as dues. All of it could not be accounted for on the union books, however, the jury was informed.

Investigation of the murder of Jacob Kaufman, insurgent operator killed just prior to testifying before the grand jury, is now being pressed, according to the state's attorney, as is the investigation of circuit theatres suspected of aiding in enforcing union edicts to work hardship on small theatres.

Complete records and files of both Publix-B. & K. and the Exhibitors' Association had been seized by a raiding party from the state's attorney's office. The records taken dated back to 1926. Walter Immerman, district manager of Publix, and Barney Balaban, secretary of Publix-Balaban & Katz, were summoned before the grand jury to answer questions as to whether the operators' union was accorded support of any kind by circuits.

State Senator Daniel Serritella also has been indicted. Serritella, a Capone ally, championed the two operators' bill which was defeated in the Illinois legislature last month.

Academy Group to Aid in Answering Industry's Foes

Members of the Academy committee on public relations and college affairs, headed by Lawrence Grant, chairman, pledged themselves to aid the Hays organization in answering attacks on the industry, after they were addressed at a dinner at Grant's home in Hollywood by Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the MPPDA.

a victor over adversity

MR. GEORGE EASTMAN, through the making of film, is one of the fathers of this motion picture industry. Most all the luck he ever had was bad, and all the breaks he ever got were against him. Perhaps that is why he has built one of the world's greatest industrial institutions and fortunes beyond the dreams of any dreamer about "luck and breaks." He spent his first winter in the business making a stock of plates for the summer trade, and in the spring the plates all went bad. He started over, ruined—if he had known it. His product never has been "good enough." Improvements have come year by year, sometimes day by day. And he has eternally kept selling. Everybody in the world knows about Eastman and Kodak. He told them. And he is still telling them.

the world is not coming to an end

Despite the attitude and avowals of the Committee on Gloom, Quigley Publications announce with confidence that there are a number of excellent reasons for anticipating the continued existence of the world, and, incidentally, the amusement business, for a sufficiently long period to justify resumption and continuance of activity.

There are ample evidences that there is business to be done, and that it is being done, by aggressive business men in live communities. It is axiomatic, basic and beyond argument that when anything can be sold amusement can. As long as it lives the human race will have its fun. The history of every period of depression and stringency proves that amusement is a necessity, not a luxury. The motion picture has risen to dominance because it is the best amusement buy in the world. Good pictures can be made and good pictures can be sold—but neither process is automatic. They do not just happen. Somebody has to attend to the business.

Business is being done, all over the country. Merely thumbing over just one paper today, one finds: that the Wisconsin Industrial Commission reports employment gains of 7% for February of this year over January, 5% for March over February, and 3% for April over March; that down in one little tank town of 1200 population in Oklahoma some $50,000 worth of farming machinery has been sold in sixty days; that Baltimore is all steamed up and spending $37,000,000 on municipal public works, right now; that Seattle out in Washington is all set to entertain 500,000 tourists between now and October 1, and that the lowest estimate admitted up there is that those visitors will spend $11,000,000. It's like that all over the country, but it's the busy businesses that are advertising, selling and getting the money. The customers are buying what they want—but you have to make them want it.

UNREST HAS SMALL EFFECT ON STOCK

Film Shares Move Only Slightly In Market Upset by European Crisis; Quiet Buying Indicated

By THE ANALYST

International complications overshadowed all other developments on the security markets during the past week and, in the confusing affair that the stock market turned out to be, motion picture shares gave ground reluctantly; so reluctantly as to indicate more quiet accumulation of film stocks was going on whenever leaders of the group dipped a point or so.

Just who are picking up their favorites in the film group on minor reactions is problematical, but Wall Street is inclined to the belief that a lot of the unspectacular buying of motion picture stocks in recent weeks has come from none other than the industry itself, possibly the "Buy Right—But Buy Now" campaign striking a speculative chord in some quarters. At any rate, and from whatever source, support has been evident in leading film stocks, as a comparison of declines in these issues with setbacks in other stock groups in recent reactionary sessions will indicate.

In view of the Central European crisis, which submerged all other speculative influences, the news budget of the week regarding the picture business naturally had no effect on film shares marketwise. Elimination of any prospect of a Fox-Loew merger by a supplemental decree issued in Federal Court was the highlight, but found no reflection in stocks of either of the companies concerned. Both dipped with the general market, Loew's rather sharply, selling off from a high of 46 to a low of 41¼, from which there was a recovery of about two points.

Although showing a considerable reduction from the corresponding period of 1930, Paramount's estimate of its net for the second quarter of this year more than covered the dividend of 65 cents quarterly, indicating the management's foresight in reducing the annual rate from $4 to $2.50 at the last directors' meeting. The estimate of $2,225,000 net for the second quarter was equal to 70 cents a share, while the estimated net of $5,740,000 for the first half is equal to $1.82 a share. These figures compare with net of $3,606,000, or $1.21 a share, in the second quarter of 1930, and $8,440,000, or $2.98 a share, in the first six months of last year. Paramount sold off about two points on the week.

RKO and Warners performed very favorably during the week, reacting to the extent of only about a point each in the general unsettlement. Eastman Kodak, with characteristically wide price movements, slid off from the week's high of 149¾ to about 139, while minor recessions took place in General Theatres, Consolidated Film and Pathe shares.

Universal Pictures first preferred made one of its infrequent appearances on the tape, coming out at almost four points above the previous closing level. The company early in the week reported a net profit of $255,784 for the quarter ended May 2. In the quarter ended January 31 Universal reported a net of $90,432. The balance sheet made a favorable showing, revealing net working capital as of May 2, amounting to $6,915,777, compared with $6,281,446 as of November 1, 1930.

Trading in film stocks on the Curb Exchange was lethargic and price movements confined to a narrow range, while, in a sensationally weak bond market, motion picture issues gave a good account of themselves. Loew's Paramount Famous Lasky 6s and Pathe 7s scored net gains, while minor losses were recorded in others of the group, with exception of General Theatres 6s, which sold off about three points.

Starting Time Important

A. M. Botsford of Publix is urging a concentrated effort on the part of all managers toward acquainting the public of the starting time of features at the various houses. Plans are now being worked out, it is understood, for a drive over the entire Publix circuit with a view to educating the public to attending the theatre at certain times. It is pointed out that people would never walk into a legitimate play at the third act and wait until later to see the first and second, yet that is precisely the situation in the picture theatre, which cannot give the patron maximum enjoyment.

Advertising Campaign Will Usher In Paramount's Jubilee

With a newspaper advertising campaign calling for a total linage of 380,400 lines in a selected list of 317 papers in 147 cities of the United States, Paramount Pictures will inaugurate its "20th Birthday Jubilee Celebration" next month.

The first advertisement will be run in connection with the general release of "The Smiling Lieutenant," Maurice Chevalier's latest, under direction of Ernst Lubitsch. Each of the newspaper ads calls for 1,200 line space.

YEAR NO. 4. An informal new study of Tay Garnett, who is beginning his fourth year as one of our leading directors.

SILHOUETTE. A new portrait that interprets the deep emotional quality, as well as the dark beauty, of Mary Astor, Radio featured player.

AN ARMFUL OF TRIBUTE. To her own and another's success. Into arms laden with flowers just given Marlene Dietrich upon her arrival in London during the Paramount star's recent trip, came this youthful "Charlie Chaplin," to greet her at the station.

AGE 8. Merely months, however, mark the career thus far of Carol Laemmle Bergerman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Bergerman and granddaughter of Carl Laemmle.

AGE 5. Years this time. Another fetching mite born within promising distance of the film world—Edithe Tolen, niece of E. J. Mannix, M-G-M executive.

AT HOME. On the grounds of their spacious California residence —Wallace Beery, M-G-M star and for many years a brilliant screen name, and Mrs. Beery.

ON HONEYMOON LANE. Really what you might call a title episode in the V & D production of practically that very name—"Honeymoon Lane"—starring Eddie Dowling. Here, probably looking for the proverbial turning, is Dowling himself, and Ray Dooley.

EXOTIC. And therefore a bit different than the Anita Page, M-G-M featured player, that you have been used to admiring.

YIDDISH STAR SIGNED. Ludwig Satz (center), noted Jewish comedian, as Nathan Hirsh (left) and Maurice Kleinerman, independent producers, signed him in New York for a series of Yiddish and also English talking pictures, the first of which, "Love Crazy," is scheduled for an early Broadway showing. Standing is Sidney Goldin.

VISITING THE TALLEST BUILDING. And even its model tops them! James Dunne and Sally Eilers, who is opposite him in Fox's "Bad Girl," beside the model of the Empire State Building in New York that stands in its lobby.

250 Free Shorts Offered Small Exhibitors by U. S. Department

Wide Range of Subjects Available from Federal Service—Only Cost Is in Transportation

More than 250 short pictures, running from one to three reels, and prepared by the office of motion pictures of the extension service of the Department of Agriculture, are listed in a pamphlet just issued by the department. There are no rental charges; the only cost to the borrower is the expense of transportation.

These educational pictures, which deal with important lines of activity of the department and related institutions, are available to the public at large. The department announces that normally it has sufficient prints to meet all requests, but that at present it is unable to supply all calls from unofficial sources, though "loans are made to farmers' organizations, schools, colleges, churches, theatres and other agencies or persons wishing to borrow films, whenever copies of the desired pictures are available."

Among the classifications of subject matter covered in the reels are these: domestic animals; wild animals and birds; crops, crop diseases and insect pests; country life; engineering; farm management; federal regulation (food inspection, miscellaneous inspection services); forestry; insects; marketing (handling products); meteorology; rural organization.

Applications for the films should be addressed to the Office of Motion Pictures, Extension Service, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., and the department suggests that they preferably should go through the local county agricultural agent.

Following are samples of the type of films available to the small exhibitor as well as others:

BEEF CATTLE

Sir Loin of T-Bone Ranch (Bureau of Animal Industry). 3 reels—2,544 feet.

Western range-cattle industry, with special reference to production of good beef; hints on selecting meat; stirring range scenes, with cowboy sports and a tincture of romance. Of general interest to consumer and producer.

The Green Barrier (Bureau of Animal Industry). 2 reels—1,964 feet.

A story of cattle grazing in the "Piney Woods" areas of the South, emphasizing the evils of firing the woods to "green up" the pastures, and the importance of carpet grass and Lespedeza as forage for the cattle and as fire barriers. Of general interest.

She's Wild (Forest Service). 1 reel—964 feet.

Cowboys on the western cattle ranges; with "broncho busting," roping and tying, and other exhibition of horsemanship and range, prowess at a cowboy gathering. Indian dances. Of general interest.

The Beefsteak Bequest (Bureau of Animal Industry). 1 reel—836 feet.

The story of the Sni-a-Bar ranch and the results of experiments conducted to determine the benefits to be derived through the use of purebred sires in beef-cattle production.

FOREST FIRE PREVENTION

Trees of Righteousness (Forest Service). 3 reels—3,057 feet.

A story picture which shows the evil of "woods burning," particularly in the Ozark region. The efforts of a mountain preacher to convince his flock that woods burning ruins the woods pasture and eventually destroys the forest. Of general interest.

Forest Fire! (Forest Service). 1 reel—994 feet.

Outlines the system followed by the Forest Service in locating and fighting forest fires. Includes some spectacular fire scenes made during the fire season.

Friends of Man (Forest Service). 4 reels—3,843 feet.

Story pictures designed to discourage the practice of "burning off." Includes spectacular scenes of forest fires.

Censorship Tilt In Australia is Nearing Climax

The Australian industry is protesting strongly against agitation to bring about complete abolition of the censorship appeal board, and to invest full censorship authority in the censor board under chairmanship of Cresswell O'Reilly.

Those behind the move advance economic arguments in its favor, but elimination of the appeal board would take away the industry's only safety valve, which, as figures prove, is highly essential. Out of 54 features rejected by the board last year, 18 were saved on appeal, and more with cuts.

If distributors are denied this right of appeal, the censors will become an absolute dictatorship, in the event of which unfortunate positions are expected to arise.

British Columbia Revises Regulations

Regulations under the motion pictures act of British Columbia, passed in November, 1929, were revoked by the provincial government yesterday and a new set of regulations passed governing many points in connection with censorship and inspection of films, and the operation of theatres.

One change concerns the exhibiting of films or parts of films refused approval by the provincial censor, but authorized on appeal to the appeal board. In all cases where this has taken place the film must bear the stamp, showing the right to exhibit on appeal.

Regulations provide for a scale of fees for sound and silent pictures, ranging from $3 per 1,000 ft. to $2 per 1,000 ft. for sound, and $1.50 per 1,000 ft. for silents, and trailers with proportionate costs for footages under 1,000 ft. Other types of films and slides are covered by fees for inspection at $5 per 1,000 ft. and proportion costs for lesser footages, with slides at the rate of 10 cents each, over a flat-rate minimum.

Licenses for theatres are set at $300 for the full-time theatre with large equipment, down to $50 for a limited license.

Building English Circuit For "American Interests"

It is understood that two brothers, David and Philip Lannon, known in London investment circles, are planning a new circuit of theatres, presumably for interests in the United States.

Negotiations are being handled through Paget Guarantee Corporation, Ltd., the Lannon firm. It is understood several hundred houses are planned in the circuit. A number of theatres have already been acquired.

Florabel Muir writes for Hollywood Herald

Florabel Muir, most famed and ardently read of Hollywood reporters and writers, is now a daily contributor of THE HOLLYWOOD HERALD, the new Quigley Publications' west coast journal. Her first column appeared Monday.

Miss Muir has had some years of successful and often pungent contact with the motion picture's creative community. Her outgivings in type are marked by a crisp clarity and swift appreciation of the point.

She continues to correspond exclusively for "The Daily News" in New York, the newspaper with the world's greatest daily circulation. She will on occasion contribute articles on motion pictures and production trends to MOTION PICTURE HERALD.

Upswing Certain Declares Freuler, Urging "Buy Now"

The motion picture industry, last to feel the depression, will be "among the first to benefit by an early return to normal prosperity," says John R. Freuler, head of Big 4 Corporation and now on the Coast.

"All leaders of industry have recognized that the great American public is suffering from a bad case of 'nerves' and have realized that as soon as a sedative were administered this buyers' deadlock would be at an end. The sedative has come in the form of concerted action from Washington."

Of the "Buy Right—But Buy Now" campaign, he said:

"The stand of the Quigley Publications is a timely and needful attitude—and one the industry will best profit by through placing contracts for present and future needs as promptly as possible, thus hastening a long-overdue recovery."

World Photographers to Meet in Dresden August 3

The Eighth International Congress of Photography will open at Dresden August 3 and close August 8, with motion pictures occupying an important place in the discussions in two of the four sections of the convention. On the final day of the meeting the delegates will visit the sound studios of Ufa at Neubabelsberg.

Walter Clark of Eastman Kodak Company at Rochester is general secretary of the permanent commission of the International Congresses of Photography.

Sherman, Rivkin to Coast

Joe Rivkin, of Educational-Tiffany, and Al Sherman, New York Telegraph, leave New York for Hollywood on August 1, traveling by plane.

THE ROSE

by any other NAME

SMELLS JUST AS SWEET!

and that goes for LIMBURGER TOO!

BUT—

THE NAME BEHIND THE PRODUCT IN PICTURE BUSINESS is the deciding factor in ticket-buying today!

LET'S FOLLOW THE PUBLIC —and see what makes them favor one theatre in preference to another—(turn here please)

OH, SEE THE MONEY!

Why is it going mostly to one box-office?

BECAUSE THAT EXHIBITOR HAS WON THE CONFIDENCE OF THE PUBLIC—

But how did he win their confidence?

HE SHOWS THE OUTSTANDING HITS AT HIS THEATRE!

That's the best reason in the world for the public to show preference for his theatre, isn't it?

HERE'S WHAT HAPPENED IN THE PAST YEAR!

For the first time in the history of motion pictures ONE COMPANY completely dominated the screen— and your public knows it!

"Great picture that 'Secret Six'—who made it?"

"Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer."

"I certainly enjoyed 'Min and Bill'—whose was it?"

"Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer."

"Joan Crawford in 'Paid' was a peach—who produced it?"

"Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer."

"That Garbo woman slayed me in 'Inspiration'—who made it?"

"Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer."

"I screamed at 'Reducing'—what company did it?"

"Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer."

" 'Trader Horn' is the best film I ever saw —whose is it?"

"Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer."

(THIS COULD GO ON FOREVER— AND IT DOES, on the next page thank you!)

ALL IN ONE SEASON, TOO!

"'Dance Fools Dance' was a swell Joan Crawford hit—who made it?"

"Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer."

"Joan Crawford in 'Laughing Sinners' —some show—whose is it?"

"Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer."

"Whoever made 'Strangers May Kiss,' Norma Shearer's picture, deserves plenty of credit."

"It was Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer."

"Norma Shearer in 'A Free Soul' is her best yet! Whose is it?"

"Of course!"

"I'm keen for Bob Montgomery!— 'Shipmates' was swell! Who made it?"

"Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer."

"And Dressler-Moran in 'Politics'— Adolphe Menjou—Irene Dunne in 'The Great Lover' and more coming! They're all M-G-M hits!"

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER HAS WON THE CONFIDENCE OF ALL PICTURE PATRONS—

Cash in on that good-will in 1931-32!

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURES GIVE YOUR THEATRE PREFERENCE OVER ALL COMPETITION!

That's an advantage that no smart showman can afford to overlook!

"BUT," says Mister Exhibitor, "how do I know that the amazing quality of M-G-M product will continue during 1931-32?"

(That's a tough question—but you'll agree we've answered it in the following pages—)

Depinet Sells All Fox Circuit Houses

Ned E. Depinet, vice-president and general sales manager of RKO-Pathe, announces the closing of a deal whereby the 1931-32 output of RKO will be played by all Fox circuit theatres in the United States. The deal was made by Depinet and J. J. Sullivan, film buyer for Fox.

Under terms of the contract all RKO-Pathe product, including features, shorts and newsreel, will go into every theatre of the several hundred included in the Fox circuit.

Owner of Fight Films Faces Court Action, if He Is Found

Federal prosecutors will take action against the owners of the Stribling-Schmeling fight pictures which were siezed at the New York Central theatre, if they are able to locate the owners. The charge would be interstate transportation of fight films, and they were seized on alleged copyright infringement.

If the owner is not located the action against the Central will be dropped, and the theatre will sue Gramercy Pictures, Inc., which caused the seizure, for damages.

Television Studio On Empire State

Television studios and laboratories are to be established atop the Empire State Building, New York, by National Broadcasting Company, application having been made to the Federal Radio Commission for experimental licenses for special equipment to be installed on the 85th floor, the studios and laboratories to occupy the east half of the floor, while a television antenna will be placed at the top of the building's mooring mast, 1250 feet above the street.

Slight Increase Shown In Past Seven Days

Eleven in Cutting Room, 33 in Production and Five Starting—Independents Are Active

Production for the coming week in Hollywood studios shows a slight increase over the past seven days, but the total number of pictures in production is approximately one-fourth less than for last year at this time. This week 11 pictures finished shooting, 33 are in production and five are starting during the week.

Fox started four on shooting schedules this week: "Riders of the Purple Sage," George O'Brien starring; "Sob Sister," with Al Santell directing, and Sally Eilers and James Dunn featured. Dunn and Miss Eilers are being considered for starring spots and have made their debut together in a "Bad Girl." Dunn immediately won a name for himself in this production. Raoul Walsh has started work on "The Yellow Ticket" and will have Lionel Barrymore and Elissi Landi in the leading roles. "She Wanted a Millionaire," with Joan Bennett and Spencer Tracy, is the other talker shooting.

M-G-M also has four pictures shooting at this time: "The Guardsman," with Lunt and Fontanne starred; "Boarding School," which Harry Pollard is directing with an all-star cast; "West of Broadway," the John Gilbert starring picture, and "Hell Divers," Navy air picture which, half completed, is to be made into a super-special. Wallace Beery, Clarke Gable and Marjorie Rambeau have the leads and from reports from the cutting room this picture is going to be of the sensational order.

On the United Artists lot Howard Hughes is shooting "Age for Love," with Billie Dove starred and Frank Lloyd directing; "Scarface" has Howard Hawks directing, and Paul Muni and Karen Morley in the leads. Roland West's production, "Corsair," said to be Chester Morris' best screen story to date, is about half finished. "Street Scene," nearing completion under the direction of King Vidor, is being given a most unusual treatment as far as camera work is concerned.

Universal, with four talkers shooting, is going full blast. Nearing completion are "Heaven On Earth," starring Lew Ayres; "Battling with Buffalo Bill," under the direction of Henry MacRae; "Strictly Dishonorable," with Paul Lukas featured and John M. Stahl directing. "The Deadline" also is winding up this week. Christy Cabanne is directing this picture with Regis Toomey in the lead.

Paramount has three pictures shooting. "24 Hours" has Clive Brook, Kay Francis and Miriam Hopkins in the leads, Marion Gering directing. "The Road to Reno," which Richard Wallace is directing, is said to be one of the most unusual types of pic-

PLAN 2,000 HOUSES WITH 10¢ ADMISSION

Rear End Projection to Be Used—Ample Finances Behind Project, Say Those Knowing of Plans

If those "in the know" are right, the 10 cent theatre will be a reality within a short time.

Under this new plan it is understood that 2,000 houses can operate.

It is said that a plan of rear projection for these houses has been submitted. This plan of operation will have no connection with Trans-Lux, which is now operating 25 cent newsreel and short subject houses in New York.

Behind this new project, it is said, is ample money. The company will be in a position to make its own shorts, and when feature attractions are required these will be obtained from producers with whom an understanding has been reached.

Although such a chain has been proposed for several years, this is the first indication that it may become a reality. All preliminary steps have been taken, it is said on good authority, and all that remains is the announcement.

Ten cent houses will be opened first in the key centers, with the chain expanding into the medium sized towns.

Films Held First Need of Britain

American to British producers, would have sounded better did it not convey the bitter truth that there have not been enough good British films available to independent exhibitors on reasonable terms, to prevent any of that ten million pounds a year getting across the Atlantic.

That does not mean that Britain has made no films. But it is useless to expect a showman to book a British-made picture comparable to the most ordinary American program feature, as though it were a world shaking super. Patriotism does not go that deep. If Major Gale intended—as it appeared—to utter a threat that the C.E.A. would try to coax its members to book British in preference to American pictures, he might have saved his breath. Entertainment will win the day against all odds any time. Even when the British industry has found its Will Hays, and learned to accommodate itself to a dictatorship, there will be no means available whereby to extract that ten millions from the theatre-going public without giving them entertainment.

The Major makes the mistake of assuming that if that ten millions of pounds had not gone to America, it might have drifted into the coffers of the British film industry. Not at all. It might have been spent on lollypops instead.

Out of the Major's conference speech—a real fighting one—a mild resolution has gone forward to the General Council of the Cinematograph Exhibitors' Association asking them to draft terms of a plan under which independent exhibitors will be able to enjoy the benefits of collective film booking.

They will want their Will Hays man first, because the renters on this side already have set their faces against the principle of collective trading, and at the first sign of opposition the present leaders of the C.E.A. will see their pet interests at stake and will have to face definite intimidation.

One-Fourth Fewer Films Shooting Than Last Year

tures Paramount has made. "Rich Man's Folly," the George Bancroft talker, is the other picture in production.

RKO-Pathe in Culver City is another studio with three pictures in the making. "Alias Mrs. Halifax," with Ann Harding starred, is nearing completion. "Eddie Cuts In," the Quillan talker, starts shooting again after two weeks delay due to illness of the star. "The Sundown Trail" is the other.

RKO-Radio has two in production, "Are These Our Children" and "Consolation Marriage," the former a Wesley Ruggles production, while Paul Sloane is directing the latter. Tiffany is shooting two also, "Morals for Women" and "Range Law." Columbia has one set of cameras turning on "Hell Broke Loose," with George Seitz directing.

At Tec-Art, M. H. Hoffman, Jr., is making "The Hard Hombre" with Hoot Gibson starred and Otto Brower directing. There are also several others shooting for independent release.

"MORALS FOR WOMEN"

By A. P. YOUNGER

With

BESSIE LOVE, CONWAY TEARLE, Emma Dunn, Natalie Moorehead, David Rollins, Edmund Breese, June Clyde, Otis Harlan, Lina Basquette, Crawford Kent, Virginia Lee Corbin, Directed by Gene Lewis.

A startling insight to the code of a kept woman! A provocative theme to excite the curiosity of the whole movie-going public.

"LEFT OVER LADIES"

By URSULA PARROTT

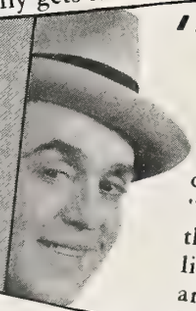
One of America's best selling authors—who gave us "Ex-Wife" and "Strangers May Kiss"—has again scored with the story of a type of woman for whom the world sells its soul. An ideal subject for exploitation in the press; a topic which naturally gets itself talked about.

X MARKS THE SPOT

By FLORENCE RYERSON

A great newspaper finds itself embroiled in the solution of a crime. The snap of editors' commands, the feverish tempo of scoops, the glib chatter of reporters and the hectic pace of the Big Town, furnishe the tempo of this exciting melodrama!

"RACE TRACK"



LEO CARRILLO

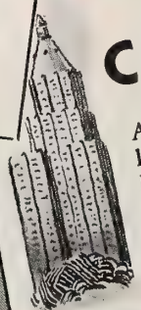
The new screen idol can be expected to duplicate his phenomenal success of "Hell Bound" in this smashing story of the intrigues of big gamblers and millionaire racing patrons. A new, fresh angle, behind the scenes of the sports of Kings. A Cruze Special.

"STRANGERS OF THE EVENING"

By FLORENCE WAGNER

Adapted by Robert Lee. Who are these strange, ominous figures that move silently through the night? And what are the relations of this mysterious group to the lone woman who swayed their destinies? An underworld story with a fresh flavor of human interest for jaded film fans.

"HOTEL CONTINENTAL"



All the basic passions of human nature—loves, conflicts and dreams, seething around like bees in a hive—motivate this moving story of a group of strangers who suddenly find their lives entwined in a magnificent, European hotel. Scheduled for a lavish production.

Featuring

ALICE WHITE, AILEEN PRINGLE, HALE HAMILTON,
Leslie Fenton, Robert Elliot, Brandon Hurst, Clara Blandick, Richard Tucker, William Humphries. Directed by Frank Strayer.

A mystery story, climaxed by an incredible surprise wherein an innocent parlor game develops into an ingenious crime.

THE "LAST MILE"

A CRUZE SPECIAL

No play in recent years inspired such superlative press reviews, such wide-spread comment and public interest as this tremendous drama by John Wexley which had a sensational run on Broadway. Produced by Herman Shumlin, producer of "Grand Hotel", and directed by Chester Erskine, genius of the Theatre Guild.

"LUXURY GIRLS"

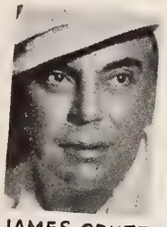
By MAYSIE GRIEG

Adapted by Olga Printzlau, from the novel, "Satin Straps", and which ran serially in the Hearst publications. Breezy with high and low life in Paris, with the bars let down. Romance running wild in the Latin Quarter. A marvellous exploitation opportunity for exhibitors.

"THOSE WE LOVE"

A CRUZE SPECIAL

From the Broadway stage hit at the John Golden Theatre, by George Abbott. Mellow and warm with a deep humanity and the conflict between a seductive flapper and a woman passing her prime, in a love duel for the latter's husband.



JAMES CRUZE

"GOSSIP"

A fresh, original story showing how the bottom drops out of a famous surgeon's world, through the wagging of poisoned tongues. A tale of human frailties, soul searing drama, and final regeneration through the new found love of a woman who challenged the whole world for her lover.

Sidelights of the Convention

Only one managerial change has taken place in Educational's Eastern sales ranks during recent years. C. B. Flarity was promoted from Albany salesman to Philadelphia manager.

The new Educational season creates an unusual situation in the picture business. For the first time on record, short subject sales managers at key city exchanges have entire charge of a branch in which features play a very important part. Every Educational branch manager is boss over feature salesmen and managers selling Tiffany and World Wide product.

Joe Rivkin and Bob Doidge worked with Gordon (publicity-ad chief) White to prepare that snappy eight-page exploitation broadside on the new Rivkin Terry-Toon Club movement which is intended as a kiddie business booster.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager, was absent from the convention because of illness. "Kirk" narrowly missed contracting pneumonia.

Harvey Day, home office representative, very effectively portrayed the master of ceremonies' post. Particularly that phase of things which centered around "Room 452" at the Hotel Astor.

At the opening session on Monday MOTION PICTURE DAILY scooped the town with first—and only—copies of a trade publication to reach the visiting conventioneers.

Business of Educational, Tiffany and World Wide units was discussed at the same meet. And President E. W. Hammons gave it that personal touch by arranging for a long conference table over which new season's activities were discussed. Major companies usually stage their sales meets in a more or less formal manner, minus the round-table effect which Hammons accomplished.

It took a long time to whip into shape a full Tiffany feature program, the delay being due, chiefly, to a complete reorganization of personnel and policies under the new banner.

Grant L. Cook was conspicuously absent. The Tiffany chief last week turned over physical operation to Bill Saal but a company announcement stated that he would continue as ambassador de finances. Can it be that—oh, well!

Budd Rogers, feature sales chief, was slightly handicapped while delivering a piece of fiery oratory on new product. He has a sore hand.

A sigh of relief followed Hammons' "coats off" order. And a sigh of embarrassment was heard from Burt Kelly, "E. W.'s" executive assistant who suddenly found himself the center of a healthy razzing when he displayed a pair of passionate red suspenders. You know the kind.

Tiffany's top-notch executive lineup made a strong bid for prominence at the confab with L. A. Young and Bill Saal leading that contingent.

Tiffany Board to Name Policies of Young's Company

An executive committee, composed of L. A. Young, sole owner of Tiffany Productions, Inc., Grant L. Cook and William Saal, who recently left Paramount to become Tiffany general manager, will determine the policies of Tiffany, which under the new Tiffany-Educational agreement, remains as a separate production unit.

Educational has the power to approve stories planned by Tiffany for production, though there will be, say the executives, no Educational representative at the Tiffany West Coast studios, which remain under the executive charge of Phil Goldstone.

Educational, from whom Tiffany has borrowed the necessary funds to plan and execute its production schedule, will, by contract, handle the sales and physical distribution of all Tiffany product, subject to the sales contract approval of William Saal as general manager of Tiffany. This contract will be in force for a specified period of time. The money which Tiffany borrowed will, according to Tiffany executives, be repaid within a certain time.

Educational, it is pointed out, has no other direct financial interest in, or supervision over, Tiffany production policies, which will be solely in the hands of the committee of three. The Tiffany board of directors will include Young, Cook, Saal and a Detroit banker. H. William Fitelson, formerly with Tiffany, will remain as executive and general attorney under the new arrangement.

Saal, as active general manager, will have supervision of all Tiffany product sales, and will, following the sales conventions in Chicago and Denver, make a tour of all exchanges over the country, for the purpose of strengthening the sales forces where he finds it necessary.

It is emphasized that Educational and Earle W. Hammons, president, has no control over Tiffany as a separate company, other than as the party from whom Tiffany borrowed money and as distributing agent for Tiffany product, in which capacity Educational is entitled to a percentage of the gross realized by Tiffany.

Confer On Franchises

Dave Bershon, Harold Robb and Ed Rowley are in New York conferring with Gradwell L. Sears, Western general sales manager for Warners, on First National franchises for the Hughes-Franklin theatres in Texas.

Monogram Completes Feature

W. Ray Johnston, president of Monogram Pictures, in New York, announced the completion of "Mother and Son," melodrama featuring Clara Kimball Young. Harry Fraser will produce "The Montana Kid."

Marin With Schulberg

Ned Marin, formerly with First National and Fox in sales capacities, and recently appointed Paramount associate producer, has joined B. P. Schulberg at the Coast plant.

Educational Opens Meetings; Tiffany Plans 30 Features

E. W. Hammons, president, this week launched the 1931-32 season for Educational-Tiffany-World Wide at the first of three regional conventions, held in New York, where home office executives declared that:

Tiffany's new lineup will embrace 30 features and 38 shorts, 12 features being scheduled for Class "A" houses.

Educational's list of shorts, previously announced, will be augmented by a new series of six Bill Cunningham "Sports Reviews," produced by Howard Brown and Curtis F. Nagel.

Salaries in the combined companies will not be reduced.

Effective advertising is an antidote for the depression.

New staff of exploiteers will be created.

A move is planned to have bookers and managers work more closely with exhibitors in matching shorts properly to the feature.

More action will be included in shorts, cutting down dialogue.

The Terry-Toon Club will highlight exploitation efforts of the season in building up children's attendance.

Hammons, Burt Kelly, Stanley Hatch, Budd Rogers, Gordon White, Joe Rivkin and various producers' representatives addressed the gathering.

The Chicago meeting started Thursday and the Denver session opens July 20.

Educational will release the Kinograms sponsored reel news series to be made in conjunction with a tieup with Allied States Association. The initial release is set for August 28.

The Tiffany features set for 1931-32 include:

"The Last Mile," a play; "Women Go on Forever," featuring Clara Kimball Young; "Morals for Women," by A. P. Younger, featuring Bessie Love and Conway Tearle; "Left Over Ladies," by Ursula Parrott; "X Marks the Spot," by Florence Ryerson; "Race Track," with Leo Carrillo; "The Monster Kills," by Scott Darling, featuring Alice White, Aileen Pringle and Hale Hamilton; "Strangers of the Evening," by Florence Wagner; "Hotel Continental"; "Luxury Girls," by Maysie Grieg, adapted by Olga Printzlau from "Satin Straps"; 'Those We Love," by George Abbott, and to be released as a Cruze "special"; and "Gossip."

The short features will include six Tiffany Chimp comedies; 26 of the Voice of Hollywood series, and a new sports series called "Football for Fans," in which Howard Jones, football coach, will set forth a series of football problems.

H. Katz Adds Territory

Harry Katz has taken over the jurisdiction of Publix houses in Illinois and Indiana, formerly under Arthur Mayer, who adds Utah and Idaho to the territory of which he is division director.

Take Fight To City

Omaha neighborhood exhibitors and the projectionists' union have taken their fight over regulations governing the suburban houses relative to projection to a committee of the city council.

U. S. PREVENTS ANY FOX-LOEW MERGER

Surprise Move Indicates Authorities Not Satisfied With Arrangement Made in April

The Government reached out unexpectedly this week and definitely thrust out of the realm of possibilities any contemplated merger of Fox and Loew's, Inc.

Indicating that the authorities were not satisfied with the arrangement made last April when Film Securities Corporation was formed to control Loew's stock, a supplemental decree was issued by Federal Judge Knox directing the Chase Securities Corporation, Fox banker, to divest itself of all voting stock in Film Securities Corporation.

The decree provided that the Fox interests must further divest themselves of control of Loew stock by transferring the Film Securities stock to three disinterested trustees, who were named by the court as Thomas W. Gregory, former attorney general of the United States, John R. Hazel, a former federal judge in Buffalo, and T. Nelson Perkins, a Boston lawyer.

In view of the fact that the Government had withdrawn its anti-trust lawsuit against Fox when the Loew stock was turned over to the newly formed Film Securities Corporation in April, the move came as a surprise in financial and motion picture circles, but readily was ascribed to the fact that following the Fox refinancing program, in which they played a prominent part, the Chase interests became heavily represented on the Fox board. Thus, with Chase Securities controlling Film Securities Corporation, control of the disputed Loew stock was still heavily tied up with Fox interests—too heavily, apparently, to the Government's liking.

While no comment was available from any of the interested parties, it was indicated that both Fox and the Chase interests were acquiescent to the action, indications being that, to all intents and purposes, revenues derived from the Loew holdings will flow into the channels provided for in the April deal.

The decree, which deprives the Chase interests from any voting interest in the Loew or M-G-M properties, was a result of a notice by Fox Film Corporation to the Government reporting the new board of directors elected at the recent annual meeting, a board dominated by the Chase interests.

Under the terms of the decree, the trustees shall act as officers of the court only and in no wise as representative of the Fox companies or their banking affiliates. The decree provides further that Chase Securities Corporation and Film Securities Corporation shall be subject to all injunctions and restraints previously imposed upon the Fox interests in the earlier decree.

Litigation of one kind or another has dogged the trail of the Fox interests ever since they acquired the disputed 660,900 shares of controlling stock in Loew's in February, 1929. In November of that year the Government filed suit against the company to set aside the Loew stock purchase, alleging the deal reduced competition.

Hal Horne Heads New Service Unit Of United Artists

A "new exhibitors' service department, designed to back up each United Artists picture with a campaign in every theatre in which it is shown," is announced by Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution.

"Lichtman has placed at the head of this department Hal Horne, whose years as an exhibitor and showman equip him with a thorough grasp of the needs of the exhibitors of the country," says the announcement. "Ten field men will have headquarters in the principal key cities of the country to execute these campaigns. Not only will they cooperate with theatre owners, but they will also arm the entire crew of United Artists salesmen with similar material with which to aid exhibitors in every town and city of the country. In fact, the time is not far distant when every salesman will be an integral part of this showmanship force."

"I don't mean to imply," Lichtman explains, "that individual theatremen are not competent to put over their pictures; my theory is that a man, having 52 or more pictures a year to sell, cannot give to every one the time and preparation which we, who have only a few pictures a year, can give. Just as every other national service aids its dealers, so will this department provide every showmanship assistance."

Cooperation In Production Seen By Carl Milliken

Carl E. Milliken, secretary of the M.P.P.D.A., returned from the Coast where he addressed the convention of the National Education Association, noted the sympathetic interest manifested by directors and others concerned with film protection.

His address to the educational body concerned the value in films from the educational standpoint and the opportunities that lie before teachers to tie in with the educational movement for the best possible pictures.

The cooperation which Miliken emphasized as dominant on the Coast among production people, he noted as reflecting the highest possible production values, in line with the standards self-imposed by the industry. "The machinery of cooperation between the organization and individual studios is functioning with ever greater momentum," the secretary declared. "Executives in the industry everywhere realize that good business and good public policy go hand in hand in the development of motion picture entertainment."

40 Schools Join in Teacher Training For Film Showing

Forty schools on the Coast are cooperating in a four-weeks' course in the educational talking picture, launched at the summer session of Teachers' College by the University of California through the trail-blazing work of Marvin L. Darsie, Ph.D., dean of the Teachers' College, and Dean Watkins, director of the summer session. The summer session started July 8.

Dr. M. L. Darsie

Pat Campbell, heading the western division of the educational department of Electrical Research Products, Inc., is cooperating, with L. P. Corbett of the educational research department of the company supervising the course, as a member of the summer course faculty.

Five objectives being sought in the teacher training course are to acquaint teachers with the value of the talking picture in the classroom, to outline not only available material but sources of material, to instruct teachers in the mechanics of the classroom machinery and its operation, to show them the proper care of films, including storage and repair, and to teach effective utilization of talking pictures in classroom work, including coordination with the local curriculum and establishment of units of work.

A primary difficulty encountered, according to Dr. Darsie, is the attitude of the student that he is being provided with an entertainment rather than a subject of serious study.

Universal Names Nine Fall Releases

Universal's first nine productions for release in the three months starting with August were announced by Carl Laemmle on his arrival in New York to see the first of the new pictures before sailing for Europe, probably Friday.

August releases will include "Mother's Millions" and Clarence Darrow's evolution feature, "The Mystery of Life," now playing at the Cameo in New York.

In September will come four pictures. First is Robert E. Sherwood's "Waterloo Bridge," directed by James Whale and featuring Mae Clarke, new contract player, Kent Douglass and Enid Bennett. Second will be "East of Borneo," directed by George Melford and featuring Rose Hobart and Charles Bickford. Next comes "Strictly Dishonorable," with John Stahl directing Paul Lukas, Sidney Fox and Lewis Stone. The fourth is Lew Ayres' "Heaven on Earth," directed by Russell Mack.

October releases include "Lasca of the Rio Grande," featuring Leo Carrillo and directed by Edward Laemmle; "The Spirit of Notre Dame," with the Four Horsemen, Frank Carideo and football coaches of Notre Dame, starring Lew Ayres and directed by Russell Mack; and "The Homicide Squad."

Bad Girl

(Fox)

Flashing Winner

Fox has a flashing winner in "Bad Girl" and in James Dunn, Winfield Sheehan's New York discovery, a young man of stellar proportions. This pulsing best-seller story of rough young love groping its blind way to parenthood has been handled throughout with hearty realism but with such cleanliness that it should serve forever as a lesson to all producers that box-office pictures strictly within the Code are matters of viewpoint and picture treatment.

A trick opening, which is seemingly a beautifully appointed wedding but in reality a troupe of shop girl models on parade, launches Dorothy Haley (Sally Eilers), wise little waif of the tenements, upon her tempestuous career in the big city. As she battles with her wits and tongue the marauding male species a flow of wise-cracking begins which never falters throughout the picture.

Dorothy meets Eddie Collins on a Coney Island boat and is attracted to the one boy who didn't try to "make her." Eddie, in the words of Dorothy's devoted girl friend, Edna (Minna Gombell), is with all his faults "a swell guy" fighting his way up the ladder, obsessed by the ambition to rise above the lot of his poverty-stricken, children-ridden parents. When the two youngsters marry and start their life's struggle for better surroundings each believes the other does not want the little one that is coming into their workaday lives. Here the theme of the play is held uppermost, but the picture goes far afield to intensify and support its plot. To get the famous doctor his worrying wife begs for, Eddie goes into the fight ring to help earn the physician's fee.

The scene in the doctor's office is the most moving one among the many heart appealing scenes of the picture.

There is plenty of humor from Edna, Eddie and the by characters, especially in the hospital scenes.

The conclusion, well sustained, finds the new family going home to happiness.

Honors go to Frank Borzage for a finely sustained balance of laughter and tears that makes a record, and to Edwin Burke for the running fire of smart-cracking dialogue. Sally Eilers does her best work, teaming right along with Dunn, and Minna Gombell registers to the mark. With pictures like this—and Fox has others—the hue of the fall box-office grows rosier.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Frank Borzage. Novel by Vina Delmar. Continuity and dialogue by Edwin Burke. Photographed by Chester Lyons. Sound Engineer, G. P. Costello. Art Director, William Darling. Film Editor, Margaret Clancy. Release date, Sept. 13, 1931.

Sporting Blood

(MGM)

Comedy-Drama

When preview audiences stamp their feet, whistle and yell, it would seem that pictures are getting back to the good old days of movies that move people. That was the unusual greeting "Sporting Blood" got at a Glendale house. "Skippy" is the only other picture that brought such applause there.

How people do love these salt-of-the-earth pictures about dogs and horses and their ennobling effect upon human beings! "Sporting Blood" has a really big story. Hunt Stromberg decided so and then convinced Charles Brabin, who, with Harold Rosson, has filmed a picture that will be loved and cheered and wept over till it takes a top-notch place in this season's record.

Clark Gable and Madge Evans will receive well-deserved plaudits; so will Ernest Torrence, Lew Cody and Marie Prevost. But this delighted reviewer takes off his hat to the sterling work of John Larkin, who carried little Tommy Boy from a mud puddle on to his spell-binding Derby finish.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Based on the novel, "Horseflesh" by Frederick Hazlitt Brennan. Directed by Charles Brabin. Adaptation by Willard Mack and Wanda Tuchock. Cameraman, Harold Rosson.

Hell Bent for Frisco

(Sono Art-World Wide)

Drama

One of Sono Art's "Thrill-O-Drama" series, in which a young Los Angeles reporter, played by Charles Delaney, digs in and discovers the identity of the man who had mysteriously murdered his best friend, brother of the girl in whom he had developed a decided interest.

Much footage and many sequences are devoted to the portrayal of the racketeer business as well as the newspaper's inside workings, both done in acceptable style, comment indicated.

Vera Reynolds plays the girl, William Desmond, of older days, takes the role of editor, and freckled Wesley Barry, occupies a minor part as a newsboy. Vera Reynold's brother is shot while engaged in an automobile race, the reason being the fear on the part of his sister's sweetheart that the boy would find out too much about the particular racket in which the fiancee was engaged if he were allowed to work for him.

Delaney, the reporter, goes to work on the case in his newspaper capacity, and before long, reveals the fiance as the man behind the murder of his friend. As a newspaperman he succeeds in scooping every paper in town, and as a personable friend of the dead boy, he succeeds equally well in capturing the hand of the sister.

Produced by George W. Weeks. Distributed by Sono Art-World Wide. Directed by Stuart Paton. Story by Arthur Hoerl. Edited by Carl Himm. Cameraman, Jules Cronsager. Recorded by Earl N. Crane. Release date, July 10, 1931. Running time, 65 minutes.

Women Go On Forever

(Tiffany)

Drama

"Women Go On Forever," newest James Cruze production, proved to be a fair vehicle for Clara Kimball Young, and received an approving reception at its preview showing at the Boulevard theatre, on the Coast, judging from the reaction of the less than full house of patrons.

The story portrays a cross-section of life in a modest boarding house dominated and ruled by the manager, played by Miss Young. In it are seen the heartaches, the melodramatic, the comic situations of every-day life, vividly enacted by a large cast of players.

The performance of Miss Young was appreciatively received and likewise that of Marion Nixon, Paul Page, Maurice Black and Thomas Jackson, the habitual detective, came in for a good share of praise.

The picture deals with the romance between Miss Nixon, a boarder in the rooming house conducted by Miss Young, and Paul Page, a taxi driver. The plot becomes involved when Page is framed by a racketeer and sent up to jail in order that the villain might get the girl. Two fatal shootings give a realistic touch to the story. The ending is happy, however, even for the house manager, whose philosophy of life is constructed on the fact that, regardless of its seamy and sordid aspects, life goes on the same and that tomorrow is another day.

The direction of Walter Lang was accepted with approval.

This is the story of Stephanie Dale (Constance Bennett) and her longing for the things commonly associated with wealth, the little luxuries, the atmosphere of good breeding, the contacts with brilliant people. That circumstances had denied her of these things only makes her determination stronger to achieve them.

On her eighteenth birthday, she learns that her parents were never married, that her mother left her father before Stephanie was born because she could no longer endure his coarseness and bad manners. Stephanie sees in her mother's confession an explanation for her inherent desire for refined surroundings.

Her mother dies and Stephanie becomes a model that she may wear nice clothes. She does not go the whoopee route for parties and pals hold no interest for her. Books are her major divertissement until she meets a budding young novelist (Ben Lyon) and finds in him a delightful companion. She divides her time between this chap and an older man, one Myer (Richard Bennett), the rich owner of a chain of gown shops. Myer's obviously common ancestry repulses her yet in his love of music and literature, he exhibits a self-taught culture. We are allowed to suspect his interest in Stephanie is really paternal.

Through Myer, Stephanie meets the kind of people she has always wanted to know. Wined and dined in palatial homes she is deliriously happy for the first time in her life. Thinking she is experiencing her dreams come true, she forsakes her old friends and accepts the proposal of a wealthy playboy even though she knows she doesn't love him. The knowledge she has sold herself finally brings her to earth.

She begins to realize money cannot buy intellect. So she deliverately smashes the romance by telling her fiance of her parentage and returns to her former life.

She remembers the kindnesses of Myer and calls him up. Learning that he is ill, she goes to visit him. In his eyes, she reads the truth. The picture closes with Stephanie's dramatic discovery of her father.

As this synopsis might suggest, "Bought" has considerable plot structure. The preview audience was definitely enthusiastic. Comments were heard specifically mentioning the intelligence with which the adult theme was presented and praising the work of Director Archie Mayo and everyone else concerned.

Particularly highly regarded was the performance of Constance Bennett in an exacting role. A number of people expressed themselves as believing this her best screen portrayal.

Connie's father, Richard Bennett, playing her screen father in "Bought," was heartily applauded. Ben Lyon and Raymond Milland also won audience approval.

Keepers of Youth

(British International)

Drama of School Life

(By London Bureau of the HERALD*)*

This one breaks new ground in British pictures. Directed by one of the "old-stagers," Thomas Bentley, who also made "Young Woodley," it has its moments though the theme is likely to arouse hostility among the conservative minded. It will also make British educationalists generally, feel that they have been slandered. However, it is entertainment. Story tells of an "ultra-respectable" public school (B.I.P. try to get away with it here by subtitling that there " ain't no such place" in this country) whose headmaster is being blackmailed by a bullving games master, while all the other tutors are either dunderheads or peeping toms.

Then arrives a fresh young master, who quickly challenges the bully. At the same time there arrives a young assistant matron. Bullying games master tries to seduce her; young master who has fallen in love with her, tries to protect her. Result: young hero caught by headmaster in the young matron's room.

Inquiries lead to incrimination of the games master but the head does not expose him because of the blackmail cinch.

Meantime one of the schoolboys is expelled for so lowering the respectability of the school as to visit a cinema with a young village girl! It's a nasty knock for those people who regard the old scholastic institutions of England or anywhere else for that matter, as citadels of unassailable morality and virtue. Though if these particular "keepers of youth" were typical of all schoolmasters, heaven help youth.

Bentley has brought the best out of his cast. Robin Irvine as the young master, makes a terrific come-back in this picture, after being all but out since talkies. Ann Todd, as the young matron is a find sure enough although not endowed with all the "Ziegfeld" qualities. Garry Marsh ought to be told right away that he looks wicked enough without piling it on. He is a good brute type with acting ability, but is apt to overcolor his characterizations. Less stagey, he might walk away with almost any picture if given a strong meat part.

Bentley has taken a tilt at Americanese, though if shown in the States the full force of his satire will probably be lost. In the scene where the truant school kid is shown sitting in the cinema with his village girl, the spectator joins in the actual talkie show, which consists of a pretty raw Western. Broad American idiom produced roars of laughter at the London pre-release run. Altogether the film which is far from shattering, presents certain aspects of freshness which should commend it both sides of the Atlantic.

Produced and distributed by British International. Directed by Thomas Bentley. Story by Arnold Ridley. Adaptation by Bentley with Walter Mycroft and Frank Launder. Running time, 71 minutes.

Die Lustigen Weiber von Wien

(The Merry Wives of Vienna)

(Super Films)

Farce Comedy, Music

Judging purely from the technical standpoint, Germany has outdistanced England, another of the few sources of foreign pictures in the United States, in the matter of screen production.

"The Merry Wives of Vienna," labeled a film operetta but in reality more of a comedy with incidental music, is evidence of this when one compares recent importations from both countries.

Photography of the opus is clearly defined, and the dialogue audible. Geza von Bolvary, in his direction, continues the excellent work which was displayed in "Two Hearts in Waltz Time."

The attraction is in German dialogue, and judging from the response on the part of the audience at the American premiere at the Little Carnegie theatre in New York, it is an uproarious comedy. Leo Brecher presented the picture in New York, with the first night audience being comprised primarily of Americans of Teuton extraction.

"The Merry Wives of Vienna" concerns an under-official of the crown, a ballet master, sweethearts of the two, and the 10 daughters of the crown official.

The farcical episodes revolve around the efforts of the charming daughters to thwart the marriage of their father, efforts which estrange the ballet master and his sweetheart.

Finally a scheme is conceived whereby the fiancee of the father is palmed off on the under-official's superior, and all ends happily.

Produced by Super Films. Distributed by Capital Film Exchange. Director, Geza von Bolvary. Music by Robert Stolz. Scenario by Walter Reich. Running time, 95 minutes. Release date, July 9.

Transatlantic

(Fox)

Drama

William K. Howard has turned an improbable, though interesting, story into a fascinating picture and made a likeable, almost convincing Edmund Lowe out of an unlikeable hero.

Expert direction, remarkable camera work by James Howe and a distinguished name cast combine to make this box-office.

From the moment Monty Greer (Edmund Lowe) sneaks aboard the smart luxurious transatlantic liner until a London bobby takes him in tow at the voyage's end, events happen with a fast, furious, glittering tempo against a background that will make women particularly, but most any adult, long to take a big boat trip to Europe.

The running duel up and down the steel galleries of the lofty engine room is a breathless sequence of action photography. Monte pits his sharp wits against Handsome (Earle Foxe) and the trio of gamblers, Henry Sedley, Louis Natheaux and Bob (not M-G-M) Montgomery. His capable hands unravel the life skeins of the banker and his bride, John Halliday and Myrna Loy; the aged lensmaker, Jean Hersholt, and Lois Moran, and even the wicked siren, Greta Nissen. The siren dancer and the banker's wife he has known in his spectacular past; the others he meets with surprising swiftness.

Hudgins (Billy Bevan) affords the comedy relief.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by William K. Howard. Adaptation, dialogue by Guy Bolton. Additional dialogue by Lynn Starling. Cameraman, James Howe. Release date, August 30, 1931.

Sherlock Holmes' Fatal Hour

(First Division)

Mystery

Sherlock Holmes comes to the screen, via the Tickenham Studios of Great Britain, the scene of production and First Division Pictures, distributor in the United States.

The cast is quite unknown in this country, though it is an acknowledged able one, which did a job sufficiently satisfactory to hold an audience at a New York theatre deeply engrossed in the master methods of the inimitable Holmes, in unraveling the truth of the murder of a bank guard and the subsequent murder (or suicide) of an accomplice under compulsion.

Arthur Wontner portrays the immovable and mentally powerful super-sleuth with what was generally conceded to be an admirable touch, making the character live on the screen as the late Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, from two of whose stories this film was adapted, made him live on the printed page. A large cast came in for a good share of the praise accorded the interest-holding film, including Jan Fleming as the stolid, ever-present Dr. Watson; Minnie Raynor as the vociferously solicitous Mrs. Hudson, housekeeper; Leslie Perrins as the young diplomatic agent who becomes involved in the crime; Jane Welsh as his sister and Norman McKinnell as the friend or Perrins, who, Holmes skillfully reveals, is in reality Dr. Moriarty, notorious professor and master mind behind many crimes.

Holmes solves the crime of the bank murder when Scotland Yard fails, and at the same time proves that the young diplomat was murdered, not a suicide. With unquestioned logic and fine deductions, Holmes discovers that the murder was a counterfeit plot, whereby money in the bank vault was exchanged for manufactured money. The young man, who had taken to cheating at cards, was to be used by Moriarty to transport the money to Paris under diplomatic passport under threat of exposure, but had refused at the last moment and had as a result been murdered, with an unusual noiseless weapon.

Adding greatly to the effect of the film, as noted by the close attention of the audience, was the expert use of light thrown sharply into a darkened room in several sequences. Suspicion, during much of the film, points to various of the people involved, with a very clever deception steering away from the guilty party.

Several strange mechanical devices serve their purpose in creating a weird impression.

Produced at Twickenham Studios, England. First Division Pictures, American distribution rights. Adapted from "The Final Problem" and "The Empty House" by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle. Directed by Leslie S. Hiscott. Adaptation by Cyril Twyford. Assistant director and editor, Jack Harris. Photography, Sidney Blythe.

Enemies of the Law

(Capitol)

Gang War

And there were gang wars and rumors of gang wars, though company announcements indicate a lessening of the volume of this kind of production for next season. "Enemies of the Law," seen at the Strand theatre, on Broadway, is a breed of the same strain and was produced by Sherman S. Krellberg for Regal Pictures, with Lawrence C. Windom directing.

This picture brings back the familiar role of the girl (Operative 99) in the Secret Service who falls in love with the handsome gang leader. And the finale runs true to the course of the "shock" pictures with the mortally-wounded gangster tumbling down the stairs to die in the arms of the girl, while the rival, Big Tony, the criminal out of the West who but for obvious physical dissimilarity might have been intended for Al Capone, grunts his last in the arms of the law. The third of the gang chiefs already has been picked off in a nickel-in-the-slot dancehall.

While the program billing headlines Mary Nolan and Lou Tellegen, Johnny Walker crowds Tellegen for such honors as there are in the story.

Florence Vinton or Operative 99 (Mary Nolan) gets a job as entertainer in the night club of Larry Marsh (Johnny Walker) and from the start tries to persuade him to quit the life of crime, to which he replies that it can't be done whatever his wishes in the matter. Eddie Swan (Lou Tellegen) plots to doublecross Larry and one of the first acts of the plotted series is the bumping off of Joey Regan (Danny Hardin) whom Larry is sending through school in order to give him a clearer idea of life. Then follows a warehouse raid with complications which involve a "muscling in" by Big Tony and the shooting of a policeman. Larry is on the trail of Eddie, who is portrayed in the double role of a suave gentleman of the world and a raving demon who spouts limitless foreign oaths when he is crossed. Larry personally attends to Blackie, who took off Joey, the schoolboy, and his henchmen "get" Eddie Swan.

Tony goes to Larry's night club, decides that Florence is to be his "moll" henceforth, and so lets himself in for the big trap. Her plans go awry while Larry is waiting upstairs with "The Big Shot" (John Dunsmuir), and Larry and Tony shoot it out, with results partly satisfactory to each, and obviously to the censors, as both die.

Comedy is inserted in the picture by a lavish use of ejaculations of "Yeah" in sundry shadings and by "Booker T," colored assistant played by Doe Doe Green, in a role in which the makers of the production permit him to know all the inner secrets of the Eddie Swan ring.

Running time is 69 minutes, release date July 21, 1931.

Produced and distributed by Regal Pictures. Cameraman, Frank Zukor. Film editor, Russell Sheilds. Sound Engineers, Bob Oshman and John Dolan, RCA recording. Dialogue, continuity and story by Charles Reed Jones.

Guilty Hands

(MGM)

Drama

This original from the pen of Bayard Veiller was accorded a most favorable reception by an audience at a Santa Monica, California, house. Heartily applauded was the work of Lionel Barrymore, who not only assisted in the direction of the film, but as the featured player, was the dominant figure in a good cast, with what was acknowledged to be a superior performance.

The story is concerned with murder and strange retaliation. Barrymore's daughter, played by Madge Evans, is engaged to marry Alan Mowbray. When Barrymore discovers that the suitor is not all that he could desire as his daughter's husband, by a long way, he goes to Mowbray's apartment and there kills him.

Kay Francis, Mowbray's mistress, accuses Barrymore of the murder, but the latter describes the shooting to the police as a case of suicide. As the body of the murdered man is being removed from the room, the revolver with which the fatal shot was fired, is fired again by the contraction of the muscles of the dead man's hand and Barrymore is killed.

The audience was literally stunned by the suddenness and unexpectedness of the unusual climax. Performances which seemed to rate most effectively with the audience were given by William Bakewell, Alan Mowbray, C. Aubrey Smith and Henry Barrow, with the general reaction being that W. S. Van Dyke, who carved a nitch for himself with his direction of "Trader Horn," has done a most noteworthy piece of work with this film.

Produced and distributed by M-G-M. Directed by W. S. Van Dyke and Lionel Barrymore. Story and dialogue by Bayard Veiller. Edited by Anne Bauchens. Cameraman, Merritt B. Gerstad.

Susan Lenox

(MGM)

Drama

Having sent Miss Shearer to Europe on a well-earned or much needed vacation following her appearance as a gorgeous lady of dubious morals in "Divorcee," "Strangers May Kiss" and "A Free Soul," M-G-M seems to have continued its "sin and succeed" series with Greta Garbo.

Gorgeously mounted, excellently cast, expertly directed, it, nevertheless, is proof sufficient that in its present form, the Hays code is nothing for producers to worry about or that it is all in fun.

It is understood M-G-M intends doing considerable re-cutting and re-shooting before "Susan Lennox' is released. Under the circumstances, this writer feels it is unfair at this time to more extensively discuss what appears to be "a delicate subject," to say the least.

SHORTS

Bobby Jones No. 6 "How I Play Golf"

(Warner Bros.)

Great!

Use of the big irons on the fairways is the theme of the sixth of the Bobby Jones shorts. This picture not only ranks with its predecessors in general interest but it takes on added importance as a production because of the spectacular shots by the cameraman. The whiz of the ball to the left and right of the "audience," climaxing with a "bullseye" into the camera itself, has much of the effect of third dimension. One of the secrets of the success of the entire series, in addition to the consummate artistry of the golf wizard in handling the clubs, lies in the ease of the handling of dialogue by the champion, and another is the careful handling of the camera work.—Running time, 10 minutes.

Queeriosities No. 10

(Vitaphone)

Fairly Interesting

Among the more interesting items in this issue of the Believe It Or Not series of Robert L. Ripley are the Chinese with the candle in his head, the 25-link chain carved from a parlor match, the Providence Spring, and the 6-year-old cigar smoker who lifts 200 pounds without apparent effort. The series has a huge following through the newspaper cartoons but this issue was not particularly spectacular. The final scene of the picture, which is based on a lecture to sailors aboard a warship, is obviously studio-made.—Running time, 7 minutes.

Battling Silver King

(RKO-Pathe)

Splendid

One of the Grantland Rice Sportlight numbers, and one that is highly interesting and equally packed with action. From the time the boys wake in the morning on the bank of the Florida waters, until they prepare supper that night, we see them fishing for tarpon, big fellows that weigh around 150 pounds, and full of fight. A picture that should put any real fisherman on the edge of his seat, and should give anyone an entertaining bit of action.—Running time, 11 minutes.

The Milky Way

(Vitaphone)

Fairly Amusing

Neely Edwards, a bit out of his usual routine, plays the patient, who goes into sudden recitations against milk, and later day-dreams of putting on a show favoring milk. The routine dancing in the show and the other entertainment, provide little in the way of novelty, but the milk idea is amusing enough.—Running time, 11 minutes.

AD REELS REVIEWED BY INDEPENDENTS

should continue with its original plan to market a Kinograms sponsored ad-newsreel. Educational is to handle the physical distribution.

Abe Heller and William MacKee have already completed the organization of their project, which they describe to be the only independent distributor of sponsored reels —operating through direct tieups with 35 key city exchanges. The latter contact with theatres on collections, sales and servicing the sponsored product. Heller and MacKee already have contracted to market advertising shorts for General Motors, Camel Cigarettes, Porto Rican Tobacco company and Goodyear Rubber. Negotiations with three additional important national accounts now are nearing consummation.

Heller is a veteran in motion picture production work. He was the first cutter for Kinograms newsreel many years ago, after which he engaged in production on the West Coast, returning to New York to join Pathe News as cutter, later going to Pathe's commercial films department, where he took over cutting and general production work. MacKee has been engaged in various phases of advertising over a 20-year period. His most recent affiliation was with the Rankin Agency.

"There is little doubt that major distributors cannot successfully handle sponsored ad reels," Heller stated, "and this because of newspaper and inner organization antagonism toward the subjects, in addition to the fact that national manufacturers now have been educated to a clearer understanding of the motion picture industry, which has brought with it the realization that the average circuit house, most of which are downtown houses, do not bring the message of the advertiser in as close proximity with the local neighborhood store as do the second, third and fourth run neighborhood theatres."

"The advertising message," Heller continued, "still is fresh in the minds of the audience when they leave their neighborhood house and go past the door of local stores.

"The independent field is very much alive. That phase of the exhibition field is beginning where the national companies left off with advertising reels. Several thousand independent theatres are available for the showing of ad reels."

Camel Film in 12,000 Houses

Heller stated that, including many circuit affiliations, a recent test reel handled by Camels played to 12,000 theatres in 39 states.

The independent field, some believe, is in a more advantageous spot to show the sponsored reel than is the circuit house, particularly because the independent has no sales company affiliation which would suffer when it plays sponsored reels to the exclusion of regular short subjects, and secondly because there is little likelihood that the individual independent would suffer much from whatever newspaper antagonism may develop.

Heller returned recently from a nationwide trip during which he studied the reaction of exchanges, theatres and public to sponsored reels. Both exchanges and theatres favor the reels, and contact with the public, he said, proved that they will accept sponsored shorts provided there is no attempt to pass off on them advertising in the form of entertainment. "They do not like to be fooled," he stated.

The plan of Heller and MacKee permits an advertiser or his agency to select any part of the country, state or a city in which to distribute his reel. The client can use as many theatres as are required and in as many towns as are necessary to comply with merchandising plans.

The Heller-MacKee company, known as Advertisers Motion Picture company, with headquarters in New York, is about to launch a second subsidiary which will concentrate on the non-theatrical field. A large group of 35-mm. portable sound devices will be assigned to the 35 exchanges, which in turn will sell lodges, churches, clubs, schools and other institutions on a full program of sponsored reels. Equipment and product will be furnished gratis, with the advertiser paying the exchange for handling it, the Heller-MacKee company receiving a pro rata fee based on attendance at the particular showing.

Playing Rates Fixed

The company will not produce, inviting bids from New York independent production companies who deal directly with the ad agency or manufacturer. Scenarios are furnished either by the advertiser or the Heller-MacKee company, while prints are furnished by the client directly to the new distributing company. No reel runs more than 400 feet, while all product must be recorded by Western Electric or RCA Photophone systems.

Deals have been made by Advertiser M. P. company, with 23 exchanges in as many foreign capitals, this in addition to the 35 domestic exchanges. Rates are based on the number of seats in a theatre, each theatre being considered a separate unit, filling 10½ times weekly average. Charges are as follows:

		Split Week	Full Week
(1)	100 feet	.02½ per seat	.03
	30% excess footage allowed
(2)	200 feet	.02¾ per seat	.03½
	20% excess footage allowed
(3)	300 feet	.03¼ per seat	.04
	15% excess footage allowed
(4)	400 feet	.03¾ per seat	.04½
	10% excess footage allowed

Releases in excess of the average allowed on 1, 2 and 3 will be charged for at the next highest rate.

When the sponsored reel assumed a prominent spot in the industry's structure, less than one year ago, more than 25 companies throughout the country entered the field. The majority are key city laboratories or local producers, and all but two or three have petered out of the picture.

Other Firms Expand

Alexander Film Service of Colorado, continues and at present is in the midst of a nationwide campaign to line up theatres for the few advertising shorts which it produces and distributes.

Theatre Service company, headed by William Johnson, a New Orleans producer, is another New York organization which, aside from a Publix contractual tieup, is understood to be included in the local distributor category, concentrating chiefly in the South.

It is pointed out by insiders that if Paramount and Warners are again forced into the sponsored reel business by the success of independents with these reels, they will work their contracts through outside ad reel distributors, similar to the present Publix setup with Theatre Service, which secures clients, makes the reel and books the group into Publix houses.

The Christie West Coast sponsored reel proposition continues on a somewhat limited scale.

The Kinograms reel starts on August 28, with 2,800 theatres already lined up, while according to Capt. George McLeod Baynes, 4,000 will be on the books of Allied States Association before the initial release. There will be two issues a week. Contracts are on a five-year basis, three years of which are compulsory, and the remaining two cancellable by either party upon a 90-day notice. Each reel will contain only one advertising subject, running about 300 feet. Exhibitors are charged for the subject, according to theatre size, with Allied's state and national treasuries receiving a part of the revenue.

Striving Hard!

Hollywood is on its toes, realizing that the answer to the present problems facing the industry, lies in the production of good pictures, according to Charles C, Pettijohn, general counsel for the Hays organization on his return last week from the Coast. "Production is striving as never before to make good pictures, pleasing to the public and with box office value to the theaatres," he said. "From the heads of studios to the water boys on individual sets, I could not help but sense the most sincere enthusiasm to produce these results. * * * The answer of the motion picture industry to 'depression' must be pictures, good pictures, and I believe we are going to get them."

Charles C. Pettijohn

Equity Is Planning Drive to Stimulate Stage Production

Equity has joined others in the League of New York Theatres, Inc., in an effort to persuade railroads to lower rates to theatrical companies, as a means of stimulating production.

If the appeal to the Trunk Line Association is successful the matter will be taken up with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

Theatre business was spotty during the current week. In many localities there was a strain of optimism with the grosses slightly above the previous week. However, new low grosses continued to be established with the total for the week being 19. In the face of this, there were no new highs, which hardly compensated at this season of the year. Two of New York's largest theatres, the Capitol and the Roxy, showed gains.

Fluffy Darling of Soap Ad Finds Everything Changed by Talkers

Madge Evans Didn't Even Know Where Camera Was When She Returned to the Screen

Mr. Ripley ought to sit down and have a talk with little Madge Evans in Hollywood, for she is certainly a Believe-It-or-Not girl if there ever was one.

For six years she was a motion picture star yet never saw Hollywood until a few months ago. Her film career began as far back as 1917 yet she isn't quite 21 now. She was John Barrymore's lead at the age of 13. She remembers John Gilbert as a script clerk, Josef von Sternberg as a cutter, and Evelyn Brent as Betty Riggs.

Motion pictures have grown up since Madge first toddled on the set of the old World Film Corporation over in Fort Lee, N. J., to play in "Sudden Riches." So has Madge. Like the film industry, there are some things she would like to forget.

For instance:

You surely remember the blue-eyed elf who star-perched upon a snowy bar of soap, gazing appealingly at countless millions of people in subways, trains, street cars, in magazines and on billboards, asking:

"Have You a Little Fairy in Your Home?"

Well—hide Madge's blushes—she was the fluffy darling!

"I also advertised beer!" she moaned weakly.

"But was it—er—good beer?"

"Oh, yes, the very best"—(this somewhat proudly)—"It was Anheuser-Busch beer . . . you remember that? Well, Anita Stewart and I posed for their calendar. She was 16. She posed as my mother. It really was artistic—even if it was for a brewery."

While Madge was telling of playing with John Barrymore in "Peter Ibbetson," a silent picture, she was dabbing makeup on her face to make ready for scenes in "Guilty Hands," a Bayard Veiller mystery drama, in which she is leading woman with Lionel Barrymore. Before that she played with Ramon Novarro in "The Son of India"—the film that marked her return to the screen.

"My early screen training? It's of no value whatever to me now. My stage experience is vastly more useful in reading of lines, understanding of dramatic values and poise. In the days I first remember working in pictures at Fort Lee, everything was primitive compared with what I find now. There isn't one solitary detail left unchanged. Disguised with what they call 'bungalows,' I didn't know where the camera was when I made my first tests with Mr. Novarro."

S.O.S. Corporation Now In Enlarged Quarters

Service-on-Sound Corporation, with J. A. Tannenbaum, Inc., is now established in its enlarged headquarters in suites 607 and 609 at 1600 Broadway. Large sales rooms for out-of-town buyers have been provided. The S.O.S. Corporation also plans to set up a permanent display of both portable and stationary sound and projection equipment.

Report French, German Combine

Reports from Berlin, where M. Cornillon, French financier, is at present, indicate the possibility of a new joint production scheme between France, Germany and possibly England.

The new venture, it is understood, is to be launched in connection with an existing German production and renting firm.

Cinematographers Recommend Eastman Kodak New Fast Film

The American Society of Cinematographers has formally recommended the newly developed Eastman Kodak "super sensitive" and "special" panchromatic negative films to its members.

The society points out a considerable increase in speed, or overall sensitivity in the new film. This is noted as of great commercial benefit to producers, as it permits 40 percent or more reduction in the amount of current consumed in lighting a set.

King and Queen Visit Paramount

King and Queen of Siam visited the New York Paramount studios on Tuesday, marking the first occasion that reigning royalty has ever inspected the plant at Astoria. The monarchs were guests at a special luncheon which the following attended:

Prince Svasti, Princess Svasti, Prince Chirasakti, Prince Ameradat Kridakara, Siamese Minister; Chao Phya Bijayendr, Vipulya Syastikula, Thavara Chayant, Mme. Chayant, Pra Norara, Major Prasobsri, Chirapravati, Luang Siri Sombati, Smaksnian Kridakara, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor, Sam Katz, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Zukor, Mr. and Mrs. E. E. Shauer, Dr. and Mrs. Emanuel Stern, Mrs. Mildred Zukor Loew, Jesse L. Lasky, Emanuel Cohen and George Akerson.

Depinet Appoints Nolan, Thompson Branch Managers

Ray Nolan has been appointed St. Louis branch manager for RKO Pathe, by Ned Depinet, general sales manager. He was formerly at the Kansas City exchange.

T. P. Thompson has been named Kansas City branch manager. He was formerly United Artists branch manager.

Warshawsky Authors Play

"The Woman of Destiny," play by Sam Warshawsky of Radio, will be presented on August 24 at the Wharf theatre, Provincetown, Mass., by Mrs. M. H. Hewes.

Monogram Opens 2 Offices

Monogram Pictures has opened offices in Cleveland and Cincinnati, with Lefton in charge of sales at both branches.

Speaking of Taxes—

Every day should be Thanksgiving Day for motion picture theatres in the United States if their lot regarding taxation is contrasted with that in Europe, says a news writer at Washington, who seems to have as his objective the giving of inside information on taxation to the public. He says that "freedom from oppressive taxation" is one reason for the huge growth of the industry in the United States.

"A motion picture theatre in the United States has to pay its normal real estate taxes to the city in which it is located and the operating company must pay its regular income tax," he writes. "Aside from that there is no direct federal impost. The admission tax imposed during the war on motion picture theatres as well as legitimate theatres and other places of amusement is paid direct by the customer in most cases, and is merely added to the price of the ticket.

"But abroad very heavy taxes are imposed by the general government on the theatre. How great this discrepancy is and how large the advantage the American exhibitor has over the European can be realized from a comparison of taxes paid. The tax on admissions collected by the United States Government amounts to only about $2,500,000 a year. This covers all theatres and other places of amusement in the entire country. Compare this with more than $25,000,000 paid by theatres and other places of amusement in the city of Paris alone. Figures are not segregated to show how much of the American tax comes from the motion picture theatres, but obviously nearly all of it does. About $12,000,000 of the Parisian tax comes from the motion picture houses."

"Bill" Stumpf Dies

William (Bill) E. Stumpf, pioneer exhibitor of Baltimore, who had been secretary of the MPTO of Maryland, since it was organized, died at his home there this week after a lingering illness. Beginning his career as manager and owner of the Goodtime theatre, Stumpf managed many houses in Baltimore, including the old Garden, now Keith's, when it was owned by the Whitehursts and the Fulton. He was managing the Red Wing for the Durkee interests when he was taken ill.

Headline Finishes New Feature

Mortimer D. Sikawitt, president of Headline Pictures, completed "Private Scandal" on the coast this week. Marian Nixon, Lloyd Hughes and Theodore von Eltz are supported by Fletcher Norton and Lucille Powers. Charles Hutchinson directed.

WABASH AVE.

Chicago

A near-derelict in appearance, he applied at the Castle Theatre for a sidewalk barker's job because he believed his "trained voice as a Shakespearean actor was just what the job needed." Al Blasko led the down-and-outer to the New York Costumers in search of something to improve his appearance. Once among the costumes, his mendicant regained a lot of his old stage pride and temperament. He rejected all of Al's suggestions as to what costume would be best adapted for the work in hand, and spent two hours trying on various regalias, and posing and preening before mirrors. He finally selected the uniform of a French general and insisted on keeping it in spite of Blasko's lack of enthusiasm over the choice.

"I know the trouble," exclaimed the new barker. "It's that bum eye of mine." He removed a pair of glasses, and Blasko noticed for the first time that the man's right eye was missing. "I'll have it back on pay day," he reassured Blasko. "It's in hock now, but I sure look fine with that glass eye."

KANE

Named Department Head

Chicago exhibitors are interested in the appointment of William A. Jackson as commissioner of gas and electricity, as the department rules on theatre wiring, decoration and lobby display, and has charge of the projectionists' examinations.

Roach Signs David Rollins; Mary Kornman Loaned to RKO

Hal Roach, M-G-M comedy producer, has signed David Rollins, young juvenile, to appear in one of the new "Boy Friend" comedies. Cast includes Mary Kornman, Mickey Daniels, Gertie Messinger and "Alabam" Sutton.

Mary Kornman, one of the original members of the "Our Gang" comedies, has been loaned to RKO for a role in "Are These Our Children," under direction of Wesley Ruggles.

Few Chicago Film Cases

The more liberal stand toward motion pictures is held responsible for the fact that no motion picture cases have come before the Chicago corporation counsel's office since the new administration in April. Two cases per month was the previous average.

Named District Manager

Tom North, formerly Chicago representative for Van Beuren, has been named central district manager for Talking Picture Epics, succeeding Tom McLaughlin.

Fined For Fight Films

Harry O. Voiler and Harry M. Pollack were fined $25 each in Chicago federal court, when they pleaded guilty to transporting Dempsey-Tunney fight films, interstate.

SHORT FEATURE

Use of Trailer Up to Managers, Reports Survey

The consensus of opinion among circuit managers of a major company, as the result of a survey made to determine the types of trailers best suited to use in the various houses, was to the effect that the trailer is at all times dependent upon the particular local problems involved and is variable at the discretion of the various individual managers.

The general feeling is that managers should regard trailers as merely another form of advertising and as such, should feel they have the right to make such eliminations or changes as they deem necessary. They may even, according to their belief, be at liberty to substitute some other form of advertising for the trailer, if that appears to them necessary by reason of the reaction of their audience to the trailer. It should also be within the power of the manager to insert a trailer in the newsreel if he thinks that method best.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

HERE ARE REPORTS ON A FEW PICtures that I have seen recently:

"Trader Horn," M-G-M—One of the most remarkable pictures we have had the pleasure of seeing in a long time. The acting of Harry Carey is first rate, and took us back to the good old days when we played him in silent Westerns. Who remembers Universal's "Phantom Rider," "The Fox," "Man to Man"?

"Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," Fox—A very first class picture in every respect from start to finish. Though it drags somewhat in a few places it is a scream of a picture, with Will Rogers at his inimitable best.

"Way of All Men," First National—A very good picture in several respects, though in some spots it is made ridiculous because of overacting especially in love scenes between Doug Fairbanks, Jr., and Dorothy Revier. We heard people in the audience laughing at these scenes that were supposed to have been serious.

"Cracked Nuts," RKO—Ideal entertainment for the warm weather, being a comedy full of wise-cracking by Wheeler and Woolsey, with a mythical kingdom yarn for the background.

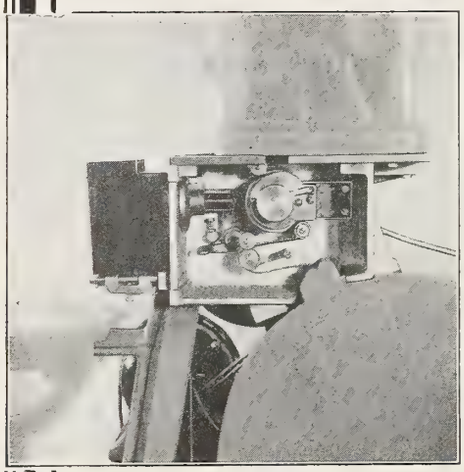
"Sin Ship," RKO—A first class program picture with Louis Wolheim giving his usual good performance in the role of a sea captain. A clever plot, with a somewhat original twist to it, makes it one of the most pleasing program pictures we have seen for some time. Mary Astor is satisfactory as the heroine and Ian Keith is not as convincing as the crook masquerading as the minister to avoid capture.

"Laugh and Get Rich," RKO—A dandy comedy drama from start to finish. Edna May Oliver as usual contributes a first class performance, as does also Hugh Herbert. To our notion this couple makes as good a comedy team, if not better, than Wallace Beery and Marie Dressler.

"Royal Family of Broadway," Paramount—A very good picture of its kind, well acted and produced. However, I don't believe it will go over very strong in the smaller towns, since it is of the sophisticated type of drama.

Short Subjects, Fox Movietone News—We have seen quite a few issues of the Fox Movietone News and while they present some of the leading personalities of the day, they also show a lot of things that are not news; that is, subjects that cannot strictly be classed as news, such as scenes shown aboard yachts of private parties, musical numbers, chorus girls rehearsing, etc. It is all entertaining, of course, but some prefer straight news events in the newsreel, leaving the other subjects to pictorial reviews.—KENNETH W. THOMPSON, Adams, Wis.

SYNCROFILM



for Simplex and Motiograph—both battery and A. C. power-operated

In response to insistent demands Syncrofilm has been engineered to fit the Motiograph as well as the Simplex. Both sound heads may be had with the new A.C. power equipment which eliminates batteries.

Syncrofilm reproduces faithfully in every case for the reason that the projected beam of light is so fine and intensive as to reproduce the higher frequencies—the light projected onto the photo-electric cell being about four times greater than the average optical unit.

Syncrofilm is fully guaranteed, yet not one of the many hundreds of Syncrofilm owners has asked for his money back. Here is positive proof that Syncrofilm gives satisfaction—and remember that a showman's satisfaction comes from the steady flow of dollars his equipment brings to the box office.

Write for prices—they'll agreeably surprise you.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

By F. H. RICHARDSON

BLUEBOOK SCHOOL QUESTION NO. 91—(A) Using Western Electric equipment, explains how you set loops at exactly the correct length or size. (B) Where would you or where did you secure instructions for correct threading of any type of sound projection apparatus? (C) Will a slight error, say one or two sprocket holes, in loop setting set up sufficient error to be noticeable? Follow your own experience in this latter, rather than what the Bluebook says, though I hold the Bluebook to be in fact correct, though perhaps in the light of later experience we might truthfully say one sprocket hole "out" makes no difference. Perhaps not, but just the same I hold any deviation whatsoever from exactly right to make for injury to the effect. Dispute it if you can!

[Two answers will be published in next week's issue]

DICTION AND THE SOUND PROJECTIONIST

George Arliss, an outstanding player on today's screen, recently was awarded a gold medal for perfect diction. This award was made by the Academy of Arts and Letters.

In his speech of acceptance, Mr. Arliss went to considerable pains to describe the procedure employed by the producer to insure perfect reproduction of speech, and then said: "Unfortunately when the picture goes through the country we are in the hands of mechanics who can do to one's voice what the pasteboard photographs can do to one's face."

Mr. Arliss is entirely correct in that statement but thanks be, he used the words, "can do." "Can do" and "do do" are very different things. It is up to you, friend reader, to look yourself in the face and ask this question: Is it "can do" or "do do" in my case?

Mr. Arliss unfortunately might have used the words "do" with regard to many who are projectionists. I have often wondered, and in fact I have been astonished at the fact that through years past, actors have sat in theatres and viewed a shamefully mutilated shadow of themselves and their work without giving voice to any protest whatsoever.

Those days, however, have largely passed. The shadow form of the actor is now almost always put on the screen at least presentably. It no longer is outraged, for example, by having the face cut off by a grotesque smudge of shadows mixed with color. Projection is "not so bad" in most of our present-day theatres. In a large percentage of them it approaches perfection.

Unfortunately the same thing cannot be said for sound. We are now using sound about the same way we used pictures twenty years ago, though I have faith to believe all the "bad points" will be gradually overcome. For the information of Mr. Arliss, and others, be it known that the projectionist is not always to blame for the mistreatment of sound. Often he is compelled to work with equipment in such wretched state of disrepair that he would have to be almost a worker of miracles in order to produce anything more than mediocre results.

Another thing: Be it known to Mr. Arliss that the competent motion picture sound projectionist of today is not merely a "mechanic." He is very much more than that. If he is to produce high grade results in both pictures and sound projection he must certainly have an excellent knowledge of mechanics, since he works with high speed mechanisms laboring under heavy stress, and the mechanisms must be adjusted in thousandths of an inch. Moreover, the mechanisms work under high temperatures. The projectionist must also have a very good knowledge of electrical action, a whole lot of knowledge of optics and a rather wide knowledge of acoustics. Unless he is possessed of all this knowledge he cannot possibly hope to do justice to his work.

I set this forth for the reason that it is distinctly discouraging to men who must be possessed of so wide a range of knowledge to be dubbed "mechanics." They are excellent mechanics, true; also they are very much more than that.

Criticism such as Mr. Arliss set forth is welcomed because it is helpful.

TORONTO VISITS NEW YORK CITY

H. N. Elliott, vice president of Motion Picture Projectionists Local Union No. 173, TATSE & MPMO, Toronto, Ontario, recently visited New York City, shopped around the Great White Way projection rooms, looked at shows to see just how they compared with those of his own city and did other things. He invited us all to visit Toronto where, said he, we might "visit some real projection rooms." In general, Elliott evidenced considerable pardonable pride in the great empire to our north, where men are Canadians and women charming.

I don't blame him either. Were I not a United Statesian I would rather be a Canadian than anything else I can think of, and that's no idle bunch of conversation, either. There are some mighty fine men up there. As for projection, I can myself vouch for the fact that Toronto projectionists give their audiences most excellent value for their money, besides a maximum of safety from both eye strain and fire hazard.

Incidentally, Brother Elliott advises your editor that the article titled "Toronto Men Called Excellent," page 71, June 6 issue of Better Theatres, was warmly approved by the Ontario officials in charge of projection matters.

Well, I wish the licensing authorities of New York City might be induced to read it a few times and really consider the absurdity of an examination which is enabling men to obtain New York City projectionist cards to "operate motion picture apparatus" and declaring them to be "competent" to do so when as a matter of fact they are not, as any really competent examination would quickly reveal.

There are, I have been advised by several high grade projectionists, right now men posing as projectionists in large theatres whom the competent men on shift dare not leave alone. They hold New York City license cards though, and that is a fact which hardly reflects credit upon the City of New York.

There are many men working as licensed motion picture sound projectionists right here in New York City, carrying a card which declares them to be competent, who were examined fifteen or more years ago, without anything in the shape of an examination since. Granting them to have been competent to handle the very simple, crude projection equipment of fifteen years ago, is that any evidence that they are competent to handle the highly sensitive complicated projection equipment of today? It seems to me that to answer that query with a "yes" would be rather nonsensical.

Today the examination merely seeks to determine whether or not the applicant is capable of handling the equipment safely insofar as has to do with fire hazard. But is that all that should be done?

It seems to me, and it seems so to nearly all Canadian officials, as well as to a goodly number of officials of various cities and states in our own country, that the matter should go much further. There is, for example, the safety to eyesight. More and more people are attending motion picture theatres. Certainly if there are certain wrongful procedures in projection there will be eye strain, which cannot but finally end in permanent injury. With correct procedure in projection there is no eyestrain. With imperfect procedure there may be plenty of it. Should not the examination seek to determine whether or not the applicant for license understands such matters? Very many licensed men do not understand them now.

Then, too, the citizens of New York City pay a sum of money into theatre box offices each day. The value received therefor may be high or low, according to expertness in picture and sound projection. Can anyone advance a reasonable argument that, particularly as there must be an examination, the examining board should not seek to determine whether or not the applicant really is competent to put on a creditable show, as well as merely to keep the audience safe from fire? If so, I certainly would like to hear him or her do so. Personally I don't believe it can possibly be done.

Two things are certain. First, a re-examination should be held before any 1932 license card is issued. Second, if that order be issued by the commissioner of water supply, gas and electricity now, projection would, metaphorically speaking, be invisible from now until January first, because of the cloud of dust raised by New York City projectionists industriously "scratching gravel" for further knowledge of motion picture sound projection. It was thus in Ontario. It would be the same here. License cards should be graded into suitable classes, as in Ontario.

YOUR PUBLIC

By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

VACATION time presents a new phase of activity to those of us engaged in building audiences for better pictures. The schools close, and automatically, the new service "School and Screen," established by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, terminates until September. Through the summer months practically all women's clubs, Better Films Councils, Parent-Teacher and Junior Matinee groups suspend activities until the fall term. Letters addressed to their leaders remain unanswered for weeks, while cooperation of any kind seems to die of summer heat.

Yet, it seems to us that here is a condition which should be effectively met and intelligently remedied. Vacation time should spell harvest for motion picture theatre owners. Children home from school are more eager to go to the movies than at any other time of the whole year. Whether they are in their own home town, or visiting other places, a motion picture is the unfailing remedy for boredom. Many adults, who through the whole working year find little time for entertainment, go several nights in the week to the movies during the vacation days.

Vacation Features

The successful theatre man will not hesitate to book high-grade features suitable for family audiences for his summer schedule. There are also any number of excellent productions which may be obtained for summer Saturday morning matinees or special afternoon performances for children, at little cost, because they have had their turn in the first-run houses and have occasioned no special furore in passing. Nevertheless, some of the less exploited pictures are high-grade entertainment and particularly suitable for juveniles. A theatre announcing summer matinees of special importance to children, or a Saturday morning of unusual short features would, without doubt, win new audiences in every week. This department has available for your use a synopsis of the endorsed pictures of the year which would be helpful in making your bookings. We will be glad to send it upon request.

The Gangsters' Obsequies

There is a delightful naviete about some of the advertising on the recent "thrill" pictures. Fox, advertising "The Black Camel," states in bold-faced type, "Secret of this case harder to determine than alley cat's grandfather" . . . which is intriguing; but the publicity continues, "Audiences sit on edge of honorable seats as thrill chases thrill. Who killed who and why? Best mystery of the year—peppered with laughs —loaded with box office—and not a gangster in it!"

Universal press sheets describe "Up For Murder," a picture of barking guns, gang antagonisms and the shadow of the electric chair looming in the background, in the following emphatic italics, "It Is Not a Gangster Picture."

And the chief of police in select Evanston, Ill., dropping in for an afternoon's diversion heard the select juveniles of blue law Evanston cheer the heroics of a mythical Capone. He strode from the place to announce to a startled community that hereafter no gangster picture would be permitted in any theatre in Evanston. It looks, refreshingly enough, as if the gangster were now something to be ashamed of!

Let's Blame the Public

But after all, the producers are not to blame for this epidemic of gang heroics that we have had during the past season. In the current months' fiction list of the ten best sellers, a book of gangdom intrigue nauseating in its language, raw with vulgarity, its sordidness redeemed only by a brittle and dynamic style of writing, is running close to the top of the list.

Westerns For Them

We have not quite realized, perhaps, although there has been enough talk on the subject, how overwhelmingly boys prefer Western pictures, and how truly the men of the plains, with their easy manners and their beautiful grace on a horse, are the idols of Young America. And it isn't a bad idolatry for there is something daring, finely courageous and clean with the air of the open spaces in their characterizations. They are not, as a rule, too involved with sex subtleties and divorce problems. Within the past month the boys' magazine, The Open Road For Boys, made an offer of a portrait of boys' favorite stars if they would write to the editor and state what type of picture they liked best, and name the actors they preferred to see on the screen. From the 500 letters that poured in within the first ten days one could arrive at an immediate answer, for the votes were practically unanimous. From a list of fifteen actors Buck Jones rated first, with Ken Maynard second; then came Buzz Barton, Tom Tyler, Tom Mix, Gary Cooper, Hoot Gibson and other outstanding Western heroes. Amusingly enough, out of the fifteen names only one lady made the grade. The only actress to find her place in the choice of 500 boys was Janet Gaynor—and this is satisfying too, for Miss Gaynor interprets as a rule those charming, clean and wholesome characters that have made "Daddy Long Legs" its present current success.

The other interesting item in this vote is the fact that no mention whatever of gangster films was made by any boy, and scarcely an actor who played in gangster films received mention.

A Promising Season Ahead

Through these summer months the "School and Screen" service is gathering momentum for full and far reaching activity in September. Never before in the history of the industry has so much suitable material been offered for this purpose. Every studio has an excellent juvenile or educational feature in production. Motion picture making moves in cycles. The coming season will be remarkable for the number and quality of family audience features. Here, for instance, are a few of the pictures that we are watching with particular interest for "School and Screen" suitability; each one, unless it is marred, as "Shipmates" was, by the injection of a few unnecessary lines, will be highly acceptable material for the "School and Screen" service!

"Alexander Hamilton," "Merely Mary Ann," "Salomy Jane," "Young America." "Riders of the Purple Sage," "The Rainbow Trail," "Penrod," "Penrod and Sam," the Torchy Series, "Danger Island," "The Spirit of Notre Dame," and a dozen others. Added to these are a number of superior travelogues and exceptional short features which will allow the theatre man a wide variety of choice in the building of distinguished programs.

Later July Programs

If the American Legion is active in your community, or a Post of Veterans, it may interest a large number of your clientele to feature in a prominent way the anniversary of the Battle of Chateau Thierry, which is historically recorded for July 15. Often called "the second battle of the Marne," this important strategic and tragic engagement stands out as one of the highlights of the World War. The period following may be featured in a variety of ways. First, you might invite as guests of honor Veterans of the World War, Gold Star Mothers, Officers of the local American Legion, members of the Red Cross, and the French Consul. The occasion offers unusual opportunity for foyer display that should win press comment and community interest. The exhibits might include war relics of local residents; guns, hats, canteen dishes, decorations for bravery, flags and letters. It is an occasion on which the American and French flags should be hung out together. Your doorman might be dressed in the uniform of the American doughboy. Boy Scouts in uniform should serve as honorary ushers.

Suitable military features are:

"Comrades" (war drama), Cooperative, 6 reels, silent.

"Dawn Patrol" (World war drama), with Richard Barthelmess.

"Doughboy" (World war comedy), with Buster Keaton.

"Anybody's War" (World war comedy), Moran and Mack.

"Young Eagles" (World war aviation), Paramount.

Excellent short features are:

"Ducking Duty" (Comedy of doughboy life), Warner Bros.

"Hello Russia" (Comedy of World war), Universal.

"High C" (Charlie Chase comedy of World war), M-G-M.

"Parlez Vous" (Comedy of soldier life in France), Universal.

"American Legion in Paris," Fox.

"Gunboat Ginsberg," RKO.

The Battle of Bull Run, July 21, 1861, a victory for the Confederate Army was Stonewall Jackson's fight. It is of sufficient historic importance to young people to be featured in an especial manner. It is an occasion for press and editorial comment, and presented in an intelligent and prominent manner by an alert theatre manager it should prove to be a box office attraction.

Guests of honor should include Civil War veterans in uniform, if possible, also United Daughters of the Confederacy. The foyer display of Civil War relics, old guns, uniforms, flags, maps, etc., would be of more than passing interest. Add oldtime war songs to the program: "Tenting Tonight on the Old Camp Ground," etc. Cooperate with your library for a story telling of the historic event. A local school child might read the poem "Barbara Fritchie."

Features suitable for the occasion would be:

"Lincoln," United Artists.

"Morgan's Last Raid," M-G-M.

"Only the Brave" (Civil war), Paramount.

"Overland Telegraph" (Civil war days—Indians), M-G-M.

"Fighting Caravans" (Story of the freight caravans to California, during the Civil war), Paramount.

Shorts:

"Lincoln," RKO-Pathe.

"Lincoln," All-Star.

"Deep South" (song sketch—Negro spirituals), RKO-Pathe.

"Marching On" (Lincoln portrayal), Fox.

"Old Black Joe," Tiffany.

"Plantation," Tiffany.

"The Virginia Judge" (Monologue), M-G-M.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Port Arthur, Canada

DEAR HERALD:

This is as far as we can go without getting a passport. Crockett Brown wanted to go on through to Labrador but we wouldn't stand for it. This is the jumping-off place, but if you come up here and want to jump off, don't do it, for this Lake Superior water is wet.

This is a town of 17,000 people with one theatre in operation, owned by Publix and managed by a very pleasing gentleman who seems well versed in just how to manage a theatre. Fort William joins Port Arthur and is about the same size. There are more grain elevators in these two towns than there are in all the rest of the world, and they are filled with enough wheat to feed the entire earth for two generations to come.

Ladies, we found these Canadian boys no different from what they are under the Stars and Stripes, in fact, we don't know but what they have got it over the most of us. The Canadian customs officers were very polite and all they wanted to know was, where we were going, when we were coming back, where we lived, what we had with us, were we American citizens, did we own our car, etc., etc., etc. We answered these questions ourself, because Crockett didn't know, but when we came back and the American officers took us in hand it was different. They didn't ask us as many questions, but boy, did they frisk us? You tellem. They even examined Crockett's underwear, he looked so suspicious. Crockett asked the officer if he wanted to smell his breath and he said, "No, I smelled that as soon as you left Port Arthur."

Can't Kid Officers

You can't kid those officers much and get away with it. They soaked one fellow just ahead of us five bucks and took a bottle of wine away from him and he had two ladies in the car with him and they were looking right at that officer all the while. Here is a case where ladies don't count for very much.

We believe those officers were a little disappointed in not finding anything on us or in our car, for they looked us over pretty carefully when we went up and no doubt expected to make a haul when we came back. We told Crockett it was no wonder they used the miscroscope on us, that if he had let us do the talking we could have got by without even an examination, but with one look at him and we had to open up everything but the gas tank.

We saw a funny sign in Port Arthur on a drygoods store. It read, "You no can see from there, come hither." There is a lot of good sense in it even though it sounds rather odd. What they were probably trying to impress on the reader's mind was that he couldn't see their goods from the curbstone, he'd have to "come hither."

If you were going to operate a theatre you probably wouldn't pick a town of 250 people right out in the forest as a likely place to operate one, but that's what L. D. Gustafson did when he opened the Comet theatre at Cook, and he is making a success of it, too. You visit with L. D. a while and you will find the secret for his success. He's a live one, and every deer, moose, muskrat, mink, badger and chipmunk within thirty miles knows what is on the screen at the Comet. How he does it the Lord and L. D. only know, but he does it. We had a dandy visit with him and we are invited back some day to help him land some muskies that hitherto have been able to get away.

More Showmanship

Here's another instance of showmanship. Billy Heick runs the Calumet theatre at Calumet, a town about the size of a horse blanket, and he is making both ends lap over where most fellows couldn't make 'em meet.

There are two reasons why he is making a go of it; one is Billy and the other is Mrs. Billy. Both of 'em good scouts and both known from one end of the Mesaba range to the other. It's worth the price of admission just to meet Billy and Mrs. Billy, and that's why most folks don't care what's on their screen.

Mr. Burgess at Tower divides his time between his newspaper office and the theatre, and we know he doesn't neglect the newspaper because we found copies of it all over the Mesaba range country, and it's no slouch of a paper, if you ask us. Mr. Burgess told us that business at the theatre could be, and had been, better but it could be worse. Tower is right on the extreme edge of the Universe where everything ends and nothing commences except Vermilion lake, where Burgess says the muskies are so big they have to pull 'em out with a block and tackle.

Mr. Swanson, who operates the Opera House at Ely, said he was so glad to see us that he had a good notion to call up the bootlegger. We talked him out of that and Crockett got sore at us for doing it and went and got a couple of brunettes and took 'em out for an airing and left us with a flat tire. There are two houses in Ely and Mr. Swanson seems to be doing the bulk of the business. We called to see Mr. Cox, who operates the other theatre, but he was "busy" and said he would see us "tomorrow." "Tomorrow" we were on our way to Port Arthur.

Mr. McIntyre, the manager for the Publix houses in Hibbing, said when we called on him that he was so doggone sore at us for not calling on him before that he'd go and have an ice cream soda with us just to prove to us that he could not hold a grudge as long as we neglected him. He's a swell guy.

C. P. Christiansen, W. R. Wright and C. A. Stephenson are the triumvirate that shape the destiny of the State theatre at Two Harbors, and how they shape it. Two Harbors is bounded on the north by the Superior National Forest Reserve, on the east by a long, slender road, on the south by Lake Superior and on the west by the west end of that long, slender road. Outside of the town they have nothing to draw from except the deer and moose in the forest and the trout in Lake Superior, and yet they are doing a good business just because they are businessmen. They have a lovely theatre that seats about five hundred Gophers and the little Gophers and there are not many of 'em left at home when the first show starts. We had a delightful visit with Mr. Wright and Mr. Stephenson and were sorry we did not meet Mr. Christiansen. We would have liked to stay longer but Crockett was anxious to get home, as he said he had three things to attend to. He didn't say what they were, but two of 'em were blondes, we found that out when we got back and he left us with another flat tire. Now, there's a pal for you!

Sees Better Pictures

Will Miller of the Leb theatre at Cloquet came pretty near hitting us right on the nose when we tried to pay for the lunch, he's so quick-tempered that way. He says pictures are bound to improve in quality because it is impossible for them to get any worse. We can't quite agree with Miller on that because they can still make a few more gangster reels and a few of the exhibitors still have a little money left with which to lift the C.O.D.'s. What Miller can't tell 'em about pictures isn't in the dictionary.

Up in northern Minnesota they make a liquid they call "Minnesota 13," and it is said to be so powerful that if they put a couple of drops on an angleworm and throw him in the lake he will wrap himself around a pike's neck and choke him to death. That's the way they catch their fish up there. We didn't try any of it on angleworms but it sure did invigorate Crockett Brown.

If you want to see the most perfect example of happiness and contentment you ever saw in your life, get a corncob and go out to the pigpen and scratch a little pig on the belly and see him lie down and shut his eyes and hear him grunt. It's more fun than playing with some babies. Jevver try it?

George is so tight with his space that we haven't room to do it here, but next week we are going to write an open letter to Lois Wilson and we hope someone out in Hollywood will call her attention to it. Maybe we will have a fish story for you, too.

J. C. JENKINS,
The HERALD Man.

MUSIC AND TALENT

PARAMOUNT LAUNCHES NEW REVUES

Show Is Controlled by Music Offerings

Hundred Employed, With Pit on Level With Huge Stage and Both in Use

By ED DAWSON

A new type of stage production, the most ambitious type of stage presentation ever attempted at any Paramount theatre, is being tried out by Paramount-Publix Corporation at its ace house on Broadway.

The entire show is practically controlled by the music, and calls for split-second precision in the handling of the mechanical requirements. Edward Paul has been chosen to take charge and conduct the orchestra.

The first show—a revue—is called "Three Shades of Blue" and is produced by Boris Petroff under the personal supervision of Boris Morros, head of the production and music departments.

One hundred individuals are employed in the huge production, which incorporates the use of not only the huge stage of the Paramount theatre, but also the pit, which is to be on the level of the stage.

The many changes in the show are all timed to the music; the whole presenting a vastly complicated problem of artistry as well as engineering.

The cast is headed by Borrah Minnevitch and His Harmonica Rascals and the Forbes Randolph Colored Ensemble. Rubinoff, the dynamic conductor and violin virtuoso, leads the orchestra on the stage.

If the new type of production proves as successful as the executives anticipate, this type of musical revue will be the regular stage presentation at the Paramount.

New Company Will Return Vaudeville to Australia

The newly formed Tivoli Celebrity Vaudeville, Ltd., formed on a nominal capital of $632,500, in Sydney, Australia, will bring foreign performers into the country in an effort to return vaudeville to the position it held a few years ago.

The company has acquired houses in three cities, with more to be taken over shortly. Vaudeville and legitimate appear to be regaining strength in the country, and more local players are working now than have for several years.

Mack at Shea's Buffalo

Shea's Buffalo, which has been without an m.c. for several weeks, has engaged Ted Mack in that capacity.

ERNEST HAUSER

Here's a great likeness of this musical conductor who is not only well known in the state of Texas, where he has conducted the orchestra at the Texas theatre, but also in New York, where he formerly lead large hotel orchestras.

Ten years ago, Hauser was sent to conduct the orchestra in the Empire theatre, San Antonio, by the Paramount-Publix Corporation. He was then chosen to conduct the inaugural program at Texas' largest theatre, the Texas, San Antonio. His continued assignment at this house, until this spring, surely speaks favorably for his ability and popularity. Since then, Hauser has had, for the past two years, the honor of conducting the San Antonio Symphony Orchestra of 90 pieces.

Continues With Stage Shows Despite Publix Withdrawal

Despite the withdrawal of Publix units from the Saenger theatre in New Orleans, stage shows are still in evidence, though the presentations are for the most part home talent.

It is announced that the theatre will continue stage shows, no matter what the source. Loew's State is offering Fanchon and Marco units, while the Orpheum continues its usual vaudeville and feature film policy.

Danny Winkler Is Fifth Partner in De Sylva Company

Five partners now head the music company of DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, Inc., with the announcement by Bobby Crawford, president, that Danny Winkler, who for the past four months has been vice-president of Remick Music Company, is the new partner. Winkler for the past three or four years has had a big hand in building up the reputation of the company. The organization of the "Personality Boys of the Music Industry" now is no longer a subsidiary of Warner Brothers.

Their first efforts, now that the firm is back on its own, is the writing of the music score for George White's forthcoming "Scandals," by Buddy DeSylva, Lew Brown and Ray Henderson.

F & M Ideas May Go Into Publix Southwest Houses

San Antonio, Texas, reports indicate that Fanchon and Marco Ideas may go into the Publix houses: Texas, San Antonio; Palace, Dallas; Metropolitan, Houston and Saenger, New Orleans.

Other houses which may use F. & M. Ideas include the Denver, at Denver; Paramount, Toledo, O., and several others, in the possible Publix-F. & M. deal.

Joe Bell Making Tour of RKO Theatres in Texas

Joe Bell, the singing usher with his guitar, who was featured at the RKO Majestic at San Antonio for several weeks, has been booked into the Majestic Theatres at Dallas, Houston and Fort Worth for a weeks' engagement at each de luxe RKO house. Bell will be on the air waves at each of these Texas cities. After the tour of these theatres, Joe will return to San Antonio.

Adds Revue Department

D. De Santos and Company, foreign producer and distributor, with New York offices, has added a booking department for radio, stage, screen, club and hotel revue talent.

Named Concert-Master

Toscha Samaroff, for three years with the Roxy symphony orchestra, has been appointed concert-master by Maurice Baron, conductor. He will serve with Jacques Gasselin.

UNIFORMS FOR HOUSE ATTACHES COSTUMES FOR STAGE PRESENTATIONS BROOKS 1437 B'way N. Y. City

STAGE SHOWS

Cincinnati RKO Albee

Week ending July 17

Fifi D'Orsay, whose accents and mannerisms are distinctly French, but who admits that she never has set foot on French soil, is the latest in the long list of "names" to headline the stage bills at this house.

The opening spot is occupied by Kitaro Japs, two men and a woman, the latter being "scenery." The male members offer a familiar routine of foot juggling which runs smoothly.

Hal Nierman, tramp comedian, follows in a line of songs and chatter which gets over to fair returns. The audience at the opening show didn't seem to be in the mood for a stooge act.

Ledova, danseuse, on No. 3, opens in full stage with special backdrop for a toe dance, following with a classical number assisted by her dancing partner, Leon Varkes. Rae Bonstine, accompanist at the grand, does a really high class solo while the principals make their change for a travesty on their previous classical turn. An unbilled Cuban femme is then introduced doing the "St. Louis Blues" in Spanish, and a modernized Cuban rumba, also in her native tongue for an encore. The trio then burlesque the rumba number, which, by introduction of low comedy, detracts from the entire act.

Miss D'Orsay, next to closing and working in one, sings a number of songs which she used on the screen, assisted by an unprogramed chap at the ivories. Her assumed French temperament is too obvious to be convincing. As a finale she comes into the audience singing personal songs, a la burlesque, and bestowing kisses on male spectators in the front rows, falling in the lap of one of the men. The effect brought some laughs, but did not savor of the required dignity.

Dave Kramer and Jack Boyle, working straight and blackface, close the show with wisecracking and general hokum, subsequently introducing Marjorie Moore, violinist and toe dancer, and Beth Miller, vocalist and acrobat.

There was a conspicuous absence of prolonged palm-whacking for any particular act, at least at the first show.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending July 15

Selections from "The Student Prince" by the Wisconsin theatre orchestra under the direction of Glen Welty precede the appearance of The Great Raymond, in a Fanchon & Marco Idea. Orville Rennie, tenor, is featured in connection with the orchestra selection and he sings both on the screen and in person.

The Great Raymond is announced by the Sunkist Beauty chorus, who entertain at various moments throughout the Idea. One of their numbers includes a trumpet number, which is nicely done.

The Great Raymond's repertoire includes the customary snatching of rabbits and fowls from out of the provincial thin air. He injects humor into his stunts and is well received by the audience.

His last trick involves the sealing of his daughter into a black bag, handcuffed, thence into a truck, which is moved into a tent, the flaps dropped for a brief moment and from which she emerges unshackled, while her father later is removed from the truck and sealed bag, handcuffed.

Sixth Year For Bowes

Major Edward Bowes, New York Capitol managing director, will celebrate his sixth anniversary on the air, July 24.

San Francisco Fox

Week ending July 15

As a tribute to the Western flyers who recently made history with their record around the world flight, Walt Roesner and the Fox Concert Orchestra offer a "Gatty and Post Overture." This selection is made up of international airs in which American, English, German and Russian music predominates. During the rendition of part of the overture use is made of the Magna screen to show a plane in flight over the wastes. Joaquin Guaray sings "I'm Whistling in the Dark," as his offering.

The stage presentation is Fanchon & Marco's Dream House Idea and should stimulate the building industry, the way houses are built up and torn down on the stage.

The act opens with the Sunkist Beauties appearing in natty costumes which include fur-trimmed jackets, and singing "Ho Hum." The girls do a dance number and are joined by a couple who talk of their wedding day, soon to come. The young man tells of the house he is to present her with as a wedding present, a love cote in need of repair but to be a dream house.

A carpenter strolls on and is asked to begin work on the house. He explains that he is but a second carpenter and that his job is to build little houses behind the big houses which the first carpenter erects. The Sunkist Beauties appear on the brick wall in the background and do a novel dance on top of the wall and the niches on the side.

A laborer, wearing a bridle and wheeling a barrow explains that if he has to work like a horse he likes to look like one. Encouraged to sing, he makes a sad beginning, but gets better and better and finally discards his overalls and appears in a white summer suit.

The scene changes to an exotic garden and nymphs appear from around the roots of a huge tree and do a dance of the forest. Louise Glenn, "Charmful little armful," does a solo dance that wins generous applause.

The O'Donnell & Blair Co. come on in a comedy skit, "The Plasterers." Two take the part of the frisky horse drawing a wagon which all but falls to pieces. The workmen commence repairs on "Dream House," which proves a trick house, with doors and stairs behaving in unexpected manner, and walls finally toppling over. This act develops into slap stick comedy in which dialogue has no part.

The act comes to a close with the dream house shown in a completed form and the girls singing "Ho Hum" as though building cottages were all in a day's work. The offering is different from the ordinary and packs plenty of comedy along with slumber airs.

The Music Wins!

Statistics on radio broadcasting for June, 1931, prepared by the National Broadcasting Company, indicate that only 55 per cent of the daily schedule was given over to dance music this year as compared with 66.1 per cent in June, 1930. Musical programs of all types took 63.5 per cent of all broadcast time, said the report. Of this, 24.4 per cent was classical and 20.6 per cent semi-classical. The figures are for the two NBC New York Stations, WEAF and WJZ.

Denver Denver

Week ending July 14

The overture and stage show at the Denver the current week is one of the best that has been on the boards here recently.

The overture by the Denver orchestra, led by Fred Schmitt, consists of a group of melodies that brought fame to Maurice Chevalier, and the group is named "Maurice Chevalier Novelties." Some of the songs chosen were "My Ideal," "Louise," "Hello Beautiful" and "While Hearts are Singing," a member of the orchestra vocalizing on the latter. The opening and closing strains of the overture are lively, and warm up the audience.

The Fanchon & Marco North, East, West and South Idea is a rapidly moving stage show, and all in all pleasing, though some of it is a trifle stale. The opening line, with Canadian mounties uniformed and composed of a dozen girls and half as many boys, entertain with tap dancing and singing. The uniforms, while flashier than the originals, add color to the line. Jack Waldron and Miss Harriett, featured, take care of the fun, though its not so good. Just their personality. Glen Dale and Elvira Tanzi sing considerably, both solos and duets, and have good voices. The Viriginia Colonial scene is a lovely setting and is followed by a Chinese section that falls rather flat. Helen O'Shea does a standard toe dance and whirling number. Waldron and Harriett do broadcasting with a kick. A Spanish mission, with half a dozen monks, is used as an excuse for Dale and Tanzi to sing again. The finale, sort of a combination affair, starts with Florida orange grove scene, with entire line attired in gay overalls, then a quick change to skyscrapers of New York, and the line in pajamas and white suits.

Ethel Merman, Musical Star, at Palace With Green

Ethel Merman, scintillating "torch" singer, who recently completed her third Paramount short, and John W. Green, song writer, and Paramount staff composer, will be featured at the New York RKO Palace, beginning July 18, for one week.

KUKU On RKO Stage

The RKO Flushing on July 25 will feature Raymond Knight, in a specially staged version of his radio broadcast, "Station KUKU," burlesque radio revue.

Vallee Contract Renewed

Rudy Vallee, NBC orchestra leader, has received a new contract with the Hotel Pennsylvania, New York, to run to next May, at a "substantial increase."

Leonidoff With F & M

Leon Leonidoff, former Roxy production director, has been appointed Fanchon & Marco producer, with Hollywood offices. Clark Robinson, art director since the opening of the Roxy and former architect, has taken over the duties of production director.

Radio Studio On Air

"RKO Radio Pictures' Laffeteria" will inaugurate a series of national broadcasts July 19, over Station KFI from the West Coast studio.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

If Wayne King decided to give up conducting his dance band at the Aragon Ballroom he can take up the profession of a golf pro. The news of his ability to score a consistent low seventy seems to have spread to the listening public and this week brought him three requests from listeners who wanted him to give them golf lessons. Wayne has a silver trophy which he won two years ago in a driving contest being conducted on a local course. He had just finished a game with some friends when he encountered a large crowd grouped around one of the tees. A driving contest was in progress and his friends persuaded him to enter. He did, and despite the fact that he had just concluded a round of golf, walked off with the championship cup.

Jan Garber, now playing at the Trianon, is credited with starting the craze for clowning antics. Garber introduced his humorous version of band leading at the annual ball of a recording machine company, where a half dozen of the nation's most famous bands were appearing. The idea did not pass without some adverse criticism, yet before a year had passed a little "hokum" had become a part of the routine of the most popular bands in the country.

If Carlton Coon and Joe Sanders hadn't happened to meet in a Kansas City music store there might not have been any Coon-Sanders orchestra. Both men had roomed together at college, had played on the same track teams, but had lost track of each other when they went overseas during the war. Meeting by accident in the music store they talked over old times, found they were both in the music business and decided to form an orchestra. And today they are recognized as one of the biggest orchestra attractions in America.

The management was so elated over the big business that they bought new hats for everyone in the band including Mildred Bailey . . . ORGAN SOLOS

BERNIE COWHAM (New York City, Flushing RKO). The title of Bernie's organ solo this week is "Bernie Boosting Broadway's Best Ballads," and opens with a cleverly worded special version to the tune "Hello Beautiful." It happened, this week, that just before the organ solo, a short film of Madame Schumann-Heink teaching her pupils to sing, was shown, and Bernie used this as his first announcement and as a reason for his "singing class" to show how they could sing. They responded, full blast, with "Whistling in the Dark," "Many Happy Returns of the Day," "One More Time," "Falling In Love Again" and "Road to Mandalay." Though the second and third numbers never had been used by Bernie before, this audience did justice to them and sang them lustily. After the singing of "Falling in Love Again," Bernie told them that the lyrics were all wrong, so he wrote some that he thought were more fitting, and played this chorus for the audience to sing. The words that he wrote did seem more fitting and this audience had a lot of laughs and sang the song very well. The oldtimer, "Mandalay," was a request number and the voices of the bassos predominated in the singing of this number. Bernie received his usual fine reception.

MERLE CLARK (Brooklyn Paramount) for his first solo at this house presented a "get acquainted" organ rendition and impressed himself favorably on this audience. Charlie Davis, house m.c., entered after Clark had made his appearance and gave him a great send-off, getting him over the rough spot of coming up cold. Clark proved himself a versatile showman, a good musician and a regular fellow. His first attempt at warming up the audience met with a quick response. After the first gags and ad libbing through the mike, Clark had the audience right with him. The first full number offered was "Whistling In the Dark," with the audience whistling. He then broached the subject of singing and the audience responded by singing "Now You're In My Arms" and "Dream a Little Dream of Me" as if they had been singing for him forever.

JACK MARTIN (Milwaukee Wisconsin) offers a music test, playing selections from Liszt, Mozart, Beethoven, Herbert, Berlin and Donaldson. The explanatory matter flashed upon the screen between selections is set to the music of "I Surrender Dear." Numbers played include "Liebestraume," "The Glow Worm," Finale from "Faust," "Kiss Me Again" and "Tie a Little String Around Your Finger."

ADA RIVES (New Orleans, Loew's State) has a sure-fire solo in "Encouragement to Song Writers," which, while purporting to show how song writers achieve success so that others with the inspiration may follow, brings in a number of popular melodies which the audience sings with zest. Miss Rives opens with Irving Berlin's "Reachin' for the Moon," follows this with Benny Davis' "I'm Happy When You're Happy," then goes into George Whiting's "My Ideal," James Monaco's "Lonesome Love" and closes with an illustration of how quickly a song can become popular, with "Moonlight Saving Time." Particularly effective are Miss Rives' graphic Tom Thumb biographies which she delivers over the microphone before going into each song.

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

Hello Everybody!

My Chicago correspondent informs me that Don York and Eddie Talbert have formed a new music publishing company known as Gold Star Music Publishing Company. The firm has offices in the Wood's Theatre Building and are starting out with a number of good tunes, namely: "You're Tired of Me," a snappy fox-trot, and "I Dreamed I Was In Heaven," a "heavenly" waltz. . . . This concern has a staff of go-getters and will no doubt grow up to be one of the big firms in Chicago. . . .

Dropped in to see Jesse Crawford the other day and he was just about the busiest fellow I had seen in a long time. . . . Jesse had a pile of about 500 photos in front of him and was autographing each of them. . . . I glanced over his shoulder and was surprised to read requests for photos from all over the world, some even written in their own native languages. . . . Jesse not only gets requests for photos from his radio and theatre fans but from the thousands of people who play his recordings. . . .

"Herbie" Koch, organist at the New Orleans Saenger theatre, has another "Herbiette." According to Herbie she has a pug nose, a lotta hair, weighs six and one-half pounds and she was born during the second show of the second annual Kiddie Revue at the Saenger. Truthfully, she was born while Herbie was playing "Say a Little Prayer for Me," in one of his organ solos. She is to be named Dorothy Lee Koch. . . .

We've all heard of the irony of fate. . . . and here is a little tale of it in its worse form. . . . Al Soloman, slide man in the New York territory for DeSylva, Brown and Henderson, Inc., had one of the huskiest, sweetest little fellows anyone would want and Al was sure proud of him. . . . One day last week, the little fellow contracted poisoning and in a few days was taken on the long journey. . . . I know all you fellows who know Al will sympathize with him.

I know a lot of you organists around town hate to go 'way downtown to the Leo Feist special service department to get your slides, but boys you'll sure feel it is worth while after meeting and knowing that little lady, Marie Adams. . . . Marie is one sweet girl and not only that but she is one of the busiest girls in the business and one of the greatest boosters of Feist songs that that firm has. . . .

Milton Slosser, w.k. theatre organist out at the Ambassador, St. Louis, again has been assigned as master of ceremonies at this house. . . . This is the second or third time Milt has doubled up on the job and he will continue until Brooke Johns comes in. . . . Johns, who has been here as m.c. before, is coming in for a two-week engagement.

Most of the members of the "Noon-Day Club" are vacationing right now and I wish they'd hurry back 'cause it's boresome eating alone. I'll be seeing you.

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

"Lend Me Your Ears"!

IF there is anything this business needs a lot of today, it is loyalty. Not only to your employers, but to the industry as a whole.

A large number of those engaged in running theatres spend more time creating and spreading jackass rumors than they do in constructive work and attention to their jobs. And, they are the first to "knife" their superiors when things go wrong.

Running a theatre today is far from a sinecure. What with handling the help, watching the equipment, working out campaigns, creating exploitation, chasing after the newspaper, etc., etc., a man has got to be a marvel to keep pace with his work and yet find time to drift about the community and build up some good will.

Loyalty must not only be preached, but practised on a large scale. Getting the house staff together from time to time and telling them about the great future that loyalty will bring is not going to click if you deliberately turn around and show them that you, yourself, are not loyal to those who entrusted you with the running of the theatre.

This writer is the last one in the world to get on a soap-box and shout about the virtues of circuit theatre operation. We've found too much to criticize time and again, and will continue to find it as long as it actually exists. But on the other hand, circuit control offers, to those who are worthy of it, definite and bright prospects for advancement and a future.

In every large organization, theatrical or commercial, it can hardly be expected that those in the home office will be sitting on the doorstep of the men in the remote corners of the field to see how good they are. But consistent good work will soon be recognized regardless of where it is being accomplished.

Minding your business and paying strict attention to your job will absolutely bring results at the box office. We make this statement regardless of where you are or the type of theatre you are running. It stands to reason that even the "white elephants" will react favorably to careful nursing and attention. We don't claim you will turn a heavy loser into a big profit-maker, but if you can cut the losses by reducing the overhead, and increasing, no matter how slight, the receipts, you are making money for your employers.

This world is full of chronic kickers; men who always have an axe to grind; men who would rather spend an hour knifing someone else in the business than to improve their theatre or its business. Avoid those babies like a contagious disease, they are dangerous to your business and to your state of mind. If you continue to listen to their growlings you will soon fall into their class. Turn your back on them or tell 'em to go plumb to hell.

Our business has its ups and downs just like everything else. But if you take your own local situation and analyze it carefully you may be surprised to find that there is nothing the matter with business. If anything is wrong at all it is with the men running it. These, so-called, managers who have fallen into ruts and love to listen to scandal, gossip and the usual applesauce about everyone except themselves.

Those birds who can see a mote in the other fellow's eye but can't see a beam in their own. And, mark my word for this, such men are on the way out. They cannot possibly remain because there are too many good showmen awaiting the opportunity to make the grade and they will reach their goal by taking long strides past the scandal-mongers, who are so busy finding fault with those who employ them that they can't possibly find the time to correct their own shortcomings.

Take life as you find it and make the best of it. Just how far YOU will get in making a success of yours depends almost entirely on yourself. If you are loyal and can deliver the goods you will soon move onward and upward, if not,—make way for those who can.

Coffee House And Nut Tie-Up Bring Trade To B. Lewis

B. S. Lewis, manager of the Kettler Theatre, West Palm Beach, Fla., effected a tie-up with a coffee house whereby 3,000 envelopes containing five nuts each were distributed for "Cracked Nuts."

One side of the envelope carried copy about the coffee house and that all varieties of nuts could be gotten there—and the other side contained theatre copy relative to the picture, cast, theatre and playdates. The envelopes were distributed in offices and homes for three days in advance. The cost of printing and distributing was borne by the coffee house.

A nice little tie-up that received healthy circulation—and who doesn't like nuts? Good possibilities with this one boys, so let's hear what other Club members have done with it.

Monroe Builds Up Good Will Sending Mothers' Day Letter

As a plug for the Commencement season and Mothers' Day observance, George F. Monroe, manager of the Rivoli Theatre, Beatrice, Neb., sent telegrams to the mothers of all high school students who are graduating this year. We are sorry the telegram was not clear enough for reproduction.

Mr. Monroe took occasion to congratulate the mothers and students upon the completion of the students' studies, and also got in a plug about the Mothers' Day program at his theatre, mentioning the theatre's attractions for the week specifically.

The cost of the telegrams was shared by a local druggist for the suggestion of stepping into his drug store after the show for refreshments. This stunt not only created invaluable good will, but was the means of publicizing the theatre's specific attractions, too.

The above is certainly a good example of building up local good will for anybody's theatre and carries a double action kick with no cost to the house. As this manager is apparently on the job with both feet the Club will hope to hear more about his work in future contributions.

Radio Tie-Up Nets Spengeman A World Of Good Publicity

A three-cornered tie-up between newspaper, radio dealer and theatre in the way of a voting contest for "Miss Majestic" netted the Warren Park Theatre a world of publicity and a distinct upturn in box-office receipts, writes Edward C. Spengman, manager of this house down in Front Royal, Va.

Several half-page ads and a generous collection of readers from both front page and other choice spots were enclosed and after inspection we are forced to conclude that all three principals worked shoulder to shoulder to put over the contest. All through the allotted period the paper from time to time plugged the stunt by carrying the standing and also published coupons for votes.

Spengeman also calls our attention to a post card he is sending out that is getting excellent results. It is a regulation P. O. card with a week's schedule of pictures printed on back. Mixed in with each picture's announcement are the names of three local residents who, by acknowledging the discovery of their names, are entitled to a pair of tickets to the theatre. Front Royal has a population of about 3,000 and 1,000 of the cards are mailed bi-monthly.

Another card he is using carries a picture of a kid dropping out of the sky by means of an umbrella parachute. The caption reads: "Hope You'll Drop In Soon." These are sent out from time to time.

For "East Lynne" Spengeman used a jackass (and he tells us it was a stubborn one) with a large sign on each side of the animal which read: "Everyone is going to the Warren Park to see East Lynne except me—and you know what I am." A lot of laughs and a goodly crowd at the show were the net results.

The Club is glad to know that the newspaper-radio tie-up turned out so well for this member and the post card gag is one that can be used at very small cost by any manager. Also, we can remind you that a jackass can attract plenty of attention. Much obliged, Eddie, for your contributions and let's hear from you again.

Business Appeared Dead But Borland Reaped His Harvest

Despite the world-wide depression, the conclusion of Dave Borland is that business even during the worst stages was not as dead as it appeared to be—which would appear to bear out thoughts voiced by some of our country's foremost financiers.

There were only two mines, out of a total of twelve, operating in Nanaimo, B. C., when it came time for Dave to prepare for the showing of "Kiss Me Again." Still, Borland, feeling that he must make some kind of a ballyhoo, seized upon an opportunity presented in connection with the 25th May Celebration Parade and contrived a float to represent the Capitol Theatre. The theatre orchestra played Herbert's tuneful "Kiss Me Again" and other selections from the works of this composer as the float paraded through town and the result was that the current picture not only showed about 125% better than hoped for but grossed more money than the house had handled in many a week. To top it all off the theatre float was awarded second prize in the advertising class.

We are reproducing a photo of Borland's float on this page and there is Dave himself standing alongside the big phonograph record. Anything that Dave puts on is done well, we can testify, as we still have happy recollections of the time when this manager played host to your Chairman during his last Summer's trip through the States and Canada. We hope to be able to get up your way again, Dave, and in the meantime let us know how things are.

Hoenscheidt's Big Banner On "Trader" Helped Sell Picture

A banner of unusual proportions for a small theatre was used to advertise "Trader Horn" when Fred Hoenscheidt, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Chickasha, Okla., played this picture.

The banner covered the width of the marquee and was 15 feet in heighth. Metallic letters spelling out the title of the picture were placed on the mammouth banner. It was suspended by special built frames over canopy with ropes and pulleys to raise and lower.

Both large-size letters and banners are much in vogue these days and there's no disputing the fact that they surely catch the public eye. The above is an excellent example of what can be done to emphasize the front of a small theatre and the Club thanks Hoenscheidt for sending it along. What else is doing out your way, Fred? Let the Club know, because we're always interested.

MacPherson Heals A Breach With Paper; Everything Oke Now

The value of newspaper cooperation is again emphasized in a communication to the Club from G. MacPherson, owner-manager of the Holly Theatre, Reedsport, Ore.

Prior to taking over this house about two months ago, the former operators had brought about ill feeling between house and paper by an attitude of almost total disregard for newspaper publicity. MacPherson paid the editor a call shortly after beginning operations and as a result these two are now pulling along like a team of seasoned draft horses.

The paper gave him a front page write-up on opening day, a generous editorial to boost local patronage and printed 5,000 heralds to be mailed out on a subscription gag. Three free tickets were given with each renewal or new subscription to the paper, in conjunction with a ticket printed by the paper, and as they came into the theatre they were redeemed by the paper for 25 cents each.

Macpherson also runs a spelling bee along with a market day tie-up with local merchants. Each merchant contributes some article as a prize which is prominently displayed in a store window several days before the event. The theatre awards a ticket to the winner, good for thirty days. The spelling matches are generally held just before matinee time.

The answer to the above is that the former operators let go and that Macpherson is winning out. How any manager can disregard his local editor is beyond our comprehension. There is many a stunt which can be worked between editor and manager, providing the gags are not overworked, and the Club is glad to know that this member has things coming his way. Keep the Club posted on other activities out your way, Mack.

ON A BI-CYCLE BUILT FOR ONE!

Crowd Of Kiddies Attracted By Sid Smith's Gala Party

In connection with the exploitation of "Skippy," Sidney Smith, manager of the American Theatre, Pittston, Pa., pulled off a kid party that attracted most every youngster in town and had all appearances of a real gala event. The "party" was held on Saturday morning, opening day of picture, in the Broad Street Park where there are acres and acres of space.

Games of many descriptions were indulged in such as egg hunting, sack race, three-legged race and others. Prizes were also given for these different games. In fact, Jackie Searl, one of the juvenile members of the cast of "Skippy" donated a $5 bill according to a telegram apparently received by Manager Smith. Jackie is purported to have said that inasmuch as he couldn't leave New York to help the kids search for all those eggs he would help the cause along by wiring $5 for prize money.

The "party" was advertised well in advance and even the adults knew about it as well as the picture. A ballyhoo was also used. Two boys, one dressed as "Skippy" and the other as "Sooky" paraded the streets with a dog. The dog was bannered with copy relative to the picture, theatre and playdates. These boys and dog were also present at the "Skippy" party.

Nice work, Manager Smith, and it's no wonder that you enlisted wide support from Pittston kiddies. Keep the Club posted on what else you are doing down in your town.

GET SET FOR THE NEW SEASON!

Without necessarily doing the actual work right now, you should be making your plans for the new season which will start within eight weeks. That's not so long a way off when you stop to consider the many things to be accomplished by the time it rolls around.

Definite plans for brightening things up around the theatre, working out your ideas for a "big" start, getting the house into tip-top shape, looking after the winter uniforms, the boiler room and the hundred and one other little things now will help avoid last minute and expensive fixing later on.

We have sounded this warning before and will continue to stress the importance of it right straight through until the new season gets under way. It seems to be human nature to put things off, but inasmuch as most of the managers get, more or less, of a breathing spell at this time of the year, it would be well for them and their theatres if they made certain that everything is put into proper shape for the coming fall and winter.

If you are responsible for the heating of your house, fuel arrangements ought to be completed. Whether oil or coal, best deals can be made now.

Do your planning now and watch your house get itself into shape while you have the time. Delays are always dangerous.

Stubblefield Puts "Skippy" Over Top With Ace Campaign

Remembering the Club on the occasion of its Third Anniversary Number, Flynn Stubblefield, manager of the Strand Theatre, Louisville, Ky., sends in a corking campaign he made on "Skippy" which made the Strand box office hum with activity a few weeks ago. Previews, radio broadcasts, window tie-ups and heavy newspaper advertising were all used to excellent results.

As a starter in his campaign Stubblefield sent a letter to all local school teachers inviting them to a preview of the picture.

As a result of a special Saturday morning matinee held for all Louisville orphans Stubblefield received a wonderful front-page break in a Louisville daily which carried large photographs of two local orphans who resembled "Skippy."

Additional exploitation consisted of daily broadcasts over a Louisville radio station of "Skippy" songs and announcements; five downtown music store window displays on "Skippy" song; a special "Skippy" sundae featured in seven downtown drug stores which netted the largest sales of any special drink ever presented; window displays in three downtown sporting goods stores on Bobby Jones' "How I Play Golf" series, which was an added attraction to "Skippy."

It is a shame that we can not reproduce the four-sheet made by Zibart, but it just cannot be accomplished on these pages. All we can say is that it is one of the most attractive we've ever seen and if we had a theatre that was playing this picture we'd make haste to post it in the most conspicuous spot.

O'Hearn Received Fine Break When Running Co-op Ad

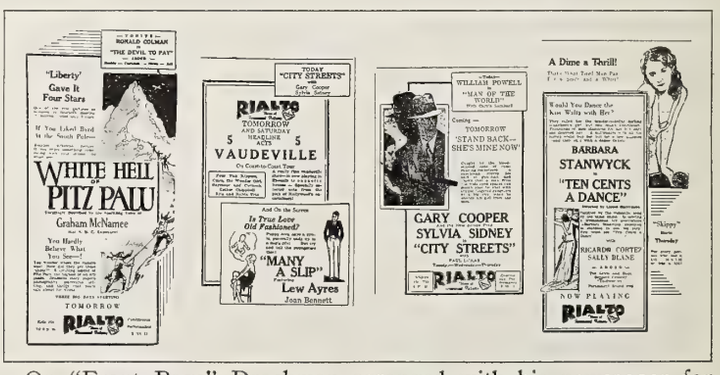
A fine break was recently secured by Joe O'Hern, manager of the Olympia Theatre, Chelsea, Mass., when he ran a co-op ad on "It Pays to Advertise" at no cost whatsoever to the house excepting a few guest tickets for those who filled in the names of the advertisers. The ad ran two insertions in the Friday and Saturday editions and Hern estimates that the total effort reached approximately 10,000 readers. The Club has recently published reproductions of similar co-op pages and believes that most members are now familiar with this productive and economical attendance booster. If not, we'll be glad to furnish more detail or, if you'll drop a line to Joe, we're sure he'll be glad to tell his experience.

Creative Ability Is Evident In Ads Used By Drachman

Ability to create a different type of ad is definitely expressed in a collection of tear sheets sent the Club by Roy P. Drachman, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Tucson, Ariz. On account of its novel treatment we published one of Roy's ads several weeks ago for the benefit of his brother showmen, but his most recent letter states that he, personally, did not rate that one so highly; so, you will find a reproduction of some hand-picked ones on this page. The lay-out is, of course, considerably scaled down, but we believe it sufficient size to give you an idea of how this manager works them out.

You will note that in each ad Drachman employs the use of boxes and rules in staggered fashion. Not only does he get away from the stereotyped style of slapping a stock mat right in the center of the ad with a splash of heavy black type, but his copy also is different from the regular run-o'-mine stuff. Roy's mats are moved around in corners, white space is accomplished and further desirable effect is gained through the use of vertical and horizontal rules ranging from one to two points in size.

We also wish to call attention to a page co-operative ad which is a regular weekly feature in his home town paper. The copy at the top of the ad tells the whole story, but in case you may not be able to make it out we will state that it is a "Bargain Day" gag based upon the idea that women do their shopping and theatre-going on Wednesdays. They are, at least, in the shopping districts and you will note that in each one of the merchant's ads some special bargain is featured. And note the break that the theatre gets at top of page.



On "Front Page" Drachman arranged with his newspaper for the imprinting in red ink of the title across the first page in large-face type. These copies went to every home in town that was not using the paper and were also hand-delivered on the streets by kids yelling "extra." They were given further distribution in all stores and offices. About 2,000 copies were used and an expenditure of $9 covered all expenses. The newspaper did the printing.

Which is all very interesting to the Club, Roy, and we think it will be equally so to your brother showmen. We particularly like your ads and the Wednesday matinee feature. Be sure to acquaint the Club with future show-selling activities out your way.

BEST FORMS OF THEATRE ADVERTISING!

"Whaddaya Mean, 'Best Fresh Eggs'?" Asks O'Connell!

By JACK O'CONNELL
Managing Director, the Vita-Temple Theatre, Toledo, Ohio

A Discussion By A Showman Of Wide Experience!

Jack O'Connell needs no introduction to followers of the Round Table pages. His past contributions have always been received with open arms, and, undoubtedly, his views on theatre advertising will be received the same way.

He put over the Vita-Temple in Toledo when sound first came along and its success was phenomenal.

Advertising his product and selling his shows played no small part in this success. Therefore, we feel safe in saying that O'Connell knows what he is talking about on the subject of "What Form of Advertising Is Best For the Theatre, And Why?" You'll more than enjoy reading this one because of the touch of humor which he injected.

"CHICK"

This little story leads up to an argument: Do your damnedest to get local columns in your home town papers. If you already have them, boost them. Give them a pat on the back now and then. Quote them in your ads. Congratulate the authors on especially good columns. And if you haven't any local column, get busy. Show the business office the mutual value. Maybe some of you haven't thought of it as a definite factor, but you will find it is a powerful form of theatre advertising, not only directly, such as when the name of your house is mentioned, but indirectly, by interesting the readers in that page, where you have spent your money.

A poultry dealer in a small town advertised "Best Fresh Eggs." His competitor put up a sign, "Whaddaya mean, best fresh eggs?" Were they laid by a pedigreed hen? Or under unusually sanitary conditions? Does it make any difference to the man eating one for breakfast whether the hen was white or black?

Advertising is fresh eggs. Are there any "best fresh eggs"?

Every form of theatre advertising in use today has its peculiar value. Actually, there can be no "best" kind, for what is especially effective for one production may be powerless to draw patrons for another.

Three Aims

Advertising should have three aims. First, it should sell the product. Second, it should promote good will for the institution. Third, it should be a boost for advertising itself.

If there is any form of theatre advertising that can accomplish these three aims more fully than the rest, undoubtedly it is the newspaper. This is the medium of the masses. Can there be question of the power of advertising that reaches forty million people a day?

The newspaper goes into the home. It is read by every member of the family, persons old and young, with varied conceptions and ideas of entertainment. Through no other medium can the theater reach such a wide assortment of tastes in theatre fare with a single piece of copy.

There are more than 2,000 daily newspapers published in the United States today. In one year more than $300,000,000 is paid to purchase copies of newspapers. Nearly a billion dollars is spent annually in newspaper advertising, many times the amount spent in any other medium.

Surely these figures are eloquent. And the reason for them is simple. The printed page, reaching the millions every morning and evening, sells the product.

Power of the Press

More than ever in recent years have advertisers come to realize the power the press has to bring them business. They have found that it is not only wise but imperative that they utilize the newspaper to get their product before the public. What has caused this steady gain in newspaper advertising, this inevitable trend toward spending more and more millions each year to publicize the nation's goods in the daily press? Simply this: More people are reading newspapers and people are reading newspapers more carefully.

Especially in certain fields has the increase been noticeable, and one of these fields is that of theatre advertising. A few years ago an exhibitor wouldn't think of spending a couple hundred dollars for a half page unless he had a stupendous super-attraction. It took an outstanding production, with plenty of big names, to convince him of the wisdom of buying a quarter page.

Today a half page ad the day before opening of a mediocre program picture is not unusual, and there are few first run houses that do not buy quarter pages or at least three-column ads every week.

In the selling of entertainment, just like in any other line, it is only results that count, and theatre men have found that the newspaper brings results.

I have cited two reasons why newspaper advertising pays—first, the obvious one of wide circulation, and second, because people are reading their newspapers more carefully, meaning by that that there are thousands upon thousands of "average" readers, those who have no personal interest in the theatre, who turn with real anticipation to the theatre page of their favorite publication day after day and read the advertisements and the theatre news.

This brings to attention another factor, one which might be classed as a third reason for the success of newspaper ads, but which more rightly is supplementary to and a part of the second one mentioned above. It is this: A good theatre page is a powerful boost for the advertisers.

A Good Theatrical Page

And what makes a good theatre page? Usually only one thing is necessary—a lively local column. Of course the New York dailies all have their individual local columns, and I need not mention the names of men who have become famous for writing them. But what I mean primarily is a local column for the small city daily, one that is large enough, of course, to have a theatre page and a theatre editor.

In a certain city in the west a half year or so ago the drama editor of a local daily resigned. A young feature writer, who was known to be fast with his phrases but never had had much of a chance to prove himself, what with chasing out on assignments between features, was given the job and the assurance that this time he would have absolutely nothing else to do but handle the theatre page. And how he did it!

He started a column at once that was the snappiest thing the natives had read in years. He devoted a great part of it to local theatrical gossip and the rest to notes about Hollywood and Broadway. His breezy style and deft humor were superb. They ate it up.

Here's the point: The people of that town became greatly interested in that newspaper's theatre page. Housewife, insurance salesman, high school boy, five-and-ten clerk, turned to the page to read this fellow's column. But did they stop with reading the column? Perhaps in a few cases, but the majority, as you will find is true with any other page of a newspaper, once they got on that page read some of the advertisements, some of the Hollywood stories, some of the local readers. All of which is what you and you and you want Mr. and Mrs. Citizen to do.

Here's Another Argument

One more argument for the newspaper. Look back a quarter of a century and ask yourself this question: Where would the motion picture industry have been without them? In the years of its infancy, when this powerful giant was a babe in swaddling clothes, struggling for its very life, what would have been the result if the support of the press had been lacking? A peep-show pioneer starving to death; an inventive genius devoting his life with little or no pay; actors sacrificing careers of assured success—martyrs all, but withal a little helpless. Might not their supreme efforts have been futile but for the all-powerful printed word, spreading the news of this marvelous new form of entertainment which was to become one of the greatest factors in the daily life of the American people?

This is not sentiment. I do not advocate the buying of space in newspapers as a return favor. It is business. The newspapers helped the struggling motion picture industry twenty-five years ago; they have helped it still more in the years since then and right now, when the theatre business, like all others, has suffered some cruel blows they can help most of all.

Salaries have been slashed; men have been thrown out of work; savings have dwindled, but the American people still read their newspapers. Audited statements will show that for the first quarter of 1931 comparatively few newspapers show any loss of circulation at all as compared to 1930 and the vast majority show a steady gain.

Three Different Sources

And advertising? Although there was a natural decrease last year, when all lines of business seemed to have hit bottom, in recent months it has stepped up again to a point where most observers predict the greatest volume of newspaper advertising for 1931 of any year in history. Great corporations have added millions to their newspaper budgets for national advertising in 1931. Local stores and business houses have contracted for the greatest amount of space they ever bought. Surely this is the soundest proof of their fath in the power of newspaper advertising to bring business back to the palmy days.

But the newspaper don't do it alone. Roughly, there are three other general classifications of theatre advertising, each of which has its peculiar value—outdoor, theatre, and radio. The first, outdoor, includes a score of old standbys, every one important and almost vital to the successful exploitation of a coming or cur-

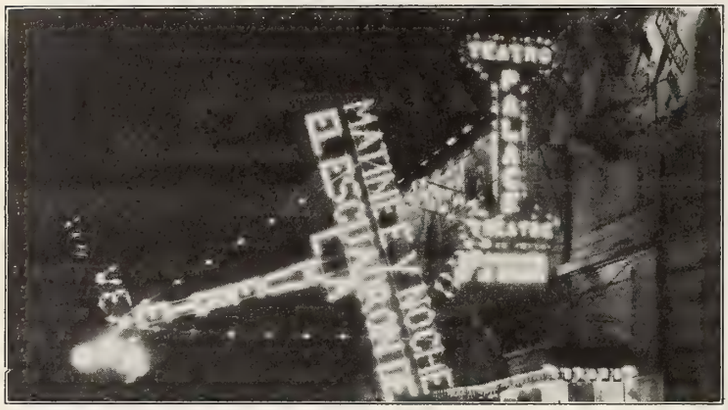
GUATEMALA CITY GOES AIR-MINDED!



The whole town gaped when Anker Bros., Warner-First National distributors in Guatemala City, displayed the title of "Dawn Patrol" in airplane design. The big electric replica was attached to the theatre marquee. While the Senor Manager's name is not included on the back of the photo it is the Club's hope that he will see the above and then identify himself.

Classified Pages Used To Advantage By Manager La Bar

Two effective co-operative classified ad pages in two newspapers were used by F. La Bar, Jr., manager of the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C., to publicize "Trader Horn." Each paper used a two-column six-inch ad on the classified page with a two column 8 inch ad on Sunday announcing the winners of the contest.

Beginning five days in advance of playdate, each paper ran the following detailed account of the contest, "Beginning today, the Times and Citizen will publish the names of ten of the beasts in 'Trader Horn'; the names being scattered through the Want Ads on this page. Tomorrow we will publish the names of ten more, and Friday, ten names, making a total of thirty, PLUS the names of the White Girl who is the object of Trader Horn's courageous search. Prizes will be awarded those who find and submit the names in the cleverest, most skilful manner." Many of the answers submitted showed that the contestants had taken unusual pains to make them a work of art.

The lobby presented an appearance of jungle atmosphere with cut-outs of the principal players garbed in their African attire. A cut-out in the shape of the map of Africa was covered with stills and copy. This hung directly beneath the lettered sign spelling out the title of picture.

This campaign is one which will lend color to any picture of this type and we are indebted to Manager La Bar for contributing it to these pages. His material has appeared in previous Club pages and we hope to have it continue for many issues to come.

Schmidt's Splendid "Skippy" Campaign; Also, Good-will Gag

Recent highlights of the work of William E. Schmidt, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Williamsport, Pa., and further proof of his enterprise, was a splendid campaign on "Skippy" and a Mothers' Day gesture which brought a world of good will to his theatre. This manager's campaigns are always worthwhile.

Thwarted in obtaining co-operation from Public Schools on account of the competitive situation in his city, Schmidt worked the parochial schools and distributed cards admitting the holder and 10 cents to a special Saturday morning matinee. In these schools the priests went around among the different classes and spoke about the picture.

Schmidt reached a greater part of the pupils in the Public Schools by sending a bannered calliope around at recess time and after closing, for distribution of the tickets. In several instances teachers and principals were also contacted. At another public school of 1,100 pupils, not under jurisdiction of Williamsport, Schmidt was able to secure full co-operation for distribution of tickets. Families were also contacted and about 150 of the 2,500 kiddies in attendance were admitted gratis.

Another stunt was an elimination "Skippy" character contest among the 24 Boy Scout troops in Williamsport. Each troop elected a "Skippy" and the 2,600 kiddies, through applause vote, elected a "Skippy" of Williamsport. The familiar cartoon strips with blank balloons were also used in connection with a newspaper contest. The paper pushed the idea by donating prizes and giving a front page announcement. Endorsements were also obtained from private citizens, after attending a preview performance.

Letters were cheerfully given to the theatre management and they were used in the newspaper campaign. Usually the captions read, "Remarks taken from letters received from some of Williamsport's leading citizens."

To commemorate Mothers' Day Schmidt promoted 400 flowers to be given away at a special observance of the day and a local printer supplied the credit stickers which were attached to each flower. Florist and printer received credit and the stunt was put over at no cost to the theatre.

Both the campaign and the latter stunt went over well, writes Schmidt, the former putting "Skippy" over with a bang and the latter proving a further means of cementing more good will between public and theatre. The Club is glad to know that you're so active, Bill, and will look forward to hearing more about what you are doing down in Williamsport.

"Whaddaya Mean, 'Best Fresh Eggs'?" Asks Jack O'Connell

rent attraction. Billboards. As long as billboards are permitted they will be one of the most logical and powerful places for theatre advertising to be displayed. This holds true in a lesser degree for posters. Street cars. A card on the outside of a street car, in my opinion, is one of the surest business getters you can use. Despite the encroachments of automobile and bus, surface cars by the thousands traverse the streets of this nation every day and are seen by millions. A card on the outside of the car is read not only by prospective passengers but by countless pedestrians, especially in the downtown districts where the cars go more slowly and the crowds are thicker. Window cards. Not as important as formerly, due to the trend of shopkeepers to keep their windows free of other people's advertising and to dress them up more artistically. Still good in the smaller towns, however, and in certain sections of larger cities. Handbills. Excellent for second run and neighborhoods if reliable distributors are employed.

Inside Advertising

Advertising within the theatre can be divided into two kinds, screen trailers and lobby and front posters. Value of the latter classification needs no emphasis, for anyone will agree that you must give the prospective patron some idea of what he is to see inside. Screen trailers, in the last three years, have become one of the most potent forms of theatre advertising. Their production has come to be a science in itself. Countless customers, viewing a thrilling scene from next week's attraction, have resolved then and there not to miss such a great picture.

The Trailer Slant

Two factors should be borne in mind, however, in connection with the value of trailers. First of all, although they create a customer desire to come back in the majority of pictures, there are some productions which are so constructed that any brief cutting would do little justice, and in fact quite likely do harm, to the whole. As an example I cite "Disraeli." Probably not one patron in fifty would be at all impressed with a trailer scene showing Arliss addressing parliament, but taken as a whole the picture became an engrossing composite of splendid story, marvelous direction and superb acting. The second factor is the "spotting" of a trailer on the program. Remember the power of contrast, and study the rest of your program before picking a spot for the trailer. If your coming attraction is to be heavy sob stuff don't screen the trailer right after the news reel has shown a couple hundred bereaved wives and children wailing around the mouth of the mine where their husbands and fathers are entombed. One week it may be better to run it just before the feature; the next perhaps it should go ahead of the comedy. If you are a believer at all in audience psychology you will observe these points.

Radio, the new advertising power, while in a sense the theatre's competitor, also can be used to excellent advantage as a medium to bring patrons to the box office. Millions who never will set foot in a New York playhouse now hear the foremost stars of stage and screen over the air. The result, of course, is that they get the urge to attend the theatre, thus profiting local stage and cinema houses. Direct radio advertising by local theatres also has proved markedly successful, especially in cases where actors from a current show can be used.

Thus we end up right where we started: Are there any best fresh eggs? Probably, but even if there aren't, thank God they're all fresh! Next to worthwhile productions, advertising is the element most vital to the success of a theatre. Every form is good. Play hard the kinds that reach the most people, but play them all.

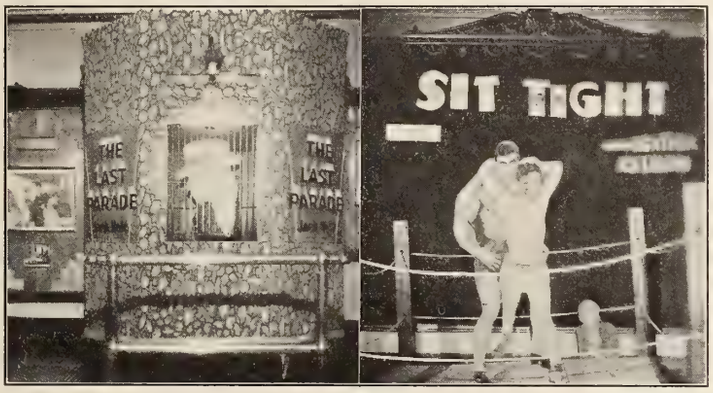
It pays!

Binstock's Lobby Displays Help Him Sell Astoria Shows

Paul Binstock, manager of the Fox Astoria Grand Theatre, Astoria, L. I., whose contributions to these pages are always interesting, sends us photographs of his two most recent lobby displays on "Last Parade" and "Sit Tight."

The display on "Last Parade" was produced by covering the inside box office with crepe paper bearing resemblance to a prison cell. You will note by the accompanying cut that the metal grill work of the box office gives the effect of prison window bars. A cut-out of Jack Holt inside the window and lithograph one-sheets completed this display. The entire cost came to about $1.75.

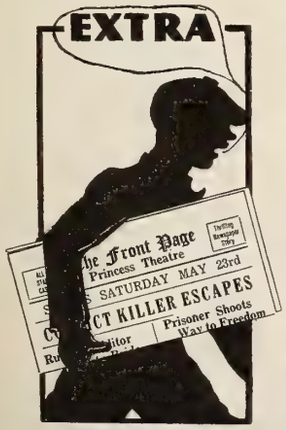
Both of the above mentioned displays can be made at very small cost and it is our opinion that either one of them is effective. Thanks, Paul, for passing these along and don't forget future contributions to the Club.



Tom Cleary Waged Splendid Campaign To Sell "Front Page"

A splendid campaign was recently put over on "Front Page" by Thomas Cleary, manager of the Princess Theatre, Montreal, Canada, which brought most gratifying returns to the box-office. Newspapers, ballyhoos, contests, windows and many other novelties were introduced to put this picture over the top.

Two newspapers were tied-up for the running of a "young reporters" contest, one paper printed in English and the other in French. Front pages of each carried a red ink imprint and in following pages readers were run on the rules and awards governing the contest. Liberty Magazine was also used to good advantage, stickers bearing Liberty's endorsement of the picture being pasted on the front page of the newspapers. Liberty's newsdealer trucks, with banners, were also used for circulation among city streets. Additional effort included, 14 Benjamin news trucks; a parade of newspaper boys, about 200 strong; department store tie-up for Front Page Sales; 15,000 newsboy heralds; a radio tie-up; hat store tie-up on Menjou; special street car with band, and the use of a novelty herald such as the one reproduced on this page. This is a hilhouette cut of a newsboy with slash under arm for insertion of a miniature newspaper.



C. E. Duffy, late of the Premier Theatre in Sherbrooke, Quebec, who forwards this account of Cleary's activities to the Club, states that the opening fully warranted all of the good work; and, after digesting all of the above we must agree that all of this must have had the desired effect. Thanks, Duffy, for sending in this material and if the boys are too busy to write it looks as though we will have to depend on you to keep the Club posted on both yours and Cleary's future show-work.

Count Nuts And Win Ticket Good Draw For Phillips

A nut counting gag was successfully used by Ralph Phillips when playing "Cracked Nuts" at the State Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn.

For one week in advance, there was a large display of peanuts and pecan nuts in the lobby with small cut-outs of Wheeler and Woolsey. Prizes in the form of guest tickets went to persons estimating the nearest correct number of nuts in the display. This stunt proved fairly popular and also stimulated a lot of interest in the picture.

In addition to the above some of our members have made very good tie-ups with the many nut stores which can be found in any city these days. Thanks, Phillips, for passing along your gag and keep the Club informed on future show-selling in your territory.

Johnnie Ely Says "Joy Month" Stunt Is Real Gold Mine

What appears to be a corking means for boosting business over a dull period is sent the Club by Johnnie Ely, advertising director of the New Lillian Theatre, Clarksville, Tenn. Johnnie tells us that he and his associates have tried a number of different ideas but that this one was worth its weight in gold.

A reproduction of the coupon used by Ely for the promotion of his "Joy Month" will be seen on this page and it tells its own story. The whole idea behind the scheme is to make the holder of each coupon attend every change of picture during the month. Should they miss seeing just one picture it would cost them a whole month's pass. The gag is, of course, that plenty of the coupon holders did this very thing, thereby making it easier on the house; but, at the same time it was a most effective means of arousing interest on account of the splendid award.

We agree with Johnnie that if this idea is pushed in the right way it will prove a knockout. Any scheme that will pack a house for an entire month is certainly worthy of consideration and we have no hesitancy in passing this one along for some Club member to try out during the lull in Summer trade. As Johnnie says, a good percentage of the patrons miss the consecutive showings, but that in view of a grand award of a three-months' pass take intense interest in being a winner. And there are other worthwhile awards to shoot at. Thanks very much, Johnnie, for sending this one in. We are sure that your brother showmen will thank you for bringing it to their attention. The Club hopes you will continue to keep it informed on future activities.

REACHING THE RURAL COMMUNITIES!

Theatres who depend to a large extent on the outlying rural patronage might profit by the experience of others similarly situated.

In view of the fact that most every home has a telephone, it ought to be well worth the expense and effort to take every family in the local telephone directory and add them to your mailing list.

Your regular programs and announcements may bring many new or otherwise irregular admissions to the box office and develop them into steady patrons.

Good roads, plus the family chariot, have already solved the ancient problem of bringing them into town. But with the additional incentive of knowing about a worth-while attraction, they can be brought out more often than the usual Saturday night shopping trip.

Fred Meyer's Front A Model For House With Limited Lobby

We are publishing on this page a reproduction of a photo showing how Fred S. Meyer, general manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, dressed the front of his house when playing "The Secret Six." Note the excellent effect produced in spite of the fact that the Alhambra's entrance appears to be limited in size. Every available inch of space is forcibly expressing an inducement to attend the show.

Meyer informs the Club that the floral wreath placed in the center of the entrance (one of gangland's quaint gestures to a victim) was the largest ever used in his locality and that it attracted an unusual amount of attention. May we also call members' attention to the effective display of the electrically lighted title running horizontally across the big number 6.

He also sends along some material on "Seed" which we are unable to reproduce at this time, except to mention that the personal endorsements of John Boles were used as an advance plug on lobby cards and played up in a big way through shadow box display.

The above is certainly getting great results from limited lobby space and we are certain that all members will agree that Meyer did the job in an exceptionally fine manner. It is passed along by him with the hope that some other manager, handicapped by lack of space, will also be able to work out ideas along the same lines.

Amos Discovered A Good Way To Test A Radio Broadcast

A good method of testing circulation of a theatre radio program was recently discovered by Charlie Amos, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., when publicizing "Three Girls Lost," before he left for a much needed rest.

During the program Amos would have the announcer break in with: Sorry to break into this number but we have just been requested to broadcast a description of 'Three Girls Lost'." This was followed up with an explanation about the girls in the picture, playdates, etc., and an announcement that free tickets would be given to the first five persons 'phoning the theatre. The latter gag was used over a program one week in advance of the former. As additional means of publicizing this picture Amos had cards placed in windows with "REWARD" printed in large type. Other copy followed.

When playing "Tarnished Lady" Amos sent personal letters to socially prominent people, giving a detailed account of the picture and star and also used the telephone to a limited number of prominent women. The messages played up Miss Bankhead and the society angle. Special stills were also used in department stores and radio announcements made four days in advance.

The radio testing stunt appears to be a good one, Amos, if the response by telephone is not so great that it swamps service completely. But, it's a good way to test for listeners, anyway. On account of Tallulah Bankhead's social position in the south and elsewhere, Amos' method of getting a message to the socially prominent can be strongly recommended.

Smith's Ballyhoo For "Millionaire" A Novel Attraction

A street ballyhoo with an auto was effectively used to advertise "The Millionaire" when this picture was played by J. C. Smith, manager of the Georgia Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

One of the high-priced cars was secured, a touring car, and a chauffeur in a regulation chauffeur's outfit. In the back seat was a man in full dress suit and silk hat surrounded by money bags (stuffed with paper).

As the car was driven slowly through the streets, the man in the open (top down) touring car was tossing out a few pennies at a time. And since he had 1,500 of them, the pennies lasted quite a long time.

The car was also bannered with signs reading, "A Million Dollars' Worth of Fun! George Arliss in the modern comedy romance, 'The Millionaire'—Rialto Theatre (Playdates)."

We don't doubt, George, that the stunt created a lot of attention and helped sell this picture. There's lots of live show stunts being pulled in your town. Let's hear some more about them.

Striking Display For "Front Page" Made By L. J. Mason

A striking lobby display, considerably out-of-the-ordinary for the size of the town, was recently made for "Front Page" by L. J. Mason, manager of the Palace Theatre, McAllen, Tex.

Using the masthead of the McAllen Press with the words "Extra" on either side, the page contained nothing else but copy about the picture—and the title of the picture appeared in bold face type at the top of the page. A reproduction of this page was enlarged so that it extended from the floor to way above the box-office. In fact, this was placed against the box-office with an opening to permit the cashier to carry on contact with the patrons.

In addition to copy appearing on the enlarged front page, there were also stills from the picture. Cut-out letters spelling out the title of the picture were hung on wire and strung in front of the theatre over the sidewalk.

We don't doubt that this front was instrumental in selling a flock of tickets for Mason and he is to be commended for his initiative in constructing such an effective one. We would guess that this is but the forerunner of more and will expect further revelations from this member from the Southwest.

THE LIONS ARE COMING!

On the occasion of the arrival of the M-G-M Lion, Leo, at Orangeburg, S. C., the well known ballyhoo was greeted by the local Lions Club and J. I. Sims, manager of the Reliance Theatre. Leo was presented with an honorary life membership in the organization.

Theatre Programs!

Continuing the program series after a short lapse, we offer, in this week's selections three widely different types of house organs. Furthermore, they come from points far apart, which naturally widens the scope of this service.

Comments regarding this Club feature indicate that many managers are getting valuable tips merely from noting what the other fellows are doing and as a direct result they are improving on their own programs week by week. Naturally, this is gratifying to know because it clearly proves the value of this form of intercommunication between members. It also adds emphasis to our Club slogan.

We sincerely trust that many other showmen will take heed of what is new in program styles and alter their own accordingly, providing the changes conform to local conditions and method of theatre operation.

If you were among those who asked to be placed on the Program Exchange list, please don't get impatient if the house organs are not beginning to arrive. The large number of managers who asked for this service made it necessary for us to cover a wider territory in allocating which houses are to place them on their lists. Giving you a limited wide assortment is better than flooding your house with hundreds of programs which you would find of little or no use. In addition, we are sending out from Club headquarters a batch of programs to each new applicant in the Exchange. These may come in handy pending the regular receipt of the house organs selected.

The Fox Alcazar Theatre out in Bell, California, hits a real novel slant in the make-up of their inside spread. A mere glance will reveal this fact to the most skeptical of program producers. And the best part of this unique layout is the fact that it does NOT involve additional expense in the printing of the programs. You will note that the reading matter is all set on the same measure, thereby avoiding expensive runarounds.

We don't mind admitting that this program appeals to us and we want to congratulate whoever is responsible for contributing a really different angle to house organ make-up. Other managers would do well to work out something similar especially those houses where a program is a piece of paper with the current and coming attractions printed without regard for appearance, appeal or sales ability.

We have had many requests for attractive programs since starting to reproduce them, but here is one that will probably be in greater demand than any of the others.

NEXT WEEK —Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, June 21, 22 and 23—LEO CARRILLO, LOLA LANE and a Great Cast in the Underworld Smash Hit, "HELL BOUND"

The Hollywood Theatre is one of the links in the Manhattan Playhouse chain and we suspect a bit o' Dave Lustig in the way the program is made up. You must know Dave to get this slant correctly, and "Lusty" himself would know that we would never take a crack at anything he turns out.

Taking into consideration the theatre, the class of patronage and the location, we feel safe in saying that this program fills the bill to perfection. It has many outstanding features, particularly the newsy looking flash that is injected into the front page and carried out right through the rest of the little folder.

The listing of the week's attractions is so carefully segregated that it never clashes with the balance of the flash in the program itself. This is due, to a great extent, to the showmanship of those responsible for this house organ and others of a similar type used throughout the circuit.

The program of the Park Theatre is one of those house organs turned out by a printing service specializing in such work. Naturally, they can carry a wide assortment of cuts, etc., because they use them over and over on the many theatres they serve. Houses making up their own program and printing them locally could not afford to carry the many half-tones needed to pep it up.

This type of program is attractively printed on good stock and carries a colored effect on the front cover. Obviously, the patron is hardly concerned whether a thousand other theatres are using the same thing. If this type of house organ meets with the management's and patron's approval then everyone is happy.

We might make the suggestion that the manager of this house utilize the front cover for a friendly message to his patrons or something along similar lines. It would warm the patron to the program a little more intimately and vice versa.

Silverman Sends "Skippy" Over Big In Schenectady, N. Y.

Some time ago we mentioned that Sam Silverman was in the midst of a rousing "Skippy" campaign at the Rivoli and Pearl theatres, Schenectady, N. Y., and now we have a report from him that results exceeded his fondest expectations.

Sam secured some excellent co-operation from the Parents-Teachers' Association in all neighborhood schools and while there were no schools in the immediately vicinity of the Pearl, permission was obtained from Principals to distribute special throwaways to children at lunch hour. Some unexpected publicity was obtained for the Pearl when the kids from a Polish school marched up to the lobby in an organized unit. A large ice cream company also donated all "Skippy" cups free of charge.

Sam particularly mentions co-operation given him by the ice cream company (General Corp.) in the event that some brother showman also has an opportunity to effect this tie-up. He states that the local manager of the cream company told him to pass the idea along with a view towards getting other managers to co-operate. It is possible that other cream concerns might also be interested but in this case special advertising matter was made to go with the cups. A good tip to your fellow members, Sam, and these are the kind the Club likes to receive—if that will answer your question concerning suitable material. Let's hear some more.

Lloyd Offers Club Timely Tips On Use Of N. P. Mat Service

Two pertinent reminders, applicable to Club members in the smaller cities, are forwarded by Otis V. Lloyd, manager of the Rivoli Theatre, Two Rivers, Wis. One is, don't forget the mat service that your newspaper carries; the other, make a friend of your composing room foreman and make-up man.

The accompanying cut showing ad of the Rivoli is not reproduced for the sake of copy, etc., but to illustrate what can be acplished in the coming room of your local printer. Lloyd's foreman friend makes a point of saving all borders, mats, etc., that he thinks serviceable. The original of this ad was used by a department store and consisted of three boxes instead of two. The foreman cut of one of them, made a few other alterations and what happened is herewith presented with Lloyd's compliments. And the net result, as we see it, is a hand drawn effect, made without the help of an artist.

The congratulatory ad was especially made up for an edition the local paper ran on the opening of a new community building, donated to the city by a prominent citizen. Most of the other advertisers were using straight type ads, but Lloyd determined to have his outstanding. He scurried over to the Newspaper Mat Service and after rummaging through the files came upon a mat that fit the occasion like the paper on a wall. It was an illustration combining Art, Music, Motion Pictures and the Home. Lloyd tells us it stood out in this edition like a sore thumb, making some of the other advertisers green with envy because of the fact that they used far greater space with much less effect.

Congratulations
It gives us great pleasure to add our name to the many firms who are on this day offering their best wishes and congratulations to

COMMUNITY

Dedicated Today
ENTERTAINMENT and RECREATION fill a very definite need in the life of any community, and we feel certain that with the addition of the Community Building, the citizens of Two Rivers can boast of the finest entertainment and recreational facilities of any city its size in the country.
The Rivoli theatre welcomes the new Community building and may it further the great cause to which we are ourselves pledged.
Two Rivers Theatre Co.

Every theatre manager likes the appearance of hand-drawn ads used in the big-time towns, but, of course, the unavailability of an artist makes that type of ad practically impossible for the fellows in the smaller cities. Newspaper boys have a mind to display their artistry if they are approached in a diplomatic manner and they will go the limit for you if given an appreciative response. Help them out by getting your ads to the shop on time, marking them, etc., to save him a lot of further trouble; make your layout and copy the exact size you want so as to eliminate extra composition and let him know verbally that you appreciate the care and attention that he personally gives in setting up the ads. If you do this, it is the Club's opinion that you will get by as nicely as Otis Lloyd appears to be doing, even though there is no art department available.

A very worthy contribution, Lloyd, and we are certain that other members will benefit through your experience. Just one other matter—don't forget to tip the Club off on your future activities up in Two Rivers.

SERVE THEM ICED DRINKS!

This is a great time to serve your patrons with iced drinks of all sorts. Erect a neat counter or table in the most appropriate spot and put an attentive girl in charge.

Tie-ups involving the free distribution of these drinks can be effected through your local merchants. But even if you must stand the cost yourself you will find that it is hardly enough to discourage so fine a service to your patrons.

Tea, coffee, ice water, soda, etc., are all feasible. Give them any one or all, just so long as you serve them something along these lines.

Revival Nite Flops For Lafayette; Says Norwich Too Blase

Regarding "Revival Nights," which have been commented upon from time to time in these pages, list to a tale that's told by Murray Lafayette, formerly manager of the Broadway Theatre, Norwich, Conn., in which Murray hints that there are indications of a "blase" (we're using the word as he sends it) attitude among the patrons in his community.

Right before our eyes is one of the attractive four-page folders he made up in connection with the revival of a long list of popular pictures—and when we say popular, we mean it—and these were distributed via house-to-house, in the theatre and by newsboys. A special trailer was also run to boost the novelty.

But, as Murray states, "here is the peculiar slant: after two weeks of consistent plugging . . . I got back THREE requests! Now will you please explain that—and then tell one yourself?"

However, he brightens considerably when relating a little stunt he used to exploit "Charlie Chan." A small throwaway, measuring about eight inches long by two and a half inches wide bore the message, "Charlie Chan Says—(then followed some Chinese hieroglyphics)" and the balance of the copy stated that a free ticket would be given to the first fifty persons solving Charlie's message, also mentioning theatre and playdates.

Maybe those Norwich patrons are "blase," Murray, and what they'll stand for in Squeedunk, they'll pass up in your town. We guess that to be the answer. Anyway, you had the satisfaction of trying out the stunt at very small cost. Your "Charlie Chan" gag has a novel twist and with help from the local Chink laundry any Club member ought to be able to work this one out. Judging from the fact that few people understand or can read Chinese the toll exacted from the box-office should be but slight.

Smart Contributes Series Of Stunts On Two Current Pictures

A series of stunts on "Skippy" and "City Lights" were recently put over by Hugh J. Smart, manager of the Montgomery Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., which considerably enhanced the selling values of both pictures.

With "Skippy," Smart felt that a big opening day would insure good follow-up attendance so he arranged with a bakery for distribution of 8,000 coupons with loaves of bread, admitting adults for 25 cents up to 6 P. M., on opening day. The coupons carried cuts and sales copy and printing was paid by the bakery.

A second tie-up on "Skippy" was made through a shoe store merchant who used 110 inches in both papers announcing that a free ticket would be given each boy or girl purchasing a pair of shoes. The store paid for all ad space and tickets. This same gag was used in connection with "City Lights" except that free tickets were limited to Friday and Saturday shopping. The store also used a window display of cut-outs, announcement cards and stills.

Both of the above gags worked out nicely for Smart and they can be effected by any other enterprising showman. The bakery stunt insures a wide circulation in the home and the shoe store tie-ups were calculated to boost kid patronage. We shall look forward to hearing more from Manager Smart in the near future.

Film Company Is Promoting New Kid Club; At Philly Now

As their part of a more or less concerted move being made by many in this industry to stimulate kiddie attendance, Educational Pictures, with the cooperation of the Hohner Company, have combined to promote Music and Fun Clubs in connection with showings of "Terry-Toons."

Actual work in organizing one of the clubs got under way recently in the Cameo Theatre, Philadelphia, a house belonging to a circuit of twelve theatres owned and supervised by Sam Hyman.

Children with no previous experience may become members of the organization and will be instructed in the intricacies of the "toy symphony," a new idea in rhythm which has been popularly adopted by many music and experimental schools throughout the country. On account of these endorsements it is thought that the Clubs will receive backing from schools and other local educational institutions. Educational Pictures Company has prepared a full line of accessories, including membership buttons, etc.

By the time the above appears on a Club page Sam Hyman will undoubtedly have put his Club across and we are going to look forward to hearing more from him as to how matters are progressing. What say, Hyman, can we depend upon you for this information?

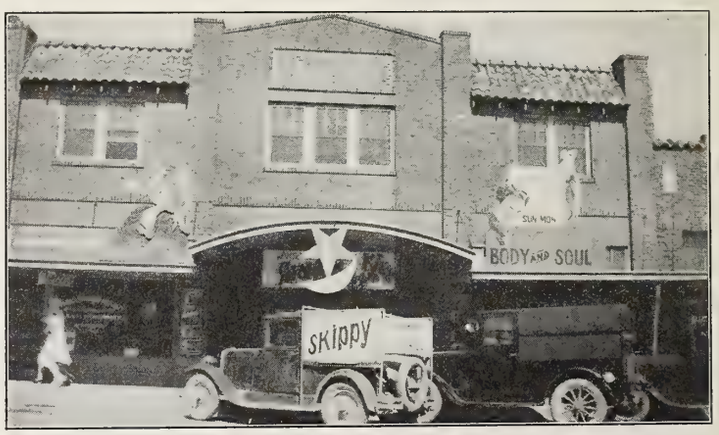
Being Versatile Comes Natural To Mgr. Jack Wright

When playing "Tom Sawyer" at the Grand Theatre, Fort Stockton, Texas, Manager Jack Wright effected a corking tie-up with the local schools which created considerable excitement among the pupils and stimulated business to quite an extent.

For two days Wright succeeded in having entire chapel time devoted to getting over the idea of the contest. The life of the author of the book was described in detail for the purpose of giving material for the writing of essays. Prizes of tickets to the Grand were given for the best compositions.

We are reproducing, along with a photo of Wright himself, a photo of the Grand's front. Note the cut-outs on top the marquee which were entirely made by this manager. The house also does its own printing of circulars, throwaways, etc. Among matter enclosed by Wright is a cigarette card used to good effect with the showing of "Dishonored." This was used in a tie-up with a tobacco manufacturer and has been already described in this department.

Jack Wright is a new contributor to the Club, having only recently sent in his membership application. It is evident that he is an enterprising manager and we are going to look forward to hearing from him regularly. Now don't forget, Jack, to keep the Club posted on show business in Fort Stockton.



Weiss Puts Across Two Live-Wire Stunts On Current Pictures

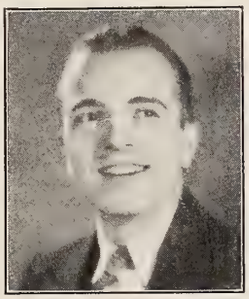
Two live wire exploitation stunts were recently engineered in connection with showings of "Tarnished Lady" and "Millionaire" by H. H. Weiss, manager of the Fairfax Theatre, Miami, Fla., which reflect much credit to this enterprising Southern manager. These Southland showmen are on their toes!

Taking advantage of the fact that Miss Bankhead's aunt resided at Miami Beach, Weiss arranged to have a mammoth sized telegram delivered to her in person. A following issue of the local newspapers showed a three-column cut of Mrs. Bankhead receiving the telegram from two messenger boys. Copy beneath the photo gave a detailed account of the circumstances, as well as mentioning the title of the picture, theatre and playdates.

Another phase of his campaign on the above picture consisted of a newspaper contest built around the published four drawings of the star. Copy underneath the sketches told contestants to clip the drawings and look through later issues of the paper and select the advertisements best fitted for insertion of sketch. They were allowed to paste it on the ad, supplying necklines providing that contour of illustration in ad was not altered. Over 500 replies were received in competition for the honor of winning the announced prizes and tickets.

With "Millionaire" Weiss ran a radio contest asking this audience "What They Would Do If They Were a Millionaire?". The public was asked to send their replies either to the radio station or theatre. The radio station made four announcements for four days in advance with about five minutes allotted to each announcement. The theatre tied-in with a local bank for prizes in the way of savings accounts for first awards and the theatre put up second class prizes. Over 300 letters were received on the contest.

Round Table Biographies!



Edward C. May

This manager literally began his career in show business while still wearing rompers, for he confesses to the direction of backyard circuses for which he charged an admission of items ranging from three pins to five cents a head. Incidentally, these performances were for the benefit of an infants' hospital.

His first actual experience in a theatre took place at the age of 15, when he was given part-time engagements in a legit house. May was extremely adept with the organ and one engagement led to another until at the age of 20 he'd played in most every theatre in western New York. He then became organ demonstrator for Wurlitzer and several other organ concerns, eventually gaining the post of feature organist for the Schine Circuit. During 1926-27 he opened some 20 theatres in New York and Pennsylvania. At present he is manager of the Liberty Theatre, Rochester, N. Y.

While the organ was in its zenith May developed an M. C. complex and specialized in vaudeville, radio and other special promotional ideas.

James Lucas

At 12 years of age James Lucas began his theatre career with a broom, sweeping out the Queen Theatre, Edgewood, Texas, and from out of that dust came the show-germ that shaped his destiny. Ever since a kid, he states, his ambition was to work in a theatre because he thought the sale of "happiness" was a "great thing."

From sweeper he rose to operator at the Queen, then to usher and stage duties at the Palace, Dallas; then, successively usher and doorman at the Majestic, Melba; Old Mill and Fair Park Auditorium, Dallas, and at the Ritz Theatre, Wellington, Texas. He then changed his line and went to the post of assistant manager at the Rig and Rex theatres, Borger, Texas, and also took over advertising for this house. Later, he became house manager of the Plaza Theatre, Blackwell, Okla., and then was promoted to the managership of the Palace Theatre, Ardmore, Okla. After a turn here he managed the Strand at Gallup, N. M., and was assistant manager of the Lindsay and Palace Theatres, Lubbock, Texas. He is now at the helm of the Rex Theatre, Pampa, Texas.

James P. Chase

It was just following family tradition and a better than average singing voice that started James P. Chase in show business, and at the age of 15 he began his career as one of illustrated song warblers—at a time when the big price was 10c an admission.

Before settling down and becoming a confirmed theatre manager, Chase's experiences varied with stock shows, vaudeville, and he was one of the early spotlight singers. He and his wife have played practically all the circuits, mostly Chicago and West, but from time to time he returned to the "front end." In 1922 he quit the road completely, going back to the George Mann Theatres, with headquarters in Eureka, Calif. He was with the Mann organization for seven years, part time as district manager, and following this association became manager of various Coast theatres. He has worked for the National, Bert Levey and Blumenfeld Circuits. For the past two years he has managed the Oaks Theatre, a first-run Blumenfeld house in Berkeley, Cal.

J. Glenn Caldwell

Born in Harrison, Ark., in the year 1902, J. Glenn Caldwell began his career in the amusement business as projectionist at the age of 16 and at 20 years of age became a full-fledged theatre manager. He was educated at the Harrison, Ark., High School and also took an engineering course at the University of Arkansas.

Caldwell has been associated with the Ozark Theatres Corp. ever since he entered this business and has been manager of the Princess Theatre, Aurora, Mo., and the Concord Theatre, Springdale, Ark. He entered the field because of an opportunity that came his way and he states that if he had to start all over again he would again choose this profession. He is active in civic affairs in his community, being a charter secretary of the Rotary Club, a Mason, and wears a Kappa Alpha fraternity insignia, the latter a leading college fraternal organization. At the time of this writing there is no thought in Caldwell's mind of ever leaving this field for another.

Adolph H. Buehrig, Jr.

Lure of theatre managership stole upon him while a member of the cast of the St. Louis Municipal Opera Company, states Adolph H. Buehrig, manager of Loew's Century Theatre, Baltimore, Md., and he straightway swapped a song act for a job as Chief Usher of another St. Louis theatre. He did this, he tells us, because right then he realized that no other profession could ever possibly carry the same amount of appeal. The bottom of the ladder was his aim at that time for the good reason that he wanted to learn what was going on in that end.

From the post of chief usher he went to the Loew organization where he obtained a position as chief of service; thereafter, he rose step by step until he became a manager of a house in the Loew Circuit. During his association with Loew Theatres, Inc., Buehrig has managed some important houses, among them being Loew's State, St. Louis; Loew's Valencia, Baltimore, and Loew's Century, Baltimore; the latter his present location. He admits that it took a lot of hard knocks to arrive at his present position, but that this is forgotten in triumph of accomplishment.

I. M. Hirschblond

Born in Germany in the year 1888, I. M. Hirschblond immigrated to America at an early age and was educated in the public schools of this country. However, his greatest educational effort, Hirschblond states, was derived from "the school of the great wide world." His present post is treasurer-manager of the Traco-Theatre Co., Toms River, N. J.

During his experience in show business Hirschblond has never worked nor been connected with any circuit-owned houses, which makes him eligible to become a member of that small, unique organization of independent managers. He has either managed independent houses or has been part owner of them. He confesses to having accomplished a reasonable amount of success in managing theatres and sets down a few simple rules for winning out: "Give the public what it wants and let it know you've got it (he means a real show all the time). Be sure to have first-class projection and a clean, comfortable place, and they're bound to come in."

Hirschblond is married and the father of two children. He is also active in local fraternal organizations.

COME ON IN, THE WATER'S FINE!

CHARLES VOLK is the assistant manager of the Manhattan Theatre in the Harlem section of New York City, and is sponsored for membership in this Club by his manager, S. Yurman. His last position was chief usher at the Uptown Theatre, so it's evident that he's on his way up the ladder. With Yurman to coach him it surely won't be long before he'll be running a house of his own.

J. S. SILBERSTEIN is the publicity-director of the Keith-Albee and Orpheum Theatres, Huntington, West Va., and it is a pleasure to extend the Club welcome to this new member. In his capacity we feel sure that he is in the know as far as show-selling ideas are concerned and we'll be on the look for some of his ideas to pass along to the rest of this large army of showmen. We'd also like to have one of your photos, Jayess, so that the boys will be able to recognize you.

FLETCHER L. SHEA is the manager of the Star Theatre, Concord, N. H., and the name of this new member from the New England States will probably be familiar to many in this organization. We certainly have associated Fletcher as the author of past ideas on show-selling that have clicked and we are now going to ask him to pass some of them along for the benefit of his fellow members. We can also use one of your photos if you will enclose it in your next communication.

J. C. Lots of fellow Round Tablers down in your city, J. C., and when you make your rounds don't forget to pass along the Club regards to any of them you may happen to meet. In the meantime, don't neglect to keep us all informed as to what you are doing for show business.

B. S. In fact, Florida is chock full of Round Table members and many a live show tip has been contributed to these columns by this contingent. All we ask of you, B. S., is to keep up the good work. Why not send along that photo for our files?

G. FRYBERG was recently appointed manager of the Gaiety Theatre, Tientsin, China, and how this boy got so far from Broadway we'd like to know. Anyway, let us inform the rest of the Club that this new member worked his way to the top of the ladder from a clerical position and we can take it for granted he knows his way around. He tells us that there's not much doing out his way in the matter of stunting but that he'll send along anything that might prove of interest to his fellow members. That's fair enough!

And don't forget to keep us posted as to what you are doing to put shows over.

LEO ALBERT BUSKEY is the house manager of the Rialto Theatre in Utica, New York. We are well aware that theatre trade in his city is to a degree dependent on mill activity and since the depression we can guess that all Utica managers have to get out and dig to keep the cash register singing a merry tune. But these conditions are generally productive of real merchandising ideas and we'll therefore be looking for some samples of Buskey's work.

———Wear Your Club Pin ! ! !———

CHARLES MITCHELL manages the Capitol Theatre, Leamington, Ontario, Canada, and he's another new member from the Dominion to send along an application to join this group of showmen, whose aim is to pass along to each other a variety of live wire ideas on the art of selling shows. All we ask of you, Charles, is that you do your part and we'll keep up our end of the job. Also, send along that photo next time you write so we can give you the right sort of send-off.

PERCY LONG manages the Lyric Theatre, Watertown, South Dakota, and Long is another Publix man that's going to bat for this great organization of managers in the way of exchanging one good show-selling idea for another. What was that last stunt you pulled, Perc? Shoot it in.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

CHARLES T. LYONS is the manager of the Hollis Theatre, located in the heavily populated New York suburban city of Jamaica, L. I. We know that Charles is in a theatre zone where competition is keen and therefore productive of the kind of showmanship that brings 'em in. Tell us about it, Lyons, when next you write the Club. Your brother members are waiting to hear from you.

TONY DeMARE is in charge of the Cameo Theatre, Highland, New York, and we're sure that this new member will have some interesting show-selling experiences to send along to his fellow Round Tablers. Don't forget, Tony, sit down to the typewriter or take that fountain pen and let the Club know what you are doing to sell the Highlanders. And if you have a photo of yourself handy next time you write, send it along.

———Wear Your Club Pin! ! !———

H. V. HARVEY is the manager of the Pajaro Theatre in Watsonville, Calif., and in addition, is owner of this house. With a free rein to sell shows, Harvey should be in a position to send along some interesting reports on his activities and we will be on the lookout for them in the near future.

VIRGIL LEWIS is advertising man for Jake Rosenthal's Iowa Theatre, Waterloo, Iowa, and you've already seen an example of the kind of work that this team is capable of turning out. He didn't know whether we let advertising men in this organization but upon our assurance that he was acceptable his application came right along. Convey our best regards to Jake and be sure to let the Club know what you and he are doing to boost summer shows.

He has worked up from the ranks, and it is predicted that he'll soon be managing a house of his own, now that he's become an active member of this organization. Our regards to your boss, Keen, and be sure to keep us posted.

Seems like there are so many peppy members from that state that it only remains for this newcomer to prove that he is just as capable as his brother members. How about it, Ralph, are you going to live up to this or must we take it back? Time will tell.

THE RELEASE CHART

Productions are listed according to the names of distributors in order that the exhibitor may have a short-cut toward such information as he may need, as well as information on pictures that are coming. Features which are finished or are in work, but to which release dates have not been assigned, are listed in "Coming Attractions." Running times are those supplied by the distributors. Where they vary, the change is probably due to local censorship deletions. Dates are 1930, unless otherwise specified.

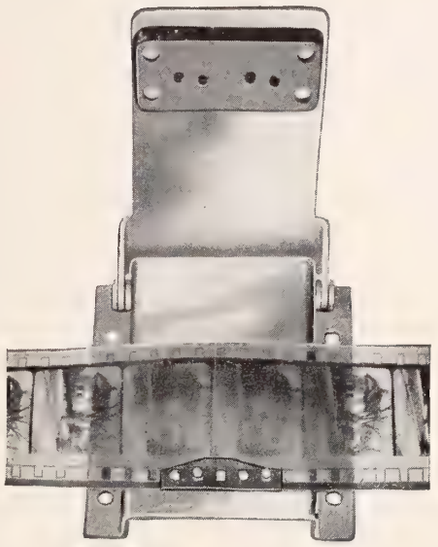
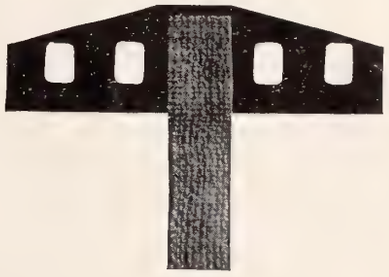
An improved method of blocking out splices in sound film





Now the sound track need no longer be painted out at the joints to silence splice noise. The Eastman Sound Film Patch enables the laboratory worker to block out joints with greater ease, speed, and uniformity.

The patch is made of light-weight, opaque film. For convenience in handling, it is provided with a quickly detachable finger tab. With the aid of this tab, a simple but accurate registration block, and cement, the patch is quickly applied to the film.

Because of its design, the patch is practically inaudible in projection. At the same time it obscures a minimum of the sound record, and assures fast, accurate treatment of all splices. These factors make the patches and the block a valuable feature of Eastman Service.

Doing S. R. O. business despite terrific heat at Rivoli, N. Y. after three months of capacity at $2 Criterion, N. Y. Complete sell-out every performance at two-a-day Carthay Circle, Los Angeles. Equalling all-time records at long run United Artists, Chicago. MAURICE CHEVALIER in ERNST LUBITSCH'S brilliant production, with Claudette Colbert, Charlie Ruggles and Miriam Hopkins.

"MURDER BY THE CLOCK"

Smash hit at world premiere Paramount Theatre, N. Y., Hollywood Reporter says: "PARAMOUNT has a knockout in this one. Beats any picture of its type. Exhibs can push it to the limit." With William Boyd, Lilyan Tashman, Regis Toomey and Irving Pichel.

MORE! MORE!

Hollywood insiders wire: "PARAMOUNT has best MARX BROTHERS riot yet in 'MONKEY BUSINESS.' 'SILENCE,' with Clive Brook, Marjorie Rambeau and Peggy Shannon, previewed and is strongest drama in months. 'HUCKLEBERRY FINN,' with Jackie Coogan, Junior Durkin, Mitzi Green, Jackie Searl and Eugene Pallette, finished and will surely top 'SKIPPY' highs. 'DAUGHTER OF THE DRAGON,' with Anna May Wong, Warner Oland and Sessue Hayakawa, sensational novelty. PARAMOUNT has big edge on everybody with wonderful 1931-32 product." All the Big Ones—

TRADE MARK
Paramount Pictures

A STATEMENT ABOUT "AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY"

BIG, important pictures are essential today to get big box office money. PARAMOUNT presents the MOST IMPORTANT MOTION PICTURE IN YEARS—"AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY."

THEODORE DREISER'S book, upon which the picture is based, has enjoyed a tremendous world-wide sale. The picture has had reams of front-page publicity. It would be a big-money natural even if it were not the splendid production that it is.

AS to its quality, Motion Picture Daily says: "'AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY' is a thundering, vital drama. A monument to the power and technique of talking pictures."

HOLLYWOOD FILM MERCURY says: "'AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY' will make exhibitors more money than any product of PARAMOUNT previewed this year."

HOLLYWOOD REPORTER says: "Surely destined for big things. It cannot fail to draw—by its very title and author. With the names of von Sternberg and its cast—exhibitors are sure of business."

"AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY" was directed by Josef von Sternberg, with Phillips Holmes, Sylvia Sidney and Frances Dee. It will open at the Criterion Theatre, New York, for a long run at $2 admission.

WE predict that "AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY" will do more to bring boom-time business to theatres than any picture released this season.

Chapters of Adventure

THE passing of Charles O. Bauman recalls chapters of adventure, romance and whimsy in the background of the industry. In the days when the motion picture theatre was young Mr. Bauman and his partner, Mr. Adam Kessel, were a merry pair of swashbuckling entrepreneurs, who with a certain dash and daring were the instruments of important contribution to the progress of the art and the industry.

It has been the joy of one of the chroniclers of the annals of the screen to assert that the Reverend Mr. William Sheafe Chase of Brooklyn, long famous censorship advocate, was indeed responsible for the coming of the once celebrated Bauman-Kessel interests into the world of the motion picture. In the sultry June of the remote year of 1908 the Canon of Christ Church achieved triumph when Governor Hughes of New York signed the bill which forbade race track gambling in New York. Mr. Kessel, the industrious bookmaker at Sheephead Bay, was repeatedly arrested and stripped of his betting rolls. Mr. Bauman was his sheet writer. They gave up the track and by a curious and long sequence of trivial events became film exchangemen. It was in the days of strife between the dominant Patent Company group and the independents. The business was any man's game and they made it theirs, with aggression and vigor.

From this grew in time the once famous New York Motion Picture Company with which the late Mr. Thomas H. Ince, acquired from Universal, and Mr. Mack Sennett, lured away from Biograph with a luncheon at Luchow's, by Mr. Bauman, rose to their greater fame. Again it was Mr. Kessel and Mr. Bauman who elected to bring Mr. Charles Spencer Chaplin to the motion picture to work in Keystone Comedies, after their discovery of him in a skit on the bill at Hammerstein's. The screens of the world once were filled with their prospering brands, Bison, Broncho, Domino, Kay-Bee, Keystone, and NYMP.

In time the Kessel-Bauman picture interests merged and waned with the rise and fall of Triangle and now nothing remains but the diffused influences of their works, and moments of reminiscences like this.

Fairbanks and Action

FROM Hollywood comes a tale that Mr. Douglas Fairbanks has decided that the talking picture does not permit of enough action to keep him interested and that he will henceforward devote his efforts to travelogues. Assuming the accuracy of the quotation, one can not escape the conclusion that Mr. Fairbanks has merely thought of something interesting to do and has arrived at a rationalization afterwards.

There can be, however, some benefit in consideration of anything that Mr. Fairbanks seriously says about motion picture technique, more especially when it involves action. He has long been the screen's supreme exponent of the doctrine of action. It was his impression that motion pictures should move which ordained his whole screen career.

It will be recalled that when Mr. Fairbanks first reported at the Fine Arts studios in California in 1915, Mr. David Wark Griffith was far from pleased. After screening the rushes on "The Lamb," Mr. Griffith observed to Mr. Fairbanks that he had best report to Mr. Mack Sennett who was "fond of jumping jacks." Mr. Griffith's disapproval led to the cloistering of Mr. Fairbanks under the attentions of Miss Anita Loos and Mr. John Emerson, which resulted in much betterment of screen technique and the creation of some exceedingly important box office values in formative years. An acid commentator might remark that thereby Mr. Griffith in a backhand manner made one of his biggest contributions to the art.

Meanwhile, even if Mr. Fairbanks does feel that the "100 per cent dialogue picture" is too limited in action, it does not follow that the art of picture making has to be committed to any such a policy of sacrifice of its basic component. Likely indeed the processes of evolution will in time eliminate some of the talk and noises and restore pictorial content and action. Just now, unhappily enough, the industry is probably much too busy trying to make a living to adequately concern itself with making pictures—paradoxical as that may seem.

But there can be no doubt among earnest students of the art that after properly discounting the novelty era of sound the motion picture has lost no small fraction of its universality of appeal with the acquisition of chatter and words. It can be won back by taming the words.

Standing for It

THE week's revelations of the abuses and extortions charged against certain agents of the operators' union in Chicago, incidentally as much against the members of the union as against the theatres, brings us once again face to face with the realization that the motion picture industry appears to have an infinite capacity for standing all manner of malpractices. The policy of temporizing and accepting anything in order to "get by" today always brings its morrow of reckoning. The "peace at any price" policy of operation inevitably has its price. The industry in Chicago seems to have been paying that price for a long time. In this special instance, however, the problem is rather one of Chicago politics and Chicago business in general than specially of the motion picture industry.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

THE NEW YORK TIMES, which editorially approves most all of the other arts more than the motion picture, and which has not yet this year passed an opportunity to indicate that attitude, takes its habitual pleasure this week by indicating that Wall Street knows more about running the picture business than Broadway and Hollywood, in the expression reproduced below.—THE EDITOR.

Tightening Up In Hollywood

The proverbial extravagance of Hollywood may soon pass into history. A dolorous introit for this threatened change is chanted by the Los Angeles Times. It seems that certain Wall Street gentlemen, harboring the inartistic idea that it is not necessary to take a scene seven or eight times and then not use it in the picture, have been snooping around the premises and making slashing motions with blue pencils.

The high cost of production and of well-paid but inactive scenario writers was only the beginning of the difficulties for these financiers. Even after a film was completed at a ridiculous figure, consideration for the delicate sensibilities and fickle tastes of movie-goers sometimes compelled the numerous "executives" to hide the masterpiece from public view. It will be hard to convince the people who put up the cash that this is good business.

By the time the hard-boiled visitors from Wall Street are through moving pictures will be a more mature and probably a better organized business. The Hollywood producers have their excuse, according to the Los Angeles Times, in the cry, "Bankers are not showmen!" But the financial backers are said to smile back: "It's a good thing for everyone that we are not."

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR takes its usual calm editorial view of the problems raised by the controversy between Mr. Theodore Dreiser and Paramount concerning the fidelity of their picture, "An American Tragedy," as a screen transcription of his novel. It says—

A Case for Film Freedom

Mr. Theodore Dreiser recently complained that the film version of "The American Tragedy" altered and modified his story so much as to spoil it. Mr. John Galsworthy, apparently, is not going to run the risk of similar things happening to the talkie reproductions of "Loyalties" and "Justice," which are shortly to be made by a British company, for he has stipulated that no changes shall be made without his approval, that all added dialogue must be written by himself, and that he shall have the final word in the choosing of the casts.

Now, one can easily sympathize with the desire of these eminent writers that when their works are transferred to the film they shall not be vulgarized. And it must be regfretfully admitted that when Hollywood and Elstree alter a story from what was the author's original conception, they were frequently, in obedience to their saccharine idea of public taste, alter it for the worse.

All this must be very distressing to any self-respecting author. But it would not be in the best interests of the cinema to fail to recognize that these things, unpardonable as some of them are, represent mistakes made in a legitimate cause, the cause of the cinema's freedom to mold its material in accordance with its needs.

Since this is so, perhaps it would be better for all concerned if film versions of plays and novels were merely announced as "adapted from" or "suggested by" the particular works in question, as is done frequently if the title is changed.

The Beacon-Journal, daily newspaper at Akron, Ohio, volunteers the information that the "movie lover" serves a useful purpose after all. He enables a poor wife to forget for a little while that her husband isn't like that.

THE VANCOUVER STAR has the following to say regarding the report of Peter White, special commissioner, that an American combine has ruled the industry in Canada and regarding the proposal that the quota be 25 per cent of Empire product for the first year, rising in successive years to 35, 45 and 50 percent:

No loyal Canadian can read that report without a sense of shame—shame that a group of foreigners should have been permitted for so long virtually to enslave Canadian theatre-owners and picture exhibitors in their own country. . . .

Nor did the tentacles of the octopus grasp merely the picture business. They reached out to the stage proper and shut the doors of Canadian theatres against British traveling companies.

"You shall see Hollywood's distortions of British institutions and social customs; you shall have American ideas and practices crammed down your throats, but you shall not see, so far as we can prevent it, the Empire to which you belong in the productions of that Empire," they virtually said.

The period between the 25 per cent minimum and the 50 per cent maximum is too long. The lower percentage might be advisable for a short period in order that the British producers should have time to organize the supply for the Canadian market—for other provinces are likely to take similar measures.

THE WHEELING NEWS, of Wheeling, West Virginia, presents a discussion of why the people of that community should patronize their home theatres, and, having a Pennsylvania situation to play against, makes a striking case. It is to be gathered that this constructive bit of publicity was inspired by N. D. Dipson for the upbuilding of his theatres in those parts. This is an example of constructive institutional publicity.—THE EDITOR.

Wheeling Movies Best

Wheeling, as a center for moving picture entertainment, is not appreciated as much as it should be by theatregoers.

There are too many people who drive to Pittsburgh or some other city "for dinner and a good movie."

As a matter of fact, these people could get as good a dinner and see a better movie if they stayed in Wheeling. Even a movie of the same title would, in many cases, be better in Wheeling than in Pittsburgh.

When we say a movie of the same name will probably be better in Wheeling than in Pittsburgh or some other Pennsylvania or Ohio city, we mean just that.

The reason for this seemingly ridiculous statement is: Pennsylvania and Ohio both have a rigid board of censor—West Virginia has none.

Don't get the idea that every picture shown in Wheeling is uncensored. Every now and then a local show will get a censored print. But if they find the cutting too drastic they demand a new print.

The moving picture industry has advanced to such an extent that censor boards are thought by many to be useless. About a year ago all leading motion picture producing companies entered into a definite plan intended to attain and maintain a proper moral character in screen entertainment. This plan, commonly known as "The Production Code," prevents any company from producing an immoral picture. And with such a code in the working, a censor board certainly seems obsolete.

N. D. Dipson, president of the Capitol Enterprises, and who now controls four of the principal theatres of Wheeling,, says this about censorship: "State and National Boards of Censorship served their purpose in the days of irresponsible film producers, but today the entire film industry has an especially adopted code, to which they rigidly adhere, and should need only the patrons' tastes to guide their production of screen entertainment."

The lack of a censor board is not the only reason why Wheeling theatres have good pictures, however.

Wheeling people should be satisfied with seeing first-run pictures as they are produced, not second-run pictures as they are cut. And the best way to do this is to stay in Wheeling.

STAGE PLANS HOTTEST CHALLENGE OF LAST FOUR YEARS FOR SCREEN

Seek Wrigley's Aid in Financing Kinograms Reel

Latest developments in the Kinograms-Allied newsreel include attempts of Capt. G. McL. Baynes, Kinograms chief, to interest a group of Chicago business men, including William Wrigley, Jr., in financing Kinograms for a sum reported to be close to $250,000.

Those Chicago business organizations which would go in on the plan would receive in return space in the Kinograms-Allied sponsored ad newsreel.

Conferences were held at Chicago, starting on Thursday.

Oscar Hanson, who has been prominently identified with Allied affairs of the reel, resigned this week ostensibly to accept "a position too lucrative to pass up," and reported to be in Canada.

MGM To Remake "Lullaby" on Plea Of Helen Hayes

Helen Hayes' heart skipped a beat or two when she saw her initial picture venture, "Lullaby," this week on the Coast, and after a vigorous plea that MGM junk the film and reproduce it at her expense, Louis B. Mayer is understood to have agreed to a second version under direction of Clarence Brown. Edgar Selwyn directed the story in its present form.

Miss Hayes, it is said, was backed up by Charles MacArthur, her playright husband who supplied the dialogue, in her plea that showing of the film would destroy her chances for success in films. A revised story now is in preparation.

Reported Maloy Threat Breaks Up Grievance Meet

Only five men, all deputies of Tom Maloy, appeared at this week's special meeting of the Chicago operators' union, which was called to discuss 24 grievances of members against Maloy, the indicted dictator of the union. The session was broken up, it is understood, by Maloy's threats to revoke memberships of those attending on grounds of treason.

No Date Set for Astoria Closing

Despite reports to the contrary, Paramount Publix has not determined upon a closing date for its Eastern studio at Astoria, Long Island.

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president, upon his arrival at Hollywood this week, emphatically denied that Robert T. Kane, French production chief, would take charge at Astoria. Kane merely is coming from Nice, France, for a vacation and conferences with New York home office officials.

"Lifetime" Taboo at Universal

Pressure of the M. P. P. D. A. and important film executives is credited by The Hollywood Herald as the influencing factor which prompted Universal to shelve "Once in a Lifetime," that irreverent stage play treatise on things cinematic.

Stock Company Revival Is in the Making

Theatre Guild's Campaign Nets 200 Per Cent Increase in Season Subscriptions

A revival of "the road" is in the making. And if it materializes, motion picture theatres in the principal keys, and their environs, may expect in the fall and winter considerably more competition from stock companies than they have experienced since the day four years ago when talkers began to convert to pictures many followers of the stage who previously had insisted upon dialogue with theatre entertainment.

The theatrical field, it is felt, has reached such low ebb that something must be done, through concerted effort, to save what little is left of the legitimate and to give to it new life-blood for a strong comeback when the new show season starts in September. The novelty of talkers has worn off since the last theatrical season was launched one year ago, it is believed, and because of this, new hope is held for rehabilitating the stage as used by stock companies.

The League of New York Theatres has appointed a committee, of which Equity's president, Frank Gillmore, is a member, to study the problem of reviving the road and to make recommendations as to a solution.

Actors Equity Association and the Theatrical Press Representatives of America are sponsors of "revival of the road" movements, the Press Representatives launching its campaign with the slogan: "Let's make the country more theatre minded!" Equity, however, belittles the efforts of the Press association with the announcement that "in their eagerness to build up an admittedly good cause, the Theatrical Press Representatives have gone too far in this particular instance." Others in important Broadway theatrical circles likewise feel that the Press association has some ulterior motive in mind, possibly the promotion of jobs for its press agent members, in jumping upon the band-wagon which already had started rolling under auspices of the League of New York Theatres.

John Golden, a leading theatrical producer, has suggested that "while individually none of us could afford national advertising to promote a 'revival of the road' movement, we could afford representation in important magazines by pro-rating expenses."

However, whatever may be accomplished by the many and divers theatrical interests in furthering the movement, immediate and principal competition to motion picture houses will come from the Shuberts and the Theatre Guild. Where Equity and the Press Representatives are spotlighting their

CHICAGO UNION INQUIRY REVEALS AMAZING STORY OF TERRORISM

Maloy Regime Backed by Force, Records Say

International Alliance and American Federation Both Barred From Interfering With Officials

Pieced together out of hundreds of pages of testimony given to the Cook County grand jury investigating the Chicago projectionists' union, comes one of the strangest stories of extortion and terrorism enforced against a major reputable business in the nation's second largest city that the amazing postwar annals of Chicago ever have yielded.

The records of the Cook County state's attorney's office, prosecuting criminal indictments against five of the union's officers, besides a city hall official, and an exhibitors' association president, say that the regime of Thomas Maloy, business agent of the projectionists union, was not only oppressive and distasteful to Chicago exhibitors, against whom it levied, but was equally distasteful to numbers of its own members and to its parent labor bodies, the International Alliance of Motion Picture Projectionists, and the American Federation of Labor.

Those already indicated are Tom Maloy; Joe Maloy, head of the city licensing department for motion picture operators; Tom Reynolds, president of the operators union; Ralph O'Hara, operators' union organizer and business agent of the theatrical janitors' union, as well as Tom Maloy's bodyguard; Frank Clifford, Maloy's assistant business agent; Emmett Quinn, union treasurer, and Jack Miller, president of the Exhibitors Association of Chicago.

"Rebels" Quickly Handled

Assistant State's Attorney Charles A. Lounsbury is in charge of the prosecution of the case, aided by Charles A. Bellows, assistant state's attorney.

Discord within the Chicago operators union and manifestations against its officials were frequent and violent, the state's attorney's records show. Rebellious members were dealt with swiftly and effectively. One of them, Jacob Kaufman, was shot to death two days before he was to testify before the grand jury in its investigation of the union.

Heading the internal enforcement division of the present union regime, according to the records, is one Joe Mace, who, with his staff, saw to it that insurgent movements within the ranks were not permitted to gain headway. Opposition to the policies of the administration was quieted with brass knuckles and blackjacks, in evidence at every meeting of the union.

The parent organization—the International Alliance and the American Federation of Labor—were not permitted to interfere with local rule of the union and its policies any more than were its individual and lesser members, the records say. An official of the International, who once thought it would be a good idea if he came to Chicago and looked over its projectionists local, never stopped here at all. "Chicago is our territory," he was told, "keep on going." And he did. An official of the American Federation of Labor, who harbored similar intentions, received no better and perhaps more definite treatment.

Mace knew his job, and was an efficient and relentless enforcer, highly regarded by his superiors, the records indicate, as his salary of $9,000 a year testifies.

Rebellion outside the union's ranks was just as simple, apparently, to suppress. There are any number of instances on file in the state's attorney's office to justify this statement.

There is the case of Milton Krueger, owner of a small theatre in the suburb of Hinsdale. Krueger, faced with the necessity of closing unless overhead could be reduced, laid off one of his operators and Krueger, because he held a union card, assumed that he could replace the man himself. The union warned Krueger, ordering him to replace the second operator, but because it meant either operating at a loss or closing, Krueger continued to serve in his own projection room, according to the records of the case. Several days later in the Paramount exchange shipping room, where he was picking up his show for the night, Kreuger was slugged and beaten, then shot through both legs and kicked about the face by unknown assailants. Several days later his theatre was bombed while an audience, comprising mostly women and children, sat in the theatre.

In investigating this atrocity against Krueger Tom Maloy has been indicted on a charge of conspiracy to commit a felony and conspiracy to injure the property of another.

There is also the case of the Cicero exhibitor to whose theatre was assigned a "permit" operator who, later, incurred the wrath of Maloy by balking him in a minor union matter, according to the records. Maloy ordered the exhibitor to discharge the permit man and, when the exhibitor refused, slugged him and threatened him with a revolver, according to the state's attorney's information. The exhibitor was still defiant, but when a black powder bomb was discovered in his theatre one night by the manager, he capitulated. Maloy then proposed, according to testimony, that the operator could retain the assignment on payment of $2,000.

Then there is the case of the exhibitor who came to Chicago from New York as manager of a large West Side theatre. One of his operators reported for work intoxicated every day for two weeks, and the exhibitor appealed to Maloy for a new man.

"What you need to learn," he was told, according to the records, "is that you're in Chicago now. Chicago ain't New York. Beat it."

There is also the report of an exhibitor whose operator for two years was an authority on the particular type of sound equipment in use at the exhibitor's theatre, and had become valuable largely through the owner instructing and supervising the operator's initial work with the equipment. At the end of two years the man was ordered transferred to a different theatre. A new man, wholly unfamiliar with the sound equipment at the house, replaced him and the first night, in spite of constant watching by the exhibitor, caused several hundred dollars' damage to the sound equipment. The exhibitor appealed to the union officials, and was not only refused relief from the inexperienced man but was threatened with physical harm for "interfering," says the state's attorney's office.

Inasmuch as the cases cited are not isolated instances, but are actually typical of a prolonged, citywide rule, in the terms of the records, the question arises: "How did they get away with it?" The state's attorney's office has an answer to that one, also.

Political Alliances Cited

The present union regime, according to the prosecutors, had powerful political alliances with the city hall and the state capitol at Springfield, which, up to the last election, prevented any investigation of the union's tactics from progressing. Complaints to constituted authorities have been numerous for the past two years, but the union's political allies saw to it that all complaints were either quashed or forgotten.

On the enforcement end, according to the prosecutors, was the union's alliance with "Scarface" Al Capone. It was this alliance, the prosecutors say, which permitted Maloy, a diminutive man with a weak face and a strong vocabulary, to dominate the union and the city's exhibitors.

When Capone, several years ago, became interested in the financial possibilities of exploiting the labor unions, he assigned as his "muscle man" one Danny Stanton, whose duty it was to cut the Capone interests in on union revenues, the prosecutors declare. Stanton was an old pal of Maloy, both graduates of the old Regan's Colts' gang, an organization of "back o' the yards" hoodlums, who flourished on petty larceny and terrorism in pre-prohibition days in the Stock Yards district. Stanton, by his own admission to prosecutors, has been having "business conferences" with Maloy three times a week regularly for the past several years. Stanton's "enforcers" for the union are reputedly recruited from the Capone gang of sluggers and gunmen. It was the reputation of Capone for ruthlessness, together with the impossibility of obtaining official cooperation in any investigation of the union (up to the last election), which forced Chicago exhibitors to

See Solution by Mayor

Chicago's exhibitor problem of two men in a booth may be unexpectedly solved, with the information that Mayor A. J. Cermak may act on a recommendation of assistant state's attorney, Charles Lounsbury, that Joe Maloy, under indictment, be dismissed and licenses of 300 projectionists be revoked.

The move would automatically eliminate the second man in the booth, since the 570 men on the union books when they were last closed and those whose recent licenses are satisfactory, would not be sufficient to provide for two men in the Chicago projection booths.

No criminal action is to be taken against the indicted officials until September, because of plans for further investigation which are expected to result in additional indictments.

Exhibitor Slugged, Shot; Theatre Bombed

Capone Interests Were "Cut In On" Union's Revenue, Records Show; Political Intrigue Revealed

CITY AND STATE POLITICAL TIEUP

submit to the Maloy administration of the union, say the prosecutors.

This year, a city administration pledged to combat racketeering, and a state of mind among Chicago exhibitors which bordered on desperation, brought matters to a head and the grand jury investigation was begun which resulted in the recent indictments of the union officials.

Chicago exhibitors not only are forced to maintain two men in projection booths, but must also pay them wages which are from thirty to sixty per cent higher than elsewhere. Faced with the usual declining summer grosses and the current general depression, Chicago exhibitors realized they must either obtain operator relief this year or close their theatres.

Scores of them testified to the grand jury—and provided proof—that their legitimately conducted businesses returned them nothing. They had reached the end of the rope, and faced with business ruin they threw to the winds the old caution or fear of Maloy and his administration that had restarined them in days when profits were to be had regardless, the prosecutor's office explained.

Their attitude, this year, is reflected in the often-heard expression, "I'll run my own projection machines, and what Maloy does can't matter because I'm not making any money on my theatre, anyhow."

Theatre Made "Arsenal"

And many of them are doing that now—running their own projection machines. There is Harry Nepo, owner of the Lindy theatre at Madison and Paulina streets, in the heart of Chicago's rough West Side. Nepo's theatre, since the dismissal of the operators, has, of necessity, been converted into an arsenal. The owner in the projection room is armed with two "quick-shooters." So is his wife, down stairs in the ticket booth.

Further impressions of embattled Chicago filmdom are gleaned from sights of Chicago's best known exhibitors being followed by bodyguards everywhere they go since testifying against the union in the grand jury investigation. The theatres and homes of others are constantly guarded by detectives working out of the state's attorney's office.

Maloy was elected to his office of dictator of the union with sluggers standing over the voters and police squads manning machine guns to keep the opposition out of the meeting hall, according to the testimony of a former union member.

When sound installations opened the way for the employment of two operators instead of one, the real opportunity presented itself.

The union officials called a conference with leading exhibitors and their representatives. It was held in the offices of a nationally prominent circuit theatre organization here. Police stood at the entrance of the meeting room and, as the union representatives entered, relieved them of a bushel basket full of "artillery," the records showed. The conference continued in the circuit offices all day and all night and, after adjournment to a downtown hotel, all the next day. When it was ended the union had its signed agreement for the employment of two men in the sound booth, and this was enforced on all exhibitors as sound was installed in theatres, regardless of their lack of participation or representation at the meeting.

The city hall alliance made room in the bureau of gas and electricity for Joe Maloy, brother of Tom Maloy. He became examiner of motion picture operators, who must be licensed by the city before they can work. The new agreement doubled the demand for operators. Joe Maloy, it is charged, licensed unqualified men to meet the new demand.

Seek New Indictments

Examination of witnesses in the Chicago investigation of the projectionists union will continue in succeeding weeks with a view to further indictments. The allied states offer of assistance to Assistant States Attorney Charles E. Lounsbury and his assistant, Charles A. Bellows, also assistant states attorney, is not taken very seriously since the investigation is now essentially concluded. President Abram F. Meyers of Allied proffered the services of his "personal representative, Al Steffes."

The state's attorney freely predicts convictions, carrying penitentiary sentences, from the evidence already in hand.

Unofficially, it was learned, no action is contemplated against Electrical Research Products, as it was stated that Erpi was the unwilling victim of the Maloy administration.

The men thus licensed were not admitted to membership in the union. Evidence shows the books of the union were closed 19 years ago with a membership of 570. The new men, who, it is charged, paid as much as $500 for their licences, were given theatre assignments by Tom Maloy on special working permits, by the terms of which they were obliged to return ten per cent of their salaries to him, in lieu of paying the comparatively modest dues to the union.

Permit men, although the least qualified in many instances by training or experience, received the best paying theatre assignments and frequently supplanted the accredited union members on jobs, according to the charges. The ten per cent of their salaries returned to Maloy cannot be accounted for on the union's books, the prosecutors say, and they add that it is their belief that much of it found its way to Capone, who also is alleged to have levied on Maloy's official income of $50,000 annually from the union.

Additional revenue, it is charged, was derived in the form of tribute exacted from exhibitors for the settlement of labor disputes. Jack Miller, president of the Exhibitors Association of Chicago, was indicted charged with acting in collusion with the union officials in the collection of this tribute, although Miller states that his negotiations with the union were in the best interests of the exhibitors and with their knowledge. He has received a vote of confidence from every prominent Chicago theatre executive who recalled that Miller, this spring, was alone responsible for the defeat of the union-sponsored bill in the state legislature which would have made the two-men-in-the-booth edict a state law.

Miller himself stated: "If any benefit to the industry results from this investigation, what happens to me is of no consequence."

He has received a letter from the Hays office, signed by Charles Pettijohn, assuring him of the organization's confidence in him. Unofficial sources report Miller's indictment resulted from his refusal to divulge to the grand jury information pertaining to alleged payments to union officials of sums exceeding $65,000. The money is alleged to have been collected from Chicago exhibitors and turned over to the union for settlement of labor disputes.

Various equipment companies also were obliged to pay tribute to the union, it is charged, not the least of which was Electrical Research Products.

Evidence gathered by investigators revealed that Tom Reynolds, president of the union, was on Erpi's payroll as a "chief engineer" at $8,500 annually, and that Emmett Quinn, treasurer of the union, who received no official union salary, was paid $150.50 for every sound apparatus installed in Chicago theatres.

Reynolds, who is regarded as a mere figurehead in the union, received a salary of $5,000 annually from the union. Reynolds is frequently referred to as Maloy's "yes man." His appointment as an Erpi "chief engineer" is regarded by the prosecutors as an evidence of Maloy's ability as a "blackjack salesman."

Frank Clifford, Maloy's assistant, drew $250 a week in salary from the union, and Ralph O'Hara, Maloy's bodyguard, identified as "organizer" for the union, collected a salary of $150 a week. O'Hara is also business agent of the Chicago Theatrical Janitors union. His tactics have earned him the enmity of certain elements in both unions in the past, and at least two efforts to "put him on the spot" were discovered and frustrated last year. A carload of Cicero gunmen followed his automobile once, but were outwitted. Another time a plot to kill him on a local golf course during a supposedly friendly game was discovered in time to keep O'Hara from his appointment on the links.

Lavish Testimonial Dinner

Incidentally, a lavish testimonial dinner for Tom Maloy was given a year ago in July at the Stevens Hotel in Chicago, on the eve of the union organizer's departure for London as one of two American labor delegates to the International Trades Union Conference. The affair was sponsored by the union and Maloy was presented with a purse of $25,000. About 2,000 attended—exhibitors, labor leaders and politicians.

The current grand jury investigation of the Chicago situation was described by the prosecutors as "the most vicious" they ever had been assigned to. Attemps to intimidate and terrorize witnesses and to bribe officials and their associates were numerous and flagrant, they said. Offers were made to attaches of the state's attorney's office to provide the union with the names and evidence supplied by witnesses, it was charged, and, in spite of precautions, much of the testimony given to the grand jury, and the identity of the witnesses, was back in the union offices the night of the day it was given, the prosecutors state.

A trade paper reporter who was responsible for publication of a story on one of the union's activities, was said to have been warned not to write unfavorably of the union again and threatened with being "run out of town" in the event he disregarded the warning. Incidents such as this are now being used by the prosecutors as evidence against the union officials, and assistant state's attorneys identified with the investigation and prosecution now are freely predicting convictions. A huge supply of evidence has been collected against the union, and Chicago exhibitors, who at first were skeptical of the investigation and doubted that it was serious or ever would be pursued to its conclusion, are now confident that they have been rid of their most oppressive burden.

Already their war cry of "Maloy must go!" has changed to this hymn of thanksgiving: "Maloy is through."

The White House and The Screen

By FRANCIS L. BURT

ASKED to say what star appears on his screen with the greatest frequency, the average exhibitor might name any one of a half dozen, but the most popular star in the country is a man who draws no salary from any film producer—the president of the United States.

Hardly a week goes by but what the picture of the president is thrown upon the screen in every house in the country which has a newsreel service. No star's intimate life is more closely followed, no star's movements are pictured with the same frequency as the man who is the temporary tenant at 1600 Pennsylvania avenue, Washington, D. C., known to the general public as the White House.

Actor and audience is President Hoover, as have been, in fact, all our chief executives since President Roosevelt kicked out the old stereoptican which adorned the White House—he was the first, by the way, to use that term for what had theretofore appeared on presidential stationery as the Executive Mansion—and installed a motion picture projector.

Roosevelt, Taft, Wilson, Harding, Coolidge and Hoover all were picture fans. They liked to see the movies and most of them knew how to operate a motion picture camera. Strangely enough, however, it has been the "first ladies" who have been the most ardent motion picture takers; most of them in recent years have owned cameras with which they have pictured their president husbands.

Up on the second floor of the White House is what is called a reception room. Here are shown the pictures of the day. A screen at one end, a Western Electric movietone projector at the other and a few seats—sometimes only two, for Mr. and Mrs. Hoover, occasionally more when White House attaches or guests are invited to attend, and there is a "little theatre," the most exclusive in the land. The White House is equipped with two portable projectors, costing in the neighborhood of $23,000, which were installed about two years ago to replace the silent projectors used until that time.

Shows are given usually on Monday and Thursday nights at about 9 o'clock. They last for an hour or an hour and a half. The films are run by Howard I. Johnson, an enlisted man in the bureau of navigation of the navy department, detailed for the work because of his knowledge and aptitude. The pictures usually are newsreels, of which President Hoover is very fond, interspersed with an occasional feature—a mystery film, if you have it, please.

When the president travels, if it is to be a long trip, arrangements are made to show pictures on the train. A screen at one end and a portable projector at the other and the president is all set for a most enjoyable evening. He's just like the rest of us, you know; likes detective stories, mystery plays, a good cigar, and newsreels, the last not so he may see himself but so he can get an idea of what is going on in the world.

President Roosevelt liked the new fangled movies a lot; so did Taft; so did Wilson, Harding and Coolidge. Mostly they liked any kind of picture if it wasn't of the mawkish, pulling type, but the mystery has had as much attraction for the men who have headed the administration as for their fellow citizens in humbler walks of life.

Now for the other side of the screen. The president is the biggest news in the country, both from the standpoint of the newspapers and from that of the motion picture industry as typified in its newsreels. So anything he does is a good story and a good picture.

Until a fire partially gutted the office wing of the executive mansion on Christmas eve, 1929, the photographers shared the anything-but-luxurious quarters of the newspapermen, much to the disgust of each. When the offices were rebuilt, however, by President Hoover's orders the picture men were given their own quarters, fixed up "to beat the band," as were the newspapermen.

Most of our presidents have been anxious to cooperate with the representatives of the public in the form of newspapers reporters and cameramen, with the possible exception of Wilson who never could see why the people were so interested in anything an individual did.

It's a lot easier taking pictures at the White House now than it was a few years ago. If you "play the game" according to the White House rules, most any kind of a picture can be arranged for. Only accredited cameramen can get pictures, however; woe betide the outsider who tries to stick a camera in front of the president's face for a closeup. He'll receive some rough treatment and go home minus his plates, lucky if his camera is still intact.

But for the recognized picture makers all that is necessary is to see "Dick" Jarvis, well-loved head of the secret service detail at the White House, the duty of which is to guard the president.

The beautifully decorated grounds of the White House afford many delightful settings for pictures. Most any place was all right until sound came along with its microphones, and caused the still photographers to howl that all they got in the way of pictures was mikes. So Dick Jarvis got busy and with the aid of the cameramen picked out a spot for a permanent setting on the lawn at the rear of the White House, surrounded by trees and shrubs, and a White House carpenter built a frame for the mikes so they would be out of sight.

For use in bad weather, a second setting has been provided in the White House itself, a room 50 by 25 feet, where a sufficient number of 1,000 watt incandescants, usually eight, can be installed to give the necessary light. However, if the party to be pictured is too large for these quarters, the famous East Room is thrown open.

Assignment to the White House is a prized detail for newspaperman or photographer, but the job isn't easy. You have to be on the watch for the big fellows.

So far as the diplomats go, experience has shown that representatives of the English speaking countries are familiar with the camera and its terminology. They are easy to picture. The Chinese and Japanese are anxious to please, even though frequently bewildered by the process of taking photographs. The other non-English speakers are apparently afraid of a camera; they shy off and it is sometimes hard to make them understand that pictures are a regular diet in the United States and the cameras contain no bombs.

One of the nice things about steady assignment to the White House is the traveling.

Ask Arthur de Titta, for instance—or rather, maybe you'd better not. He was with President-elect Hoover on his goodwill tour of South America. While still in the United States, the train made a stop. De Titta got his closeups of the welcoming, then climed up on the roof of the station for some long-distance stuff. Then the train pulled out.

Grabbing his camera, not the lightest load in the world, deTitta started a marathon down the track. Harder and harder he panted. Then Mr. Hoover, on the observation platform, saw a gesticulating beetle far down the track. He pulled the emergency cord, the train stopped, a bunch of secret service men jumped off looking for trouble, and a highly perspiring and much "razzed" cameraman climbed on.

When the president travels, an advance man goes ahead to make arrangements in every town where the president will stop. That man is Col. Edward Starling, second to Dick Jarvis on the White House secret service force.

When the president goes on vacation for the summer he takes the news with him, also the correspondents and cameramen.

Good fellows, these presidents. Mr. Hoover not long ago told a group of newspapermen and still photographers to stand by and keep quiet while the sound pictures were being taken, then went through the motions again while the still cameras got into operation. President Coolidge got out of his automobile in the rain and made Dick Jarvis close the umbrella he was holding over him so the boys could get their picture.

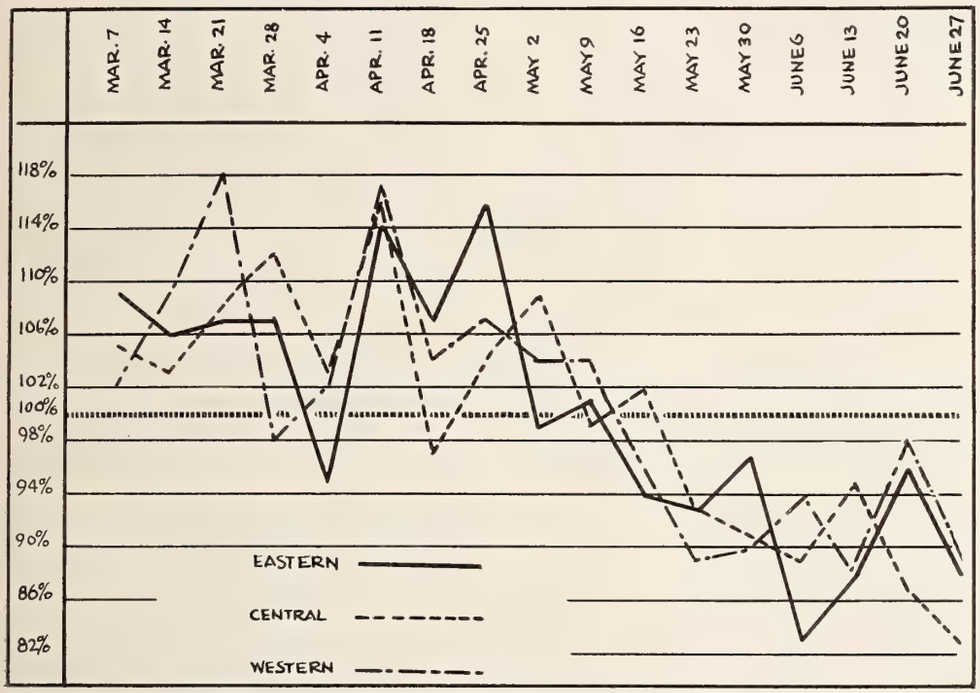
Only two people in the White House can be pictured individually, the president and his wife. Individual pictures of attaches are barred. If an attache appears in a group, it's all right; Secretary Joslin was pictured being sworn in and that was all right. But if an attache goes out in his back yard to plant a tree, you can take a picture of the tree, but not of the man.

Posing for the movies isn't an easy job. It gets mighty tiresome to have your picture taken daily, with groups, with individuals, with trees, even with a brick at some cornerstone laying.

FOREIGN MARKET NOW DISPLAYING "LESS RESISTANCE" TO U. S. FILMS



This chart shows a comparison of box office receipts per seat for four months in Eastern, Central and Western territories, as an analysis of the Motion Pisture Herald survey of grosses. The 100 per cent line represents the average box office receipts per seat in each territory for the period. The continuous line represents the Eastern territory, the evenly broken line (- - - -) is for the Central area, and the unevenly broken line (-- - -- -) for the Western.

Protection Asked On Non-Theatrical

Protection of one year against non-theatrical showing in new contracts will be asked by exhibitors of Eastern Pennsylvania if they follow the suggestion of the MPTO to demand the following clause:

"The distributor agrees that any pictures included in this contract will not be released to any non-theatrical account in this territory until one year after first-run in this territory."

Vaudeville or Boycott, Memphis Merchants Say

Business men at Memphis have threatened downtown theatres with a boycott unless they restore vaudeville, elimination of which cost the town $200,000 yearly in monies spent locally by vaudevillians, stage hands and musicians while playing Memphis, the Civic Club stated this week.

Reported Buy of Continental Denied by Hornstein Office

Reports that Joe Hornstein, former head of the New York branch of Continental Theatre Accessories, and Sol Brill are negotiating with Warners to buy the local branch of the Warner subsidiary, have been denied by Hornstein's office.

The report previously had been said to be in line with the desire of Warners to unload all their interests except pictures.

Picture-Minded

Picture-minded! Not all people of all countries.

Take, for instance, Germany. They are not "picture crazy," as one authority states the case. They are "much happier," he says, sitting in a beer garden reminiscing over a stein. Other countries? Here is this authority's review of the world situation:

England—Response to pictures is marvelous.

Spain—Response good.

France—Response good, but in the developing stage.

Italy—Fair.

Russia—A picture-going public, but "sick of the propaganda films which have been foisted upon them."

Roumania—Fair, but a limited audience.

South America — Fine! Movie-minded.

Japan—Just fair. "Like their own stuff."

China—Fine, in treaty ports.

The foregoing is general. In one country, one company may find a good market, whereas another is forced to leave prints on the shelves. The reverse will be true in another country.

Foreign Department Heads See Increase in Sales

American Films Regaining Ground Lost With Advent of Talkers; U. S. World Film Source

The American motion picture product is today regaining lost ground in foreign markets, in the opinion of the New York managers of the foreign sales departments of the greater companies. There is less and less of the resistance which arose with the coming of the talking picture four years ago.

Gross figures of the companies distributing in Europe, Asia, the Orient, Africa, Central and South America, show increasing sales. In some instances, the returns for the first six months of 1931 have exceeded those of the same period of 1930.

Foreign managers point out, however, that running parallel with the higher grosses has been an increase in overhead, cost of dubbing, cost of super-imposing, cost of reproduction in a foreign tongue, cost of quota, etc.

In increased grosses, however, the men who figure distribution in terms of latitude and longitude, rather than coast to coast and Canada to Mexico, find that the American motion picture (silent, synchronized, or talking) is, with two or three exceptions, the world entertainment.

Hollywood is the mecca of the screen-struck. Also, say these men, it still is the source of the motion picture entertainment for every corner of the globe.

American players and American productions are still sought by foreign audiences. Germany is an exception. Here the German player has a more secure grasp upon a domestic audience than in any country with the possible exception of the United States. Most countries demand the American cast, regardless of the dialogue in which the picture may be made.

A serious handicap today, according to men conversant with the foreign situation, has been the quota. True, France has lifted its tariff; but Mexico has just instituted a very drastic measure affecting the importation of motion pictures. It is said that the duty, under this new regulation, will be one of the highest in the world.

Although the quota has had an unfavorable effect upon the American motion picture industry, this legislation, according to Joseph H. Seidelman, long associated with Emil E. Shauer, general manager of the foreign department of Paramount, "will not stop the public demand for American personalities. This goes for any country in the world. Germany may be the exception."

The complexity of the problem which has confronted the American industry since the inception of the talking picture is indicated by the varied means of preparing film for

CREDIT RULING HELD MERELY FORMALITY

Committees Were Abandoned Eight Months Ago After Supreme Court Action, Says Hess

"Merely a formality," was the manner in which Gabriel L. Hess of the MPPDA yesterday described the decree perpetually enjoining operation of the credit committee system of distributors, which was entered this week in federal court in New York and signed by Justice M. Woolsey. Major companies will continue to deal with credits individually as they have since the Supreme Court upset the Thacher decision.

"It represents nothing new," stated Hess, "inasmuch as the credit committees were abandoned eight months ago, after the U. S. Supreme Court last November decreed the credit system a conspiracy in restraint of trade under the Sherman anti-trust law."

The new Department of Justice decree specifically mentioned that deposits exacted from exhibitors by distributors in operating or enforcing the credit system must be returned, but this influences sales activities but little in view of the abandonment of the credit practice eight months ago. Since that time, each company has dealt individually with its credit problems, asking for advance deposits where it felt the risk needed it.

The new decree vacates the Judge Thacher decision which held the credit system valid, and writes finis to the federal authorities' litigation against Film Boards of Trade and principal distributors to outlaw compulsory arbitration and credit systems.

Price Warns of U. S. Propaganda

"If the Canadian film investigation into alleged combinistic practices of American companies has served to bring home to Canadian people the realization that American ideas and American thought are being spread throughout the Dominion through the medium of motion pictures, then I feel the inquiry has served a good purpose," stated the Hon. W. H. Price, Attorney General of Ontario on Thursday, following a study of the film probe report.

Price did not announce any decision as to the prosecution of the alleged combine participants.

Senate Kills Florida Tax, But Offers Gross Sales Tax

The admission tax passed last week by the Florida House in extra session, and described as a spite tax, has been killed by the Senate committee to which it was sent, after a 44-42 vote in the lower house. It called for five cents on admission to 40 cents, 10 cents on tickets from 40 cents to $1 and 10 percent on all over $1.

A gross sales tax, which would hit motion picture theatres harder than other lines, has come up in the Senate.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

United States of America, Petitioner —vs— First National Pictures, Inc., et, al., Defendants	FINAL DECREE In Equity 45/99

This cause having come on for hearing before this Court and having been determined by a decree entered December 23, 1929, from which the petitoner appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which has reversed the decree of this Court and issued its mandate, filed herein January 20, 1931, remanding the cause:

NOW, THEREFORE, upon motion of the petitioner, by George Z. Medalie, Esq., United States Attorney for the Southern District of New York, John Lord O'Brian, Esq., the Assistant to the Attorney General, John Harlan Amen, Esq., and Charles H. Weston, Esq., Special Assistants to the Attorney General, of Counsel, for relief in accordance with the prayer of the petition, and the defendants having appeared by their attorneys, Messrs. Cadwalader, Wickersham & Taft, and Cornelius W. Wickersham, Esq., Arthur L. Fisk, Jr., Esq., and Gabriel L. Hess, Esq., and submitted a different form of decree of counsel, it is

ORDERED, ADJUDGED AND DECREED as follows:

First: That by reason of the mandate of the Supreme Court issued November 24, 1930, and filed in this Court on January 20, 1931, the decree of this Court, filed and entered herein on December 23, 1929, whereby the petition herein was dismissed on the merits, be and it hereby is vacated and set aside.

Second: That (1) the agreement of the defendant distributors to cause each defendant Film Board of Trade to adopt Rules and Regulations for the Establishment and Operations of a Credit Committee, a copy of which Rules and Regulations is attached to the petition herein as Exhibit "A": (2) the adoption of said Rules and Regulations by each defendant Film Board of Trade; and (3) the carrying on of interstate commerce in motion picture films by the defendant distributors in conformity with the provisions of said Rules and Regulations constitute a conspiracy in restraint of interstate trade and commerce in violation of the Act of Congress of July 2, 1890, entitled "An Act to Protect Trade and Commerce against Unlawful Restraints and Monopolies," commonly known as the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

Third: That the defendants, their officers, agents, servants and employees, and all persons acting under, through or on behalf of them, or any of them, hereby are perpetually enjoined, restrained and prohibited, individually and collectively.

1. From further engaging in or carrying out said conspiracy or any other conspiracy similar to, or having a purpose or effect similar to said conspiracy.

2. From doing any act or thing whatsoever having the same purpose or effect as the acts done in pursuance of said conspiracy, or promoting, or tending to promote, any of the purposes and effects thereof.

3. From enforcing or carrying out, directly or indirectly, any of the provisions of the aforesaid rules and regulations or any other rules or regulations identical therewith or similar thereto, or having the same purpose or effect as the aforesaid rules and regulations.

4. From retaining any sum or sums heretofore received from any exhibitors of motion pictures in the United States by virtue of the operation or enforcement of the aforesaid rules and regulations.

5. From entering into any understanding, arrangement, combination, conspiracy or agreement (1) to refrain, either for a limited or an unlimited period of time, from entering into any contract for licensing the exhibition of motion pictures, or (2) to require the deposit of security by the licensee as a condition of entering into any such contract with such licensee.

Fourth: The provisions of this decree shall not be construed, however.

1. As prohibiting any defendant distributor, or any member of any defendant Film Board of Trade, from exchanging either directly or through a committee or other agency, information concerning the financial or moral responsibility of any exhibitor of motion pictures in the United States; always provided, that there shall not be made, in connection with or in supplement of such exchange of information, any comment in the nature of a recommendation as to any action to be taken thereon, or

2. As prohibiting, restraining or interfering with the action of any single company or firm, which is a defendant herein, by its or their officers, agents or employees, whether such officers, agents or employees, are themselves made parties hereto or not, from acting with respect to its or their own corporate or firm business, property or affairs, entirely independently and free from any agreement or understanding with any other defendant distributor or defendant Film Board of Trade, or member thereof.

Fifth: Jurisdiction of this cause is hereby retained

1. For the purpose of enforcing this decree and of making such other and further orders and decrees as may become necessary herein, and

2. For the purpose of enabling any party hereto, to apply to the Court for such further orders and directions as may be necessary or proper in relation to carrying out the enforcement of the provisions of this decree, or

3. For the purpose of applying to the Court for a modification of this decree, if it be hereafter shown to the satisfaction of the Court that by reason of changed conditions or changes in the statute law of the United States, the provisions hereof have become inadequate or inappropriate, or unduly oppressive to the defendants, and are no longer necessary to assure the maintenance of conditions in harmony with law.

Dated New York, July 21, 1931.

JOHN M. WOOLSEY
(U.S.D.J.)

Breen Assistant to Hays

Joseph I. Breen has entered upon his duties as an assistant to Will H. Hays, president of Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, Inc. The appointment was announced at the association offices in New York.

Mr. Breen has had large experience in executive capacities with various industrial and other organizations. He has had motion picture experience as a member of the Chicago staff of the Quigley Publications, and has been connected with the Peabody interests in Chicago and the Middlewest as an assistant to the president, Stuyvesant Peabody.

Mr. Breen also has been variously associated with newspapers in New York, Chicago and Washington, and was with the Associated Press for seven years.

RKO Radio is in one of those certain moods. a victor over adversity

MR. ADOLPH ZUKOR'S three decades of success in the industry of the motion picture are an evidence of the justification of faith in this industry and assurance of the response of an amusement seeking public adequately served. He had his bad breaks and tough times. "Queen Elizabeth," the picture which awakened the dawn of modern screen history, was a roadshow disaster. He had strife and fires and lawsuits. He was beset by hard times, hard bankers and hard luck. He thought about retiring with a single million once, when things looked bad. He stayed and won. He never faltered, never quit. He believes in the motion picture and its tomorrow.

it is all in your hat

Dad, Mother and the Kids are approaching the box office. It is a big moment in the world of the motion picture. A sale is about to be consummated. That is all that the business is for. If it happens often enough business is good. It has to happen several million times a day in these United States, or business is not so good.

Now what does this sale leading up to this box office moment consist of? The answer is "a sequence of states of mind." Selling motion picture entertainment involves the most intangible merchandise in the world. That merchandise consists only in the opinion and state of mind of the motion picture exhibitor about that state of mind and anticipation which he can create in a potential audience for a showing of a set of shadows which are to be rented to him at some future date. That, we submit, is the lightest, thinnest and most delicate fabric of merchandise in the world. It consists of nothing at all but selling, selling, selling.

True, that selling has to be based on something that does not deliver disappointment, but it is the selling that is bought and sold.

And that is why the great Hollywood community is only a part of the truly creative machinery of artistry in the motion picture. The selling, that intangible essence of success, that priceless ingredient which has neither weight nor width or thickness or other dimension, is put into the product by the sum total of the activities of the selling organization, whether it be in the promise of the salesman or the luring, blandishing words of the press agent and the advertising writer.

But mostly the repute, the anticipation, the real merchandise quality, of a motion picture is created only by words, long before the shadows reach the screen of delivery. It is that priceless ingredient that is bought before the film. It is the valuable part of the picture that no studio can pack in the film can. It has to be made by selling and of selling.

BRITONS LOOK TO U.S. FOR NEXT STIMULANT TO LOSING BOX OFFICE

Time for Innovation Is Near, Says Mooring

Thorpe Forming Independent Unit, But What To Do? Parliament Unit Gassing on Sunday Shows

By W. H. MOORING, London

Irving Thalberg, in London for a few days with Norma Shearer, met the question I put to him as to what America had to offer as the next big box office stimulant, with the naive statement that "the ultimate in motion picture art had not yet been reached, and I suppose it will be better pictures." He is not prepared to admit that the need exists for another revolution of some kind in film production. But whether or not he will be able to return to Hollywood feeling that this market is good enough for a few more years of just talkers, is an interesting thought. I fear not. The time for the next big innovation is getting desperately near. Has America anything to offer which will startle audiences without squeezing the last drop of blood out of an already heavily capitalized industry? Anything short of an idea involving heavy outlay for new plant—either in the studios or theatres—would give the industry on this side a real helping of oxygen.

What to Do?

John Court Applebee Thorpe, first reported out of British International for which he was production manager—by MOTION PICTURE HERALD, has set about forming an independent production unit, following his return from Hollywood where he spent a month or two in search of ideas.

He now joins the ranks of the unaffiliated motion picture makers who find themselves on the horns of a dilemma.

Will they rent the studio of one of the big triunes and pay the price in order to insure an outlet for their product through that combine's theatres? Or will they make their pictures at one of the lower rented studios owned by independent production concerns, and risk the market when they finish turning? If they decide to produce under the roof of the combine, they need not worry about distribution if their output is within reason. But be it as good as it may, they are likely to run round a bit for a fair deal if they have decided upon the doubtful economy of using a non-combine studio.

Parliamentary Gas

The parliamentary committee which is to whip into shape the new law on Sunday cinemas, is sitting twice weekly, talking its head off about each of the hundreds of ammendements which have been tabled for consideration. So far only about a dozen of these have been reached in three or four sittings and fresh ones are being added at a greater rate than disposals are being made. Some of the most bitter obstruction is being encountered at the hands of members of parliament with a sin-cinema complex. Many amendments put down aim to make the bill invalid. Others seek to place handy weapons in the hands of reactionary local licensing authorities, who at the best are to have arbitrary powers regarding what Sunday shows shall be given and where the profits accruing shall go. Still other amendments, to which the cinema industry will find it difficult to offer logical opposition, urge the extension of the bill to include permission, at the discretion of local authorities, for the opening of legitimate theatres on Sundays.

Mr. Remer, M.P., told the parliamentary committee last week that he had been attacked violently in an American cinema paper for having exposed the fact that powerful American interests had a hold on the British film industry.

That paper, he said, had asked, "Why is Mr. Remer bothering about this matter What does it matter if the American people buy the whole British Empire?"

Mr. Remer doubtless was referring to my article in MOTION PICTURE HERALD of June 6 when I wrote under the heading, "If Americans Dominate British Industry, what of it?"

I have never credited America with any desire to buy the British Empire: they might think it too heavily in debt. The influence of George Washington—rankly American as it might be—would evidently purify the atmosphere of British politics!

Latest developments affecting Rex Ingram find this young film producer with $500,000 to spend on his next picture, which he will make for a new unit styled Ingram-Markham Pictures.

FT. LEE SEEKS COMEBACK

Ft. Lee's citizenry is all hot and bothered these July days because the town's leading citizens are promoting a "Bring the Film Business Back to Ft. Lee" movement. Since the debacle of the celluloid industry in the zones across the river from 129th Street, with the exit of Jules Brulatour, Wm. A. Brady, Louis Selznick and other leaders of the hill's production heyday, the business men of the section have been singing only blue melodies. Several times abortive movements have been started with a view to reclamation, but nothing ever resulted.

This time with the plans sponsored by Mayor Louis Hobel, the members of Local 59 of the stage hands, headed by J. A. Walsh, and hosts of other residents whose incomes have been affected by the section's deflation, the settlement's residents believe they're on a hot wire that may get somewhere. Anyhow, within the next week, date to be set Saturday, thre is to be a rally, speech making and such to push the movement. Already the plans include a general North Jersey pageant November 1, the date unofficially given as the inaugural opening occasion for the new Hudson Bridge, which enters Jersey on a line almost parallel with the old motion picture territory of the hill.

Among enthusiastic sponsors of the proposal is George Orth, now in charge of the new Lincoln film and recording studio in the Grantwood section. The hill has been getting considerable recording business recently. Last week "Bud" Pollard finished the new "talkie" superspecial, "Alice in Wonderland" at the Metropolitan studio. Within the next fortnight, Ned Wayburn takes a spot of the Grantwood Lincoln for a number of shorts, with pulchritude of the Wayburn label for backgrounds. Down the Jersey highway farther is the new RKO studio fast being prepared for action.

SMPE Is Voting On New York or Detroit for Fall

The board of Governors of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers have approved of two cities, namely, New York City and Detroit, Mich., as available for the fall meeting of the society. Membership at large is now voting by mail to decide which it will be.

I notice in their communication the committee naively names as one of the attractions of Detroit the "river forming the boundary line between the United States and Canada."

I personally am voting for Detroit because I am curious—oh, very curious—about that river and its beauty.—F. H. RICHARDSON.

Gordon White to Coast

Gordon S. White, advertising and publicity director for Educational, is enroute to Hollywood, where he will study the Educational West Coast publicity situation, and probably add more people in view of the Tiffany deal.

Change Maynard Title

The fifth Ken Maynard Western for Tiffany release, tentatively titled "The Arizonian," has been changed to "The Arizona Terror." Reproduction starts immediately on the next, "Range Law."

Prohibitive Import Duties On American Films Included in New Mexican Tariff

Mexico has raised the import duties on American films, disc and sound-on-film equipment, and foreign language pictures to an almost prohibitive extent, as part of the new tariff law which became effective July 24.

The tariff itself amounts to a general stepping up of import taxes on practically all commodities, motion pictures automatically being considered a part of the importation list. Whereas the former film tariff was a single nominal rate covering all types of film importation, the new law, said to be a complicated schedule, breaks down all items under the general head of film commodities, into various divisions, taxing each separately, and at a rate decidedly higher than any previously imposed by the Mexican government.

There was much conversation regarding a possible boosting of the tariff rates last year, but the matter was disposed of without appreciable action having been taken.

Although the Hays organization is taking no definite action, and contemplates none on the situation, the Film Board of Trade in Mexico City is concentrating every effort on an alleviation of the condition, pointing out in conversations with government officials the serious effect of the tariff action on the film industry in Mexico, which can serve only, they insist, to throttle the production of Mexican film companies.

Tokio Theatre Owners Establish First Association; 235 Houses

Elect Officers; Pass Resolutions Asking Alleviation of Certain Unsatisfactory Conditions

Theatre owners of Tokio, Japan, have organized the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Tokio, apparently the first organization of its kind in Japan, and comprising 235 theatres, listing among its members practically all of the most influential of the country's operators.

Economic conditions in the theatre business in Japan recently, it is understood, have made it vitally important that the owners operate as one unit, in the negotiating of affairs which affect the theatre industry there in general.

Chief among the figures who initiated the movement which resulted on June 4, in the establishment of the organization, was Sai Ichikawa, proprietor of the Kokusai Film News Service, Inc. The first general meeting was held on June 4 at the offices of the Japanese Motion Picture Company, Ltd., one of the two largest film companies in Japan, at which time officers for the central body and the various districts in the Tokio prefecture were elected. The officers are, for the most part, representatives of the most important film companies in the country. Sai Ichikawa was named secretary-in-chief by popular request.

Resolutions were passed at the initial general meeting for the alleviation of various unsatisfactory conditions as follows:

a. The Tokio Dento Company, Ltd., the Tokio Electric Light Company, Ltd., be approached on possible reductions of rates on electric current used by the motion picture theatres of Tokio.

b. Petition be made to the authorities concerned for a reduction of taxes on theatres and the prevention of new taxes which may be set in the future.

c. Petition be made to the metropolitan police of Tokio to moderate their present control of the motion picture theatre business.

d. Rational restraint of the establishment of more theatres in Tokio in the future.

Real progress is being made by the organization in carrying out the letter of these resolutions, it is said. It is further pointed out that the establishment of the association will undoubtedly exercise a decided effect on exhibitors throughout the country, with the prediction being made that eventually, practically all the theatre owners of the country, will be members of one central organized exhibitor body.

Brown on Record Against Making Sponsored Reels

Final decision of RKO to abandon its plans for a sponsored shorts program, in which the Van Beuren Corporation was to have figured, is confirmed in a letter from Hiram S. Brown, president, to attorneys for Eugene Castle, short subject producer and opponent of sponsored pictures. "We have no plans whatever for the future concerning such product," Brown wrote.

Sussman, Back from Panama, Going Abroad for Vacation

Jerry Sussman, who has been stationed in Central America for Paramount, is now at the home office conferring with his chief, Joseph H. Seidelman, acting manager of the foreign department of Paramount. After a vacation in Europe, Sussman returns to the United States, and thence to his post in Central America.

Jule and J. Allen Will Return to Canadian Arena

Jule and J. J. Allen, former owners of 60 Canadian theatres, whose large circuit toppled when they were forced into bankruptcy in 1922, thus ending a spectacular battle with Famous Players Canadian Corporation, have applied in Toronto for their discharge from bankruptcy. The application will be heard in September.

In 1922, they were equally as strong in the Dominion as was Famous Players, and when they crashed, Famous bought many of their best theatres at bargain prices. Since then, the Allens have been quietly rebuilding, mostly in suburbs and small towns, with a circuit now estimated at 25 theatres.

Talk among Toronto film people today is highly speculative upon the possible development of the Allen interests, if and when they are awarded a clean bill of health by the Canadian authorities. In some quarters, it is believed N. L. Nathanson, former Famous director, was referring to the Allens when he said recently that a theatre circuit was being organized in Canada to specialize in British pictures.

Allied Franchise Committee To Consider RKO Revision

The Allied States rating committee to consider revisions of rates on the RKO franchise, will meet August 1 in Minneapolis, with July 25 the closing date for complaints.

No mention is made of the Tiffany franchises, in the statement issued to members, the omission being attributed to the recent affiliation with Sono Art-World Wide and Educational.

Thalberg Asks Loyalty of Press to Picture Industry

Irving Thalberg, M-G-M production executive, made a plea for loyalty on the part of newspaper critics to "a business that entertains millions of the public," just before he left London for this country.

He said producers looked for a real lead from the newspaper critic, and they welcomed even severe criticism where it is deserved.

10 Birmingham Houses Close After Projectionist Dispute

Ten theatres in Birmingham, Ala., closed for the summer last Saturday night, leaving only two first run houses in the downtown section of the city.

The reason assigned by theatre managers was the refusal of the union projectionists to readjust salary contracts on a basis satisfactory to the theatre owners.

Barrymores Coming East

John Barrymore and Dolores Costello are expected to visit New York in their yacht, following their return to Hollywood from Alaska.

"Bob" Kane Returning to U. S.

Robert Kane, Paramount's French production chief at Nice, France, is due in New York soon for a vacation.

Judge Reserves Ruling in Dreiser Picture Dispute

Judge Graham Witschief, in Westchester County supreme court, White Plains, N. Y., on Wednesday last reserved decision on Theodore Dreiser's motion for a temporary injunction enjoining and restraining Paramount from presentation of the screen version of "The American Tragedy" in the form in which it is now, and using Dreiser's name in connection with it.

A touch of the dramatic was injected into the purely legal battle in the staid court room, during the opening of the case by Humphrey J. Lynch, Paramount attorney, when he stated that Dreiser was merely after front-page publicity.

Dreiser leaped to his feet and shouted, "That's a lie." The judge warned the author that he would be forced to leave the room if he could not restrain himself. Dreiser claimed the film, as it is, damaged his literary reputation. Arthur Garfield Hays represented Dreiser.

Paramount attorneys filed affidavits of various prominent persons in the literary and theatrical fields, attempting to show that the film version of "The American Tragedy" was as faithful a representation of the book as could be made. The pro-Paramount affidavits were made by an array of literary persons whose activities have impinged upon the motion picture, including George Palmer Putnam, Arthur B. Reeve, Konrad Bercovici, James R. Quirk, Lewis Gensler, Peter B. Kyne, Morris Greene and Robert M. MacAlarney.

Dix to Remain with Radio With Big Salary Increase

Richard Dix will remain with Radio Pictures, and at a substantial salary increase, it is understood on the Coast. He is scheduled to appear in two specials, "Frontier" and "Marcheta."

The difficulties between the star and the company are understood to have been ironed out by William LeBaron, Radio production chief, with a new contract ready for signing last week. The deal provides for only two films, both to be completed by April 1, 1932.

Showdown Awaited in Stanwyck-Columbia Tilt

Hollywood expects a showdown in the Barbara Stanwyck quarrel with Columbia, the actress failing to appear on the set last Monday for work in "Forbidden." She still has three to make under contract.

Harry Cohn says she threatened to go to Europe unless given a 250 per cent increase, and Cohn is said to have told her it must be contract figure or nothing, and that there are three boats leaving daily for Europe.

Cincinnati Board Closed

The Cincinnati Film Board of Trade has permanently closed its offices, with the territory passing under the jurisdiction of the Cleveland Trade Board.

EDUCATIONAL FIELD IS "ENORMOUS": OTTERSON

60% of ERPI Business Replacement of "Bootleg" Equipment, Says President in London

J. E. Otterson, president of Electrical Research Products, on his recent arrival in London, indicated that the company plans a concentrated effort on the non-theatrical, and particularly the educational field, which he described as "enormous, much larger than that of entertainment." He stated further that the commercial film has been making much more rapid progress than educationals, up to now.

J. E. Otterson

Otterson is in England for the purpose of looking into the development of the non-theatrical field in that country, and he pointed out that approximately 1,000 public schools in the United States have already been wired for talking motion pictures, stating that ERPI's position in that field was one of following the market, rather than forcing it.

In the commercial field, he expressed the belief that England will be regarded as a completed market from the theatrical standpoint within two or three years, from which point the development of the commercial market will go on indefinitely. Otterson noted the use of talking films for business purposes as one of the most productive fields, particularly in respect to England in its relation to the British Empire, with a number of the larger industrial companies already engaged on substantial programs of films, according to the ERPI chief.

Expansion moves are on foot in Italy and Japan, with conditions remaining as before on the continent, with respect to Germany, the Paris agreement being adhered to without friction. Stating that ERPI had been approached on possible entrance into the Russian field, Otterson stated that no satisfactory plan had yet been devised for entering that market.

Discussing the theatre field in the United States, Otterson stated that some 60 per cent of ERPI's present business was the replacement of "bootleg" sound equipment, and made the assertion that 75 per cent of the American theatres operating with "bootleg" equipment are at the moment in financial distress. He further stated that 7,000 American theatres have closed since the advent of the talking picture, with the 14,000 houses remaining in the country after the coming of talking films, comprising 11,000 which are wired for sound, and 3,000 which are operating silent.

In the opinion of Otterson, neither television nor wide film are commercially practicable at the moment, the burden of wide film being too great for the industry to carry financially in its present economic state.

Actors' Agents Fight Pay Cuts

Agents on the West Coast are preparing to avert a fixed wage agreement as a result of the general move to reduce players' salaries in the economy movement at the studios, according to The Hollywood Herald. Some think the situation may endanger the agency business as a whole. They see possibilities of great reductions in income for both actors and agents if studios set maximum salaries for specific types and roles.

The subject is expected to be the chief subject of discussion at the next general meeting of the Artists and Managers Association.

Musicals Return At Cautious Pace

Musicals are coming back, studio activities show, but the producers are feeling their way, as was evidenced by such semi-musicals as "The Smiling Lieutenant," now showing on Broadway, and "Honeymoon Lane," already previewed. In preparation at M-G-M is "Flying High," while Warner-First National will start a big musical with Marilyn Miller at the Burbank plant on resumption of activities there. Welshay Productions is working on the first of its two-reel technicolor musicals.

1,791 Sound Units Replaced By ERPI Equipment Since '29

Replacement in the United States of other makes of sound devices with Western Electric's ERPI units totals 1,791 to date, divided as follows: 372 made in 1929; 891 in 1930, and 528 during the initial five months of 1931.

ERPI's legal researchers have been at work to determine the company's legal right in preventing the purchase of tubes and parts from other manufacturers for Western Electric machines. It is understood that they have decided that purchase of tubes are the only "outside" replacements being made in sound units of that company.

Theatrical Premium Moves

Theatrical Premium Co., Inc., this week moved to larger headquarters at the Film Center Bldg., 630 9th Avenue, New York, occupying offices formerly used by the New York Tiffany exchange. Henry M. Mulstein is district sales manager.

FIGHTING RENTALS NO CURE: ROWSON

Exhibitor Must Pay More Attention to Theatre Program Than to Costs, Britons Told

There is no possibility of any substantial relief to exhibitors by a campaign against film rentals. This statement, based upon experience, was a highlight of an address by Simeon Rowson, director of Gaumont-British Picture Corporation, Ltd., and managing director of Ideal Films, Ltd., before the Cinematograph Exhibitors Association at the convention at Brighton.

"You cannot resolve your difficulties by an attack on prices," Rowson told the British exhibitors. He explained that the payment for any reduction would be passed by the distributors to the producers. The burden would not be on the best pictures but rather upon the average or inferior grades, many of which under these circumstances would show no profit to producers while many others would show a loss, with the result that such pictures would disappear from the producer's next program. Reduction, then, of the number of pictures going to Britain from America would spell keener competition, prices would go up again because of the decreased supply and increased demand.

Denies Lower Quality

Furthermore, Rowson makes the point that in his estimation the average entertainment quality in pictures is not below that of former and highly successful seasons, but the public, he says, with limited resources because of general conditions, "are not now as willing to go to the less-than-average kind of play or picture."

Dismissals, executive changes and salary cuts, while good in the degree of greater efficiency achieved, are not the solution any more than attacks on rental prices, the exhibitors were told. At the same time, the speaker said, he did not "wish to imply that there may not be some more equitable readjustment of prices between exhibitors for the films they show." He added: "If the object of any inquiry is not the reduction of total payments but only the discovery of a more equitable method of paying for pictures what they are worth in each theatre in relative box-office values, I believe that such an inquiry would deserve and receive the sympathetic attention of every fair-minded renter."

More Attention to Theatre

Improvement in the exhibitors' condition, Rowson declared, "must depend solely on his giving more attention to his incomings rather than to his outgoings."

Rowson said that with the exception of certain outstanding pictures the average earning power of the British picture in this market (the British) is probably at least double and possibly nearly treble the earning power of the average American film costing four to five times as much to make.

Arrangements will have to be made, he declared, whereby the playing time of circuit theatres in Great Britain for American pictures will be traded for a guarantee of playing time for certain British pictures in the U. S. A.

Allied Getting Protection Data

Minneapolis reports indicate that Allied units are gathering data for the purpose of instituting federal suit to attempt to secure court opinion on alleged unreasonable protection.

The Allied contention is understood to be to the effect that any protection beyond the closing engagement of a run constitutes unreasonable protection and, it is said, this will be the basis upon which court action will be sought.

"Electric Brain" Saves Money at the MGM Coast Laboratory

The new M-G-M laboratories on the Coast have placed in use a new "electric brain" which is said to compute the electrical current necessary to deposit a silver plating and regulate a switch automatically.

Hypo, after processing film, is filled with silver from the emulsion. This is removed by electrically plating it on monel-metal plates, and the chemical is used again. It is said a small fortune in silver is reclaimed each year by this new process.

Sheehan May Visit Australia As Possible Production Spot

Clayton Sheehan, Fox foreign manager now in Berlin, is expected to visit Australia before returning to this country. His trip will be for the purpose of investigating production possibilities.

Fox controls the Hoyts circuit there, and may join F. W. Thring, former head of Hoyts, in a production deal.

Keystone Cops Return

The Keystone Cops are back on the job in "Stout Hearts and Willing Hands," RKO-Pathe's burlesque melodrama made by the Masquers Club in Hollywood. Among the original Keystoners in the picture are Ford Sterling, Chester Conklin, Mack Swain, Hank Mann, Jimmy Finlayson and Clyde Cook.

Lalumiere in Comeback

Charles Lalumiere, pioneer Canadian exhibitor who temporarily retired as a Montreal operator two years ago, is in New York lining up French product for an all-French independent exchange which he will start at Montreal.

Kass Returns Next Month

Hannah Kass, Columbia's foreign chief, will arrive in New York on August 15 from a tour through Europe in the interests of new season's product.

Steiner Here With Product

William ("Bill") Steiner, pioneer independent distributor, has returned from England with prints of new feature product which he will handle in America.

Paramount Is Quiet On Stock Dividend

Paramount Publix home office executives said Thursday that "dividend action is always in the hands of company directors," in answer to a Wall Street report that Paramount may pay its next quarterly dividend in stock instead of cash, due to a reported drain on cash which is said to have resulted in the re-purchase of common stock under guarantees given with property purchase agreements, principally those for theatres.

The next payment under the re-purchase agreement, said to total $4,785,000, comes due on September 10, according to the Wall Street Journal, which states: "Expenditure of this amount together with continued payment of dividends in cash during the summer period, when production expense is high and income low, might reduce the current asset ratio below the point required in the bond indenture."

"Two courses are open to the management," points out the Wall Street publication: "One to sell $10,000,000 additional debenture bonds and the other to substitute stock payments for cash payments for two or three quarters until current position has been built up again out of current income. Since Paramount's 6 per cent debentures are now selling around 90, the cost of such financing would appear prohibitively high, therefore it is more probable that it will be decided to pay dividends in stock temporarily.

"In addition to the payment of $4,875,000 due September 10, covering 65,000 shares of stock at 75, two other payments are due next year, one amounting to $2,550,000 on January 1, 1932, for 30,000 shares of stock at 85 and one amounting to $4,100,000 for 48,246 shares at 85 on March 1, 1932. The total of the three payments is $11,525,000," says the Journal.

"Net profit of Paramount in the second quarter is estimated," by the Journal, "at $2,225,000, or 70 cents a share on the 3,178,312 shares of capital stock now outstanding. This compares with the net of $3,515,000, or $1.12 a share on 3,128,873 shares in the first quarter, and brings net for the half year to $1.82 a share. Since Paramount normally earns about 60 per cent of its year's profits in the last six months, there is obviously a fair chance that profits for the full year will be in the neighborhood of $4 or $4.25 a share.

"Even if the seasonal recovery in the last half of this year is less profitable than usual, the economy program that Paramount recently has put into effect, which was not fully reflected in operations in the first half, should improve the last half showing materially.

"With $5,740,000 already earned for the first six months of 1931, only a moderate gain in profits in the last half will be necessary to bring total for the year up to around $13,000,000 or more than $4 a share for the common. This goal apparently can be attained with a less than seasonal gain in profits in the remainder of this year," the Journal says.

Laemmle Returns Sept. 15

Carl Laemmle, Universal chief, who sailed for Europe on Wednesday will return to New York September 15. Conferences with John Drinkwater, author of Laemmle's biography, will be followed by discussions with London and Paris distribution and production chiefs.

Accompanying Laemmle are Maurice Fleckles, of Agfa Film; Jack Ross, Laemmle's secretary; Dave Bader, personal representative; Julius Bernheim, production supervisor, and Alfred Stern, assistant director. Bernheim, who just returned from a seven-months' expedition to Borneo, will study German and French picture production, while Stern will visit relatives in Frankfort.

B & K Expected To Cooperate To End "Doubling"

Early agreement on the double featuring problem is expected in Chicago, with the arrival of John Balaban from the home office and the threat of small independent exhibitors to cut prices if double featuring is not abandoned, prime factors in the anticipation.

Publix-Balaban and Katz has not definitely gone on record as yet as favoring the elimination of the troublesome double billing, as have most of the independents and circuit operators. Max Balaban so far has balked other officials who have desired to declare for abandonment, it is understood; the film buyer refusing to take a definite stand on the issue. His inaction has prevented a complete unity and furtherance of plans for the elimination of double featuring.

Both John Balaban and Barney Balaban, company treasurer, are understood to be in favor of abolition "for the good of the industry." Improved business at two of the circuit's "A" pre-release houses, where doubling helped sagging box offices after stage shows were withdrawn, is held responsible for the film buyer's viewpoint. John Balaban's influence is expected to override the objections, however, and bring about a definite cooperation which will go far to end Chicago double featuring.

Steps were taken by the Exhibitors' Association to counteract the widespread threat of price cutting, which, it is pointed out, the elimination of double featuring will effectually forestall.

Sunday Show Proponents Win Drive at Marion, Ill.

The public of Marion, Ill., showed conclusively its opinion in the matter when the spectators cheered the city council's action in passing an ordinance legalizing Sunday shows. The spectators filled the city hall and spread to the street outside. When Mayor C. H. Whitcomb opened the public hearing on the bill, there were two hours of debate, evenly divided between the pastors opposing the measure and the proponents of the measure. Those who spoke for the ordinance included G. S. Pinnell, manager of the Fox Orpheum theatre; W. B. Roberts, secretary of the Marion Trades Council; William Crawford, secretary of the Trades Council, A. M. Thompson, W. T. Holland and R. O. Thomas.

Less Than 25% of French Theatres Wired For Sound

The total number of sound equipped theatres in France is 984, according to latest Paris checks. Paris itself, however, is almost entirely wired for sound.

The percentage of wired houses of the total number of theatres in France is just under 25 per cent, since there are over 4,000 motion picture houses in the country.

MERCHANTS DESERT OPEN SUNDAY CAUSE

"Family Films Needed": Lasky

Current conditions have brought about a demand for "family motion pictures," it was declared by Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of Paramount Publix, on his arrival this week in Hollywood from New York on his semi-annual visit to the company's West Coast studios.

"Because of recent business conditions, thousands of families throughout the country have been forced to eliminate help from their households," he said. "This means that the youngsters now must accompany their parents to the theatres. Good, wholesome entertainment that will appeal equally to these grownups and their children is the type of screen fare the public now must have."

Simultaneously with Lasky's arrival Paramount announced that due to a returning confidence in national prosperity, the company is prepared to launch immediately an intensive production drive, with 22 pictures scheduled to start within the next 70 days. These augmented plans will aid in solving Hollywood's unemployment problem.

Ground is to be broken during the coming week for the construction of two new sound stages, giving the Paramount studios 37,500 feet of additional space for the filming of talking pictures and bringing the number of stages to fifteen.

Bob Custer Signed by Big 4 to Star in Series

Bob Custer, Western player, has been signed by Big 4 to star in a series of outdoor action films.

Custer appeared in a series called "The Custer Texas Ranger Series" and starred in numberless F-B-O Westerns and in several for Syndicate Pictures.

Production on the first Custer Western, "Headin' for Trouble," will start shortly on the West Coast. This release heralds Big 4's program for 1931-1932.

Klein Buys Foreign Rights To Boy Scout Two-Reelers

Edward L. Klein has contracted for the foreign distribution rights of the 15 two-reel Boy Scout films which are being produced on the Coast by Falcon Productions, Inc., of which Donavin Miller is president.

The first of the group, "The International Boy Scouts," is already finished. Klein leaves shortly for Paris, where he will establish headquarters as representative of various American companies.

Theatre Managements at Wichita, Kan., Drop Fight Against Blue Laws

Theatres of Wichita, Kan., have lost their fight to remain open on Sundays following the decision of the county attorney to close all "unnecessary" businesses on the Sabbath and the backing down of the Greater Wichita Merchants' Association, which had promised to help the theatres in their fight. No further efforts will be made at present to keep the theatres open, though filling stations and other places which had been told to close on Sundays are remaining open.

Fox houses remained closed on July 5 and July 12. Mrs. Charles Barron of the Kansas theatre, however, kept the house open and was prosecuted by the county attorney. The state promised to drop prosecution if she would promise to close the house on Sundays, and following the about-face of the merchants' association she has dropped the fight.

The Wichita situation was considered the key to the entire situation in Kansas and was to have become a test case. The prosecuting attorney has had on hand more than 300 complaints of violations of the state blue law by different kinds of business enterprises. Evidence of these violations had been obtained by the Greater Sunday Association, which has sponsored Sunday shows.

The opposition to the statewide law has found expression in many directions. In one case, in Norton county, the proprietor of a motion picture theatre obtained a warrant for a farmer who was gathering corn on the Sabbath.

Sunday shows have been in favor in the larger cities, but in some small communities where the sentiment was against Sunday showing the authorities have been quick to prosecute. In some instances the film men have tried in vain to obtain local option legislation.

Theatre men feel that now, however, with such developments as the backing down of the Wichita merchants' organization, their cause must await a more auspicious time before any renewal of a general campaign.

Now 125 Theatres in Hughes-Franklin Group; 15 Building

There are at present 125 theatres in the Hughes-Franklin circuit, with 15 theatres under construction. The newest of the houses is the Los Angeles Studio, opening July 30.

All Paramount, MGM and Fox product will be played, and short subjects are included in the deals, despite the use of the double-featuring policy in some of the houses of the circuit.

Summer Committees New Developement

By RITA C. McGOLDRICK

THE increasing interest of organized groups in motion pictures as they affect the community is evidenced sharply during the summer months when clubs, like hibernating creatures, crawl into a shell and become inactive until late in September.

In this year, however, we have, surprisingly, a needed change. Better Films Councils, Motion Picture Clubs, Junior Matinee workers and Parent-Teachers in many states have sent announcements to this Department that they have established summer committees and are desirous of having all the help we can give them to advance their work toward a smoothly operating and efficient program in the fall. It looks as if the gathering momentum of club women's cooperation with their local theatre men will reach a new peak of activity in the coming season.

Forum Discussion

In the recent columns of this Department we asked the theatre men to express themselves; to let us know what type of program seemed the greater success in their locality. The answers have been extraordinarily interesting, and practically unanimous in their decision. Every theatre man who has written to us has asked "for more high type family pictures." "Daddy-Long Legs" as an example has found its way into practically every letter. With the same unanimity, every letter has expressed its misgiving of the continued gangster picture and the highly varnished stories of illicit loves. A typical letter from C. W. Mills of the Arcade and other theatres in Sodus, New York, says: "By using the lists of endorsed pictures which MOTION PICTURE HERALD through your department has been good enough to send me, I have been able to eliminate several pictures that would not have satisfied. Our patrons want us to get away from the gangster and sex stuff. They are interested in family pictures. Norma Shearer, for instance, disappoints our audiences. Her acting is wonderful, but my patrons think her boundaries are overstepped. These illicit roles injure her as a star of the first magnitude."

From the Particular Council of Seattle, Washington, the following interesting observation comes: "Our people like the scenics, the explorations, and the animal comedies. They like Westerns, and there is a big audience for children's pictures. We have a surprising demand for mystery thrillers. We can still stand the gangster, if nothing better offers, but the problem plays, sex stuff and tarnished ladies are 'out'. If there is a suggestion in its title, advertising, or announcements, a good many of the best people stay away. It doesn't pay! That's our vote. We don't argue it, but simply register it with you."

There is a sheaf of similar answers. Perhaps, underlying the motion picture business there is a force that has not been seriously reckoned with as a possible dictating power. It is the voice of the intelligent theatre man who knows and understands the temper of his people. Up to date, he has not made his opinions strongly vocal. It is about time you realized, Mr. Exhibitor, that your day is at its dawning! Send us your opinion. This Department is sending every viewpoint that is submitted directly to those people in Hollywood who are responsible for production.

The Title Plague

Like the summer beetles and the July rains we seem unable to get away from the too smart title expert who feels that he must conform to the modern trend by giving a spicy and double-edged title to an otherwise perfectly harmless production. Each week brings its quota of these unwelcome labels. Perhaps they do attract astonishing audiences, we do not know. But as a matter of good business ethics, it is hardly fair to fool the public by advertising a risque title, and suggestive situations, for a perfectly harmless and innocuous picture that has merited the endorsement of half a dozen of the leading preview groups. It is selling the article under a false label—a legal offense under the Pure Food Commission.

In the past week we have seen in the studio "Their Mad Moment," a Fox picture that leaves one a little limp waiting for the madness that doesn't arrive. It is a picture that can be carried on an endorsed list and presented to discriminating audiences.

There are others of the same character in the offing: "My Sin"; "Gentlemen of the Night"; "The Marriage Bed"; "Consolation Marriage"; "Morals for Women"; "The Reckless Hour," and a dozen more. We're wondering!

Westport's Better Films

In Westport, Conn., a group of intelligent folk has decided that Westport, too, shall march in the vanguard of those communities interested in high-grade screen entertainment. The New York Herald-Tribune for this week carried the following item which is important to readers of the HERALD: "The first of a series of better film entertainments, to be presented each Sunday and Monday evenings for the rest of the season at the Fine Arts Theatre, Post Road, Westport, under the direction of Mr. George Comden and Mr. Stanley Joseloff, of Norwalk, will be shown tomorrow night, with the presentation of "Two Hearts in Three-Four Time," the screen operetta from the German. Many prominent residents of the county are interested in this project of bringing performances of superior American and foreign films before the public. The second picture to be shown at the theatre, July 19, will be "Outward Bound." Mr. Terry Ramsaye, of Westport, historian of the motion picture industry and editor of MOTION PICTURE HERALD, is among those who have indorsed this test of a better class of entertainment in the cinema. Mr. E. Humphrey Doulens, of Norwalk, has been appointed as one of the directors of the theatre and will take an active part in the selection of programs to be presented there."

Club Groups' Summer Schedule

The previewing groups of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae, continue to serve under the exacting preview schedule during the summer months. Their members cover practically every picture made by the motion picture industry in this country and all those coming in from abroad. Their reports make it increasingly necessary for state chairmen and state club groups to continue their cooperation through the vacation days. Within the past week reports of interesting meetings have been sent to this Department by the Rhode Island State Federation of Women's Clubs; Kentucky Parent-Teachers Association; Birmingham, Alabama, Better Films Committee; Macon, Georgia, Better Films Council; Advisory Film Committee of Spokane, Washington; the Ohio Federation of Women's Clubs, which represents 205 active chairmen in the various communities of the state of Ohio. The report from this group states that it is their hope to have a motion picture chairman in each of the 550 federated clubs in the state of Ohio by the fall. This is one of the outstanding examples of state organization and its possibilities for the motion picture theatre man.

Charles O. Bauman Buried; Brought Chaplin to Screen

The many friends of Charles O. Bauman paid their final tribute to the veteran of the industry Tuesday at the funeral services at his home at Great Neck, L. I. Burial was at St. John's Cemetery. He died Saturday in his 58th year.

Mr. Bauman, with his partner, Adam Kessel, first brought Charles Chaplin to pictures, their product being under the trade name "Kay Bee." Their early enterprises in production also included signing Thomas H. Ince away from Universal and Mack Sennett from Biograph.

Surviving Mr. Bauman are his wife, Anna Bauman; a daughter, Mrs. Daniel Kelly; a brother, August, and a sister, Mrs. Philip Brandneier.

National Theatre Institutes Reduction in Price of Items

National Theatre Supply has announced, effective July 1, a definite reduction in price on many staple supply items, the decrease to the consumer ranging from 10 per cent to 33 1-3 per cent.

The company points out that these are not temporary reductions, but a real effort to effect a downward revision in prices, brought about by manufacturing economies.

Paramount production staff people who visited Reno, Nevada, recently to obtain atmosphere for the film, "The Road to Reno," returned to Hollywood with the complete recipe of how divorces may be acquired speedily and with a minimum of inconvenience at the Mecca of those who seek freedom from marital vows. Simple: Maintain residence 42 days —Lawyer draws up complaint—Papers served on husband—Wife cannot leave state for one full day—After six weeks wife and lawyer attend court—Witness testifies to Nevada residence—Wife takes stand—Lawyer asks if husband was cruel—Wife says yes—Lawyer asks if she did anything to provoke cruelty—Wife says no—No contest by husband—Wife gets divorce—Time, five minutes!

Educational Set For Denver Meet

Educational's home office executives have left Chicago for Denver and the last of the three regional sales meetings, following the Chicago central district conference at the Congress Hotel, E. W. Hammons, L. A. Young and William Saal addressed the Chicago meeting, when the new lineup was locally announced.

Two central district managers were appointed, O. S. Barnett for Louisville, and J. A. Harris, Milwaukee. Hammons returned to New York at the end of the meeting, while Saal continued to the Coast. Other home office officials will meet with nine branch managers for the territory from Kansas City to the Coast at the Denver session.

Representatives in Chicago expressed regret at the forced absence of A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager of Educational, who missed his first sales meeting in 10 years.

One-Reel Red Cross Film Marks 50th Anniversary

Pictures of American soldiers in battle in the World war—films seen only by individuals in official Government capacities —will be shown soon in a one-reel production, "The Symbol of Mercy," made for the American Red Cross by William J. Ganz Company of New York and to be released without charge to theatres throughout the country in observance of the fiftieth anniversary of the Red Cross. The picture carries no appeal for funds but tells the story of the work of the organization, with Milton J. Cross talking and with a background of music, RCA Photophone recording.

The war scenes are followed by depiction of the care given disabled soldiers, historic pictures of the San Francisco fire of 1906, Red Cross methods of instruction for lifesavers, scenes of disaster relief in peace times.

NATHANSON REPLIES TO COMBINE CHARGE

Pacent Infringes On W. E. Patents, U. S. Judge Holds

In an opinion given out at Brooklyn this week, Judge Clarence G. Galston, of Federal District Court, held that talking picture equipment of the Pacent type infringes upon patents embodied in the Western Electric System, according to W. E., which stated that the opinion affects a number of theatres throughout the country now using Pacent equipment. It terminates favorably, according to Western, the first of a series of similar actions brought by Western Electric on the same patents.

The action was begun in June, 1929, by Western Electric and its subsidiary, Electrical Research Products against the Broadway theatre of Sol Wallerstein in Buffalo in which Pacent equipment was used. The case was tried in that city before Judge Galston. It was defended by Warner Brothers who control a circuit of theatres, some of which also use Pacent equipment.

Judge Galston stated that the "patents involved are of extreme importance, some of them, perhaps going to the very heart of the sound motion picture industry."

The opinion upheld Western Electric on three patents finding them valid and infringed upon. One of these, the Colpitts patent, covers broadly the "push-pull" relation of vacuum tubes for the amplification of sound. The second, the Arnold patent, covers perfections in this arrangement. The third, the Mathes patent, embodies the most modern circuit for maintaining a uniform supply of power to the amplifier regardless of fluctuations at the source.

One of the contentions made by the defendent, states Western, was that theatre owners who use films and sound records produced under Western Electric and ERPI licenses were by virtue of that fact licensed to use any type of reproducing equipment. Judge Galston denied this contention.

The opinion found that the Lowenstein patent, covering the "grid bias," was invalid. It held that the Blattner patent, covering a device that permits the use of an alternating current supply to the amplifier, was not infringed upon.

Important as it is in itself, Judge Galston's opinion is said to have a wider significance in its bearing on other suits, now pending, which involve the same patents. Such suits are awaiting trial in the Federal Court of the Southern District of New York against Pacent Reproducer and Pacent Electric, and in the District of Delaware against Stanley Company.

No statement was forthcoming from the Pacent company.

Also Revives Fight Against Zukor and Killam—Ontario Names Aide in Quiz

Two new developments in Canada following the charge of Commissioner Peter White that a combine in the United States dominates the film industry in Canada are a sharp reply by N. L. Nathanson stirring up the old battle against Adolph Zukor and J. W. Killam, of Montreal, regarding the sale of controlling shares in Famous Players Canadian Corporation to Paramount Publix, and the appointment of R. H. Greer, K.C., of Toronto to act for the Ontario government in analyzing the evidence in the White report and to collaborate in working out "whatever action will be taken."

Col. J. H. Price, attorney general of Toronto, who made the appointment, declined to say whether prosecutions will be entered against the accused film companpies but added that Greer will act as prosecutor if such action is decided upon.

Nathanson, former managing director of Famous Players Canadian, was "severely reprimanded" in the White report but replies:

"At no time was I asked to appear before the Commissioner to give evidence or explain the many details and transactions regardless of the fact that the company chiefly under investigation had been organized and developed under my management. May I point out that Famous Players Canadian Corporation was not under control of Paramount Publix Corporation until they had secured the shares last year.

"No one knows better than Mr. Killam that control of the company was maintained and kept in Canada by myself, regardless of the fact that some of my associates had disposed of their interests to Mr. Zukor in 1925. I have received many expressions of commendation from Mr. Killam in the past for the action I took at the time to protect Mr. Killam's interest and that of the shareholders in preventing the company going into American hands.

"There are a number of questions which the shareholders might properly ask Mr. Killam and the other Canadian directors as to refusing, first, to consider the offer from a British company which, they claimed, was partially controlled by American interests (which later was proved not to be so controlled), and then approving an offer from a wholly owned American company on an exchange of shares.

"The responsibility for the present position of the shareholders must rest with Mr. Killam and those Canadian directors who refused to permit these shareholders to voice their opinion on the sale of their shares to a British company and who later, with their approval, made possible the exchange of shares with the American company."

Nathanson asserted he had been very proud of the progress of the company from the original start in 1916 at Toronto to its development into the largest chain of theatres in Canada "and of the loyalty and esteem of the employees of the company."

PASSING IN REVIEW

Silence

(Paramount)

Melodrama

As a stage play and as a silent picture "Silence" was a big success. As a talking picture it also bids fair to become a success, judging from the reaction of a Santa Monica preview audience.

The Max Marcin play, which was co-directed by the author and Louis Gasnier, has been changed somewhat from the original screen version.

Comment was made that the story treatment seemed to be outmoded, also that Peggy Shannon, in a dual role, was unable to make a sharp enough difference between the two characters, because of makeup. Her acting, however, elicited considerable praise for its sincerity and conviction. Clive Brook, according to the lobby consensus, divided acting honors with John Wray, while Willard Robertson, Marjorie Rambeau, Charles Starrett, Frank Sheridan and Charles Trowbridge also turned in commendable performances.

Brook, a thief, returns from prison planning to marry Miss Shannon. Before the ceremony is performed he is sought by the police and Willard Robinson marries the girl, who is about to become the mother of Brook's child. Years later Brook finds Robertson and his daughter, also played by Miss Shannon, living happily in a small twon. He tries to prevent John Wray from blackmailing Robertson and in a struggle Wray is shot and killed by Miss Shannon. Brook tells police he is the murderer and is sentenced to death.

In a last minute plea to the governor and by a confession by Miss Shannon, Brook is pardoned. The story ends with Brook leaving Miss Shannon with Robertson who is better able to care for her.

The story is enacted through Brook's confession to a prison chaplain, who, it later develops, is a spy sent by the newspapers.

The unusual twists near the end of the story caused much favorable comment but the final ending did not satisfy those who were in sympathy with Brook.

Produced and distributed by Paramount Publix. Story, continuity and dialog by Max Marcin. Directed by Louis Gasnier and Max Marcin. Photographed by Charles Rosher. Release date, August 29, 1931.

The Star Witness

(Warners)

Drama

"The Star Witness" is unquestionably a hit. Of course, there have been so many gangster pictures that a brand new yarn was needed to put another over in a big way. But Warners, nevertheless, are to be congratulated on such a radical and successful departure from all the old ingredients of picture story telling.

The hero is an aged veteran of the Civil War. There is not a love scene in the entire picture. (We can hear a vast hallelujah to this from the lungs of all the kids of these United States.) In this picture what would ordinarily be a background is made the foreground of the plot.

Leads are made of those who by the cut-and-dried recipe would be character players. And all this with such success that critics arose with joy, shook hands with each other and with themselves and went forth from the projection room happier and better men. After all, it's the idea of the picture that carries it. With the right idea you can change formulae at will.

The theme is patriotism, and that's sure fire. Against the huge and solemn background of the patriotic spirit of America the miserable gangster is shown in his true size and color. The lesson of the picture is as certain as its punch. In retrospect it will probably appear that motion pictures had a lot to do with putting gangster rule upon its toboggan slide.

Produced and distributed by Warners. Directed by William A. Wellman. Assistant director, Frank Shaw. Author, Lucien Hubbard. Edited by Hal McLernon. Cameraman, James Van Trees. Art director, John J. Hughes.

Sally in Our Alley

(RKO-Associated Radio)

Gracie Fields' First Film

(By London Bureau of the HERALD)

With a story of approximately the weight of Al Jolson's "Jazz Singer," Gracie Fields weighs in with her first. The comparison is suggested by the fact that in this adaptation of Charles McEvoy's play, "The Likes of 'Er," Miss Fields is very much a feminine likeness of Al in his first talker.

She sings in a cafe, the meantime cleaning up and waiting upon customers, because she simply must sing. She has a disappointment in love too, for her soldier sweetheart goes marching off to war, and because he doesn't feel like hobbling back with a leg short, he gets his pal to tell the girl, her name is Sally of course, that he was killed. For ten years she keeps his memory green, and sports a motto on her bedroom wall "Patience is a Virtue," resisting the charms of all suitors. Her soldier lover's pal, thinking to turn her mind off the "dead" hero, and maybe on to himself, tells her that the man whose memory she still cherishes didn't really die for his country, but married a girl "out East."

Sally nearly decides to marry her whiskery old boss at the cafe, but her hobbling hero changes his mind and reappears. But she hasn't sung all her songs yet so it has to be that a girl waif, whom Sally has befriended happens on the returned lover first, and gets in first shot. Induced by pure (or impure) romanticism, the waif tells the soldier boy that Sally no longer cares. And to comfort him she takes him into her arms (stealing his wallet at the same time) just as Sally comes on the scene. The lover takes that for the finish and goes off. But the waif relents through Sally's kindness to her, and confesses, going off in search of the hero with whom she returns to the cafe just in time to find Sally, with an appropriate lump in the throat, just singing to the mob. Final closeup is of Sally and her soldier embracing in full view and to the vociferous cheers of the coffee shop clientele.

Gracie Fields carries the whole burden of the picture on her own broad shoulders, and with even such a modest story, seems to get away with it. As to whether the rich Lancashire dialect which half makes her performance for this country, will mean anything to American audiences, RKO has naturally to learn. But there is little doubt that whatever American may look at the story, and its translation into picture form, they will recognize an artist in Gracie Fields. And they are not backward at giving a hand to a real artist, so that, together with the RKO interest in the venture, may get this British picture where any other of its calibre might not hope to go in the States.

Produced by Basil Dean (Associated Radio Pictures). Directed by Maurice Elvey. Story adaptation by Alma Reville. Story by the late Charles McEvoy. Running time, 77 minutes.

The Magnificent Lie

(Paramount)

War Drama

A rather lethargic preview audience watched "The Magnificent Lie" run its 75 long minutes in Santa Monica. The consensus seemed to be that the feature was decidedly below the Ruth Chatterton standard.

The story opens in 1918 with the meeting of a wounded American soldier and a French actress in a hospital near the front—a memory the man cherishes for 13 years after the war. The actress is making a tour of the States and plays New Orleans, where the ex-soldier is now working on an engineering project.

He plans to meet her again and calls at the stage door with his buddy. They are refused admittance by the doorman and subsequently are roundly kidded by a couple of French actors in the company who tell them the star is giving a party that night and probably will invite them when she hears they are in town.

While watching the show out front, our hero's war injury catches up with him and he is stricken blind. It is at this point Ruth Chatterton becomes more than an incidental character in the production of which she is the star.

She plays a cheap cafe entertainer who undertakes an imitation of the French actress in her death scene in "Camille." So good is her performance that her aid is enlisted in perpetrating an impersonation upon the blind man. It starts as a joke, but becomes serious when the imposter falls in love with the boy. He finally discovers the deception and berates the woman. She, in anger, drives recklessly while taking him home and wrecks the car. But in the accident, his sight is restored and a happy ending thereby achieved.

Lobby comment following the preview pointed to several unbelievable aspects of the story.

THE COMMON LAW

••Sales Angles on "The Common Law"

1 Constance Bennett is the biggest name in pictures by box-office test.

2 Robert W. Chambers' novel literally known to millions. One of the most widely read books of the twentieth century.

3 Constance Bennett as an artist's model in Gay Paree.

4 Biggest picture Bennett has made yet. Has everything. Role fits her like a glove.

5 Plus the fame of the novel, the title itself has strong drawing power.

6 The Parisian art colony is an irresistible story background.

7 Her philosophy of life and love, crystallized in the phrase: "I don't care what people say, as long as you say you love me!"

8 Romantic intrigue suggested by the line "The secret woman in a great man's life."

9 Glorification of love: "Love painted this picture. Love wrote this story."

10 "Men called her the perfect woman" is a sales angle to interest both men and women.

11 Magnificent production. Exemplified by the gorgeous sequence of the 4-Arts Ball in which over 500 players take part.

12 Star values all the way through. Cast includes Joel McCrea, Lew Cody, Marion Shilling, Hedda Hopper, Robert Williams, Paul Ellis and others.

13 Photoplay edition of Robert W. Chambers' novel excellent channel for exploitation. Brilliant book-jacket plays up Constance Bennett big.

14 Title automatically will start discussion and word-of-mouth advertising.

15 Constance Bennett's reputation as the best-dressed woman on the screen, plus the gorgeous clothes designed for her in this production by Gwen Wakeling, are naturals for merchandise tie-ups, fashion-shows, etc.

16 Unusually beautiful line of posters make outdoor advertising particularly feasible.

17 Press-sheet ads cover all salient box-office angles. Ads prepared after conference with production and sales force. Okayed and used by all major theatre circuits.

foreign markets. In some instances, seven versions go into distribution abroad:

1. The original English version.
2. The taking out of all sound and releasing as a silent.
3. Eliminating the dialogue and adding synchronized music.
4. Leaving the English dialogue and super-imposing titles in the language of the country in which the picture is to go.
5. Using the American version with foreign voices dubbed in.
6. Retaking of the English version in a foreign language.
7. Taking the American version, cut in titles and add a musical score.

The quota laws in many of the countries, according to foreign managers, have given the industry in those countries "a theoretical courage."

As one executive stated it: "It gave them the guts to produce. The government gave them the crutches on which to walk."

Today one of the great problems of the American producer and distributor is the rate of exchange. Also, American companies must take into consideration, according to foreign department executives, the political situation which, "the film industry gets caught in with all other industries. This is due to the critical economic situation in many countries."

Exchange Rate a Factor

In countries where normally legislation would not be enacted against the film industry, the economic condition has been such, and has been so critical, that the motion picture industry has suffered along with all other industries.

In England an odd situation presents itself. The Englishman looks upon the domestic product as foreign and upon the American pictures as domestic. Barring Germany and perhaps Japan, this same situation, according to foreign departments, exists throughout the world.

The rate of exchange, especially in the Spanish speaking countries has kept the American companies from having their biggest year in the foreign field. This is despite the fact that with big personalities an American picture can be box office in any country of the world.

Said one foreign manager: "If you have the right picture, and a big personality, you can fix that picture to satisfy the whole world."

Before the days of the talking picture, the foreign market, according to the men in charge of this field, brought in profit for the American companies. In those days domestic rentals underwrote production cost and distribution cost, and the foreign market provided the profit.

Today the foreign market is a problem. The world, in the opinion of foreign managers, is picture wise, with the silent now definitely out. Also, the synchronized musical version does not meet with approval in foreign countries. The reason for this is the fact that, like the American public, they know sound.

After all, it seems that the talking picture has made little difference in the foreign market; excluding of course, quota law, and the cost of reproduction.

Not every company, but several of them, are meeting the foreign demands with super-imposed titles. It has been found, according to observers, super-imposed dialogue will be accepted in all countries.

Taking one country as an example: In the United States super-imposed titles are made on American pictures in Spanish, Portugese, Japanese, Dutch and Chinese. Abroad the same company is using the super-imposed title for audiences in Germany, Sweden, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Yugo-Slavia, Hungary and Greece.

STAGE'S CHALLENGE

attention on the legitimate producer in an effort to increase the number of outgoing road shows, the Shuberts and Theatre Guild are building up patronage, at theatres which they will use, by means of subscriptions for the entire 1931-32 theatrical season.

Robert Sisk, of the Theatre Guild, stated that "more important than the efforts of a dozen organizations to rebuild the road is the development of good plays and the reduction of the number of theatres so that mediocre stage attractions are not sent out solely for the purpose of supplying bulk stage product for a fixed number of houses."

"The quality standard of stage plays would appreciate considerably," stated Sisk, "if an important portion of key city legitimate theatres were kept dark. The rebuilding process would then develop along firmer lines than at present. If all shows are good shows, the results of a 'revival' campaign would be successful.

"With the novelty of talking pictures worn off to a considerable degree, the road show has a better chance for recovering lost ground than it has had at any time since sound's inception."

That keener interest is being evidenced in key city road shows may be gleaned from the reaction to the Theatre Guild's subscription plan for the coming season, which brought a 200 per cent increase in season subscriptions at road shows, instead of an expected decline which the Guild believed would result from the current economic depression.

In line with the new development of the road, the Theatre Guild has affiliated itself with a group of New York producers to present certain of their productions before the Guild's subscription audiences outside New York. This means an expansion of the touring territory available to New York plays; it also means that the Guild's own productions in other cities will be accomplished for the first time on the season's schedule, by the productions of other managements.

Leaders Cooperate

John Golden, Gilbert Miller, Arthur Hopkins, Brock Pemberton and Chester Erskin in association with the Erlangers have agreed to cooperate in this project, which has been in the making for some months. Definite arrangements have been made with Golden to tour his production of Rachel Crothers' "As Husbands Go" and with Miller to tour his production of Philip Barry's "Tomorrow and Tomorrow." Miller and Hopkins now are with the Shuberts.

Hopkins, Pemberton and the Erlanger office, which contemplates an active production season, have assured the Guild of their interest, and their agreement is to tour their plays over the Guild's circuit of subscription cities whenever suitable plays present themselves, according to Sisk.

No name for this collective group of managers has been decided upon. It is tentatively called, for subscription solicitation purposes outside New York, the Theatre Guild Group. The individual managements will retain their identity in this plan, but the group name, to be decided upon, will be used in connection with each production sent on tour.

Another part of the plan, which has for its purposes the further increase of the already sizeable audiences which the Guild has organized in cities outside New York, will be to throw the support of this audience to other meritorious plays from time to time. This means that for designated plays the holders of subscription cards will be entitled to the same privileges which are theirs for the plays of the regular series.

In addition to the plans which are concerned with other managements, the Guild will continue to send its own productions on tour, and booking arrangements are now being made for several next season. It is likely, in the coming and future seasons, that the total number of plays in the Guild group's subscription series will rise, since the Guild will maintain its own schedules and will augment its seasonal program with plays of other producers. The plan, then, is being laid to continue beyond next season.

In the past the Guild has sent some 20 of its productions on tour, and the route over which these plays have been given has included Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Cincinnati and many others. Buffalo will be included with the new season, which officially starts with Guild activities on October 1.

The Shubert subscription plan, used in the past few seasons along lines similar to those fostered by the Theatre Guild, include 15, of which Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago are the "zone" cities. To each of the three "zone" cities, Shuberts will send six productions—their own or those of producers or managers who book through them. Each will play four weeks, after which the second string towns, including Detroit, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Boston, Hartford, New Haven, Baltimore, Washington, Pittsburgh, Buffalo and Cleveland, will have the plays for a minimum of one week and longer if they hold up.

45,000 on Guild Books

At the end of last season the Guild had 45,000 on its subscription books. No figures are forthcoming at the Shubert office.

At Actors' Equity it was stated:

"Every one in the theatre is now interested in the revival of the road and is agreed that such a revival would be of immense value to the theatre. And Equity is second to none in the recognition of that value. But Equity believes that this revival is a job for every one in the theatre and that it needs a systematic plan of campaign and a lot of intensive work as much as the movement needs a slogan.

"Equity believes that this job is sufficiently big to tax the ability of all the varied groups in the theatre to accomplish it. It would prefer to see all the groups in the theatre united in that effort."

President Gillmore of Equity stated recently that "the legitimate has fallen off 50 per cent in four years and will be washed up in another four, unless some form of angel comes along!" Equity's membership is understood to have dropped from 7,200 in 1930 to 5,000 in 1931, with its affiliated Chorus Equity membership depreciating an equal proportion.

Class "A" stock companies traveling the road in 1930 totaled 103, as compared with 70 for 1931. The 1930 figure will be topped during the coming season, if present plans involved in the "revival" movement materialize. It is understood that 100 companies will start the new season.

The number of stage plays which rehearsed in New York and were engaged in and through New York from August, 1930, to May 15, 1931, were 265. During that period 212 have already closed and 53 are still running.

There were 80 fewer productions than in the same period the previous year.

It is estimated that 15,000 amateur productions are presented yearly throughout the country, making terrific inroads on legitimate stock business, which finds its biggest competition in motion pictures, particularly since sound.

Ruth Chatterton was thought to have done well in false situations and to have accomplished the most possible with the material at hand. Her support, with the exception of Stuart Erwin, was deemed adequate. Erwin, playing straighter than usual, won hearty approbation. Due interest also was afforded Ralph Bellamy for his blind man characterization.

Produced and distributed by Paramount Publix. Based on the story "Laurels and the Lady" by Leonard Merrick. Screen play by Vincent Lawrence and Samson Raphaelson. Directed by Berthold Viertel. Photographed by Charles Lang. Release July 25.

Night Nurse

(Warner Brothers)

Comedy-Drama

"Ethics! Ethics! I'm sick of ethics. I'm going to tell the police!" That or—

"The successful nurse is the one who keeps her mouth shut."

That is the conflict presented in the theme of "Night Nurse," Warner Brothers production seen at the Strand theatre in New York. The first quotation is from the night nurse, who has seen a child being starved to death while an unscrupulous physician and a conniving chauffeur plot to starve the girl and her sister to death and keep their mother continuously intoxicated so that they can get the children's trust fund which is under the mother's charge. The second quotation is from the doctor.

The decision reached by the nurse, as well as the outcome of the story, is pictured in the final scene of the production. The night nurse, whose bootlegger friend is driving her to the police station to swear out a warrant, sees an ambulance dash past. The bootlegger friend explains that he has told "a coupla guys" that he does not like the chauffeur at the children's house. And the ambulance driver explains at his destination that he is bringing to the morgue the body of a man in a chauffeur's uniform.

The audience took well to the performances of Miss Stanwyck, Joan Blondell, Blanche Friderici as the housekeeper and Ben Lyon.

Produced and distributed by Warner Brothers. Directed by William Wellman. From the novel of the same title by Dora Macy. Adaptation by Oliver H. P. Garrett. Dialogue writer, Charles Kenyon. Cameraman, Chick McGill. Film Editor, Ed McDermott. Assistant director, Frank Shaw. Art director, Mack Parker. Running time, 73 minutes. Release, August 8, 1931.

The Common Law

(RKO Pathe)

Comedy Drama

The draw of Constance Bennett at the box office is illustrated by the crowds, composed largely of women, which have been passing their money through the wicket at the Mayfair theatre on Broadway during the run of "The Common Law," adaptation of one of Robert W. Chambers' most widely read stories.

The screen play, as written by John Farrow, with dialogue by Horace Jackson, concerns an American girl, Valerie, who has been living an intimate life with one Cardemon, in France. Tiring of this, she decides to live a conventional life, and leaves Cardemon's abode.

That she may earn a livelihood, she seeks employment as a model with a young American artist, scion of a wealthy family. He promises to give her a tryout providing she is willing to pose her figure. Needing money, she acquiesces.

The artist eventually finds that she is an inspiration, and their professional relationship grows into love. The girl's past intimacy with Cardemon, however, is rumored about and the two lovers part.

The estrangement continues until each sees the other at a gay party with a new companion. They are reunited and sail for America to meet the young artist's parents. Here they find a barrier in the artist's domineering sister, who is determined that he shall marry a girl of their social set. However, in the father Valerie finds a champion.

During a yachting party, the girl is embarrassed by the presence of Cardemon, who also has journeyed to the United States. A fight between the artist and Cardemon follows, and the scion of wealth and the girl leave the boat for happiness.

This is not the screenplay as first prepared by Pathe. In the original adaptation, the locale was America and many sequences contained therein do not appear in the picture as it reaches the screen.

Lasca of the Rio Grande

(Universal)

Western

An audience at a Coast theatre found more than a slight measure of interest in this Universal Western with a somewhat different treatment.

The patrons enjoy the performances of Leo Carrillo, John Mack Brown and Dorothy Burgess in the leading roles, while the work of the entire supporting cast and the direction of Edward Laemmle were accorded the commendation of those present.

The most compelling moment of the film was the picturing of a cattle stampede. The comedy of Slim Summerville afforded a great deal of merriment to the audience.

John Mack Brown plays the Texas Ranger, who is in love with the dance hall performer, Lasca, played by Dorothy Burgess. Lasca holds particular attraction for Carrillo, as the villain of the piece. She kills a man in self-defense and Brown, taking her to jail, permits her to escape. In a concluding sequence, she loses her life in an effort to save him from Carrillo.

Produced and distributed by Universal. Directed by Edward Laemmle. Story by Tom Reed. Adaptation by Randall Faye. Dialogue by Tom Reed and Randall Faye. Cameraman, Harry Neumann. Editor, Ted Kemp. Release date, October 13, 1931.

The Brat

(Fox)

Comedy-Drama

This screen adaptation of the Maude Fulton stage play was heartily greeted at the Coast showing. Sally O'Neil, it was indicated by the audience, fully justified the action of Fox in signing the player to a term contract.

Her performance, one of vivacity, which was apparently thoroughly enjoyed by the audience, was one of the principal reasons for the appeal of the film as a whole. Excellent photography and the acknowledged able direction of John Ford added considerably to the ultimate result.

Laughs were well spotted throughout the picture, several times during the showing, the laughter of the audience causing the following dialogue to be quite inaudible.

Praise was generally accorded for the work of Allen Dinehart, Frank Albertson, William Collier, Sr., Mary Forbes and Virginia Cherrill.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by John Ford. From the play by Maude Fulton. Adaptation and dialogue by Sonya Levien and S. N. Behrman. Staged by William Collier, Sr. Settings by Jack Schultz. Cameraman, Joseph August. Release date, October 18, 1931.

Rider of the Cactus

(Big 4)

Western

A Western starring Wally Wales, and having in support, Buzz Barton and Lorraine La-Val in the feminine lead, "Rider of the Cactus" contains much hard riding and fast action thrown against a selection of cactus country background.

The not unusual story, though with a few deft and unusual touches, concerns a young girl visitor to the Mexican borderland, who accidently comes upon a map and key, the map, in Latin, being the directions for finding certain hidden treasure. Wales meets and falls in love with the girl.

An outlaw, played by Fred Church, learns of the map, and makes desperate efforts to get it. Needless to report, Church loses out before the concluding sequence, Wales recovers the hidden treasure, and he and the girl turn the find over to the local mission church, in return for which the padre ties the wedding knot.

The performances of the players were generally commended, while the direction of David Kirkland was considered an able piece of work. The audience seemed to find the film an entertaining screen effort.

Produced by Hooper-Connell Corp., Ltd. Released by Big 4. Directed by David Kirkland. Story by Charles T. Connell. Adaptation and dialogue by David Kirkland. Cameraman, R. B. Hooper. Release date, July 7, 1931. Running time, 60 minutes.

Children of Dreams

(Warners)

Operetta

Sigmund Romberg and Oscar Hammerstein II have collaborated on the story and musical numbers of this Warner operetta. The two famous figures of the musical stage have put together a romance of the apple pickers of the West, who follow the picking season from place to place, and sing their way through their work as do the gypsies.

Playing, and singing the leads are Margaret Schilling and Paul Gregory of the Broadway stage, whose voices brought favorable reaction from an audience at the New York Warner Beacon in upper Broadway.

The musical compositions of the co-authors are in a setting of apple orchards and mountain backgrounds.

The story has to do with the girl, Molly, and her fondness for another apple picker, Tommy. When they are about to be married, the girl is offered an opportunity for study and voice cultivation by a wealthy woman who has overheard her singing. Her son, incidentally, has developed more than a little interest in the young singer. She is forced to consent, as a means of extricating her bottle-free father from a difficult situation.

Continued operatic success on the stages of many cities turns the thoughts of the star from a young apple picker to society and fame and money, but the old doctor friend of the mother prescribes a cure for her developed temperament, that being a visit to the old orchard.

There, naturally enough, Tommy finds her, the concluding sequence showing the two driving off together in his bungalow on wheels, leaving a career and a wealthy fiance behind her.

Produced and distributed by Warners. Directed by Alan Crosland, story, music, adaptation and dialogue by Sigmund Romberg and Oscar Hammerstein, II. Editor, Harold McLernon. Cameraman, James Van Trees. Release date, July 25, 1931. Running time, 83 minutes.

A Holy Terror

(Fox)

Western

George O'Brien plays the hard riding, quick shooting Eastern millionaire's supposed son, who comes in from a polo match to find his father murdered, and who goes West to find the murderer.

Sally Eilers, in the opposite role, makes an attractive and rather appealing feminine lead, though in the course of the story, she does comparatively little, the film being O'Brien from start to finish. The action is fast, and consequently afforded the New York Roxy audience a measure of enjoyment.

After the death of the father, O'Brien discovers enough among his father's papers, to indicate that his name was not originally the same as the son had known it. Also, he discovers the name of William Drew, rancher in the West whom, he suspects, knows a good deal about the death. Flying West, O'Brien loses control of his plane and crashes into a girl's bathroom, the girl being Sally Eilers.

The foreman of the ranch, played by Humphrey Bogart, has a grievance against the stranger, growing out of the latter's attraction for Miss Eiler, for whom the foreman has hopes. Told by Drew to bring in O'Brien unharmed and unarmed, the foreman attempts it with Stanly Fields, a ranch hand who had taken a bath in a water trough at the hands of O'Brien.

The stranger escapes the two when they are attempting to bring him in, and rides to the ranch himself for a showdown with Drew. Fields steps into the picture and attempts to shoot O'Brien but Drew steps between and is wounded in the shoulder. Then the story is told: that Drew is really the father of the Eastener, and that he had gone East for a reckoning with the man who had stolen his wife and child many years before. The gun which killed the supposed father had gone off by accident in a scuffle.

The story, comment indicated, is not particularly striking, but fast action, riding and the Western background, coupled with the work of the featured players, including James Kirkwood as Drew, was sufficient to provide a good bit of entertainment. Irving Cumming's direction was commended.

Produced and distributed by Fox. Directed by Irving Cummings. Based on the novel, "Trailin," by Max Brand. Continuity by Ralph Block. Dialogue by Alfred A. Cohn and Myron Fagan. Edited by Ralph Dixon. Cameraman, George Schneiderman. Release date, July 19, 1931. Running time, 53 minutes.

SHORTS

The Voice from the Void

(Mascot)

Great Serial

Here is Episode 1 of the new Mascot serial, "The Vanishing Legion," which has Harry Carey in the lead role, supported by Edwina Booth, William Desmond, Edward Hearn, Frankie Darrow, Philo McCullough. This should be great material for the younger generation, with more than a thrill or two for the older run of folks. Opening sequence shows a horse fight, in which Rex, the killer, finishes his opponent. Jed Williams is hunted by the law, while the lawless as well are interested in his capture. He is captured and his son attempts to set him free. The bandits are attempting to prevent Cardigan (Harry Carey) from bringing in trucks of oil, and they are successful with the trucks being smashed in a great finish, for the first episode.—Running time, 36 minutes.

Queen of the Night Riders

(Mascot)

Fast Action

This second episode of the "Vanishing Legion" serial is packed with action from the word go. Opens with a bit or two from the preceding chapter. Frankie Darrow, who escapes from one of the trucks, in which he had been riding with his father, is adopted by Carey. The three, Rex, the horse, being included, stage their battle against the outlaws who have been balking Carey in his efforts to bring in the oil. A stampede in the Carey camp winds up this episode with as smashing and gripping an action sequence as anyone could want, and the youngsters will have a great time. The power behind the "Voice" is revealed, and young Darrow discovers that his father is still alive.—Running time, 20 minutes.

The Lion Hunt

(Vitaphone)

Fine

Number 3 of the "Adventures in Africa" series which was filmed by Wynant D. Hubbard on the African Veldt. Hubbard concentrates on an African village, where three lions have attacked the cattle in the home-made corral. The manner in which they dodge about, roar and make sharp rushing attacks on the cattle, is most interesting. No less so is the concentrated method in which the cattle defend themselves with their horns. One lion escapes from the corral and is captured alive by the natives, the second is speared to death and the third is captured in nets under Hubbard's supervision. Very interesting.

Spears of Death

(Vitaphone)

Fascinating

This, the fourth of the "Adventures in Africa" series, has to do for the most part with the assagais, as the African natives' death-dealing spears are known. The accompanying dialogue adds much to the effectiveness of the number. Hubbard, with gun and camera, photographed this interesting series in the heart of Africa. A portion of the film is devoted to an imaginary lion killing by the natives.—Running time, 14 minutes.

Whippet Racing

(MGM)

Great

Caught out in Hollywood, this short number took with a large audience in no small measure. Ward Wing handled the direction and Pete Smith the running fire of dialogue, which was smart and sparkling, and the audience sparkled with it. The film traces the training of whippets for racing, and climaxs with a real race which has a thrill or two all its own. Worthwhile.

Campaign Capers

(Universal)

Real Laughs

The second of the Slim Summerville comedy series, and as usual a laugh number, and a real one. Again, Slim is a marine, while his friend, Harry Gribbon, plays the foil and contributes his own share of the comedy. They are in an unending argument, as usual, with Slim getting the small end of the stick. Dynamite fuses wired to the keys of a typewriter will probably provide the best laugh in the short. Harry J. Edwards directed under the supervision of Edward Kaufman.—Running time, 20 minutes.

Making 'Em Move

(RKO-Pathe)

Original

Here is an Aesop Fable number which has more originality than any animated seen for many a long day. Comically pictures the interior of an animated cartoon studio, showing the animals at work on a number, with the camera dancing in and the sound recorder tripping off the sound track. The animals attend the animated and are lively in their response. Very amusing and original.—Running time, 9 minutes.

The Messenger Boy

(RKO-Pathe)

Amusing

Benny Rubin plays the messenger boy in this fairly amusing comedy effort. Rubin takes a little boy for an airing in his miniature automobile, and the youngster takes the car apart. Taking the child to its mother in a cafe, Benny is forced into an adagio act, with him as the "thrown" end of the dance. His antics are laughable, and his extreme fear comic. It's the way Rubin puts over his lines rather than the lines themselves that are funny. Situations are good for laughs. Edward Luddy directed.—Running time, 22 minutes.

Cold Turkey

(Vitaphone)

Fair Comedy

Helen Broderick, with the assistance of Lester Crawford, drew occasional laughs at the matinee showing of "Cold Turkey" at Warner Bros. Strand, New York. There were spots where the lines had a somewhat higher temperature than the title would indicate. The aged "angel" takes her and a girl companion to Turkey. Helen prepares herself in the finery of the harem to become the shah's favored one, only to find that her "angel" had bought out the place, lock, stock and wives.—Running time, 7 minutes.

The Lone Starved Ranger

(Radio)

A Few Laughs

Roscoe Ates, Radio's stuttering comedian, and stuttering as well as usual, plays the very hungry stranger, who, while in quest of food, gets just about everything else. A Broadway audience managed a number of laughs out of his final landing of the job of sheriff and his capture of Rattle Snake Pete. He gathers in the $500 reward at the same time. No leading lady, at all.—Running time, 20 minutes.

THEATRE RECEIPTS

An improvement in theatre conditions is shown in the reports on gross receipts for the "current week." As against 19 and 20 new low grosses in the weeks past, the "current week" registered only 12, which is the lowest figure since early spring.

It is evident that the new product coming in, along with theatre refrigeration, is drawing more people to the box office. Consideration also should be given to the fact that the vacation period has brought new, and temporary, patrons into the houses.

it knows all the answers

What a book it is! Nearly five hundred pages crammed with facts! The answer to virtually every question that anybody can ask about the motion picture business. Every alert person in the business should have it at his elbow. It will prove invaluable to exhibitors in conducting community contests. It will prove priceless to exchange managers and salesmen.

RIGHT YOU ARE, MR. HAMMONS!

"The American public want to laugh now more than ever; they are also avid for 'the something new in entertainment.' " So says Mr. E. W. Hammons, president of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., in an announcement the past week. Right you are, Mr. Hammons. There has been too much of the drab and heavy stuff in features of late and those exhibitors going in for double featuring have just doubled the dose instead of balancing the bill with something in the lighter vein.

• • • •

Exhibitors have long been guilty of negligence in exploiting to the full and thus deriving the full benefit afforded by the short subjects. In the featured roles of the majority of the two-reel comedies are names that have drawing value. Giving more play to the "added attractions" in newspaper advertising, in the lobby, on the screen and on the marquee will undoubtedly have an attraction value that will exceed most any double feature bill. What's more it has a permanent value at the box office. Don't hide the comedies on your programs under the guise of "added attractions"; SELL them for what they're worth; SELL the names that are in them; SELL their entertainment merits and you'll fill a lot of empty seats and please a lot of customers.

ASSOCIATED PUBLICATIONS.

WATCH THE SHORT-REEL MARKET FOR THE COMING YEAR . . .

It is our idea that the coming season will see more one and two-reelers on the programs of picture theatres than at any time in the history of our business. Exhibs have tried the straight-feature racket and found it wanting. Many distributors have told them they would not permit another feature booked with a picture from their office. These and other things (mainly a reversal to common-showman-sense) will compel the theatre manager to book and play plenty of shorts.

Some of the best entertainment on celluloid is in short reels and if there is an exhibitor who does not realize this, his patrons will soon tell him by patronizing the house that shows them.

THE HOLLYWOOD REPORTER.

PERFECT BALANCE

in every program with ONE FEATURE supported by EDUCATIONAL SHORT SUBJECTS

"Double-Featuritis" is doomed! The public, fed up on the dual feature epidemic, now wants and demands more variety, novelty and laughs. Monotony is a thing of the past. Balanced programs are the order of the day.

So... farewell to an epidemic that has dug deeply down into the pockets of countless theatre owners. Wide-awake exhibitors now show ONE feature—and balance their programs perfectly with short subjects from Educational's great series of one and two-reelers. Educational's comedies, cartoons and novelties bring in the children as well as the adults, send them home happy, and bring them back for more.

J. C. Jenkins—His Colyum

Minneapolis, Minn.

DEAR HERALD:

If you want to meet a nice bunch of fellows you should call on the film exchanges in Minneapolis. Outside of the exchange managers in Omaha, Des Moines, Denver, Dallas, Oklahoma City, Detroit, and Kansas City, they are about the finest bunch of fellows we ever met, and this also includes Los Angeles and Portland.

When we called on Ben C. Marcus, manager for Columbia, we told him we had called to collect $995.00 that his company owed us. Ben asked us what it was for and we said we had written a story two years ago at Winchester, Ind., embodying the titles to 36 Columbia pictures and that they had offered $1000 for the best story to include these titles, and the company had only sent us $5.00 and we wanted the rest of the money. Ben said he was a little short right then but for us to come back the next day. We went back and Ben had left town.

Mr. C. A. Roeder, manager for Paramount, asked us if his subscription had expired and if so he wanted us to renew it and asked us to look it up. We did, and found it did not expire for a couple of months yet, so we had to tell him the truth. That is what a fellow gets for trying to imitate George. That darned cherry tree and hatchet story has cost us a lot of dough in our time. We might have been rich by now if they had kept that legend out of the textbooks.

NICKY WINS

We hesitated a little about going into Warner Brothers' office, for Nicky Goldheimer is the branch manager and we didn't know but what he might want to throw us out. But we ventured in and when he saw us he said, in a loud and gruff voice, "Well, what do you want?" and we said, "Nicky, do you remember when you came out to Neligh several years ago to sell us "Smilin Thru' and you told us you couldn't sell it for a cent less than $125. and we told you we would give you $50 for it and you called us a thief and said we were trying to steal your picture, and we told you no man ever came in our office and called us a thief and got away with it, and we picked up a stove-poker and ran you out of the office, and you came back in a few minutes and wrote up the contracts for $50. Do you remember that?" And Nicky said, "Yes, I remember it, and the joke is on you." And we said, "What do you mean, the joke is on us?" and he replied, "Well, you paid $25.00 more for the picture than I expected to get." There were a number of ladies in the office, and when there are ladies present we simply HAVE to control our temper. That's why Nicky is still manager.

Nicky has improved a whole lot since those days, he is really quite a swell fellow now, he's like wine, improves with age. and in a couple of hundred years from now he ought to be quite a guy.

Mike Frisch, manager for RKO, reminds us a whole lot of Sherm Fitch, RKO manager at Omaha, except that Mike is a much handsomer man and he makes the course in par while Sherm dubs a lot of 'em. Perhaps one reason why we liked Mr. Frisch is because we agreed unanimously as to what was wrong with the business from New York and Hollywood down to Sauk Center and "Main Street." Mr. Frisch impressed us as a real manager, courteous, gentlemanly and full of business.

We found Joe Garrison, manager for Universal, a very pleasant gentleman but quite venturesome. He took chances on going to lunch with us, which proves he isn't afraid of anything except a cancelled contract.

In some ways Joe reminds us of Bob Greenblatt of Omaha who has sold film for Uncle Carl ever since he shed his breechclouts, except that he can't talk as fast as Bob and they would pin the blue ribbon on Joe instead of Bob at a beauty contest. We liked Joe very much, and when we like 'em they must be all right.

—ON MONUMENTS

One film company has recently built a magnificent four story building for their exchange at a cost said to be $250,000. We were told that the stock of this company at one time sold at $127 per share. Today that stock is quoted at $6.75 per share. It's all right to build monuments if you have your own means to build them with, but it is all wrong to build them on the other fellow's dough.

We knew a woman once whose husband died and left her a small home with a large mortgage, four little children and a $2,000 life insurance policy. She paid $400 for a casket to bury him in, $1500 for a monument, and after it was all over, she took in washing to support herself and children. All of which, of course, is none of our dambizness but we thought we'd tell you about it.

Minneapolis goes down to St. Paul every day to see if they have put new roofs on any of the buildings, and St. Paul comes up to Minneapolis to see if they are still wearing wooden shoes. Ole won't have anything to do with Lena if she lives in Minneapolis, and Lena says "Ay yust can't stumach dem big hick down in St. Paul," and so it goes up here with these two towns, while Omaha and Council Bluffs live in peace and harmony like two cats tied by the tails over a clothes line. Somebody ought to do something about it.

Last night we went to the Orpheum thinking we would see a good show, but we saw three acts of vaudeville. that for rottenness would class double A de luxe, and the only thing that kept the show from being a complete flop was Richard Dix and Jackie Cooper in DONOVAN'S KID. That picture went over fine. Tonight we are going to the Minnesota with our nephew and his wife, and if that show is no better we are going to leave in the morning and get out in the small towns where we can see some real entertainment. This city stuff doesn't dig many potatoes for us.

BREAKING UP TEAMS

There now, they did just what we were afraid they would do, they have separated Joe and Winnie. We saw Winnie in GOLD DUST GERTIE last night and Joe wasn't with her and it made us so sore we had a notion to leave the theatre, but who could leave as long as Winnie was on the screen.

They separated Polly and Marie and made a mess of it and the next thing we know they will separate Laurel and Hardy and then they won't be worth a nickel. They can't break up a pair of faces and win much dough with 'em; funny they don't learn that pretty soon.

GOLD DUST GERTIE is a fast moving whiz bang comedy with Winnie doing her stuff as well as she could without Joe. Winnie does well enough by herself, but with Joe they pay dividends and give you rain checks and an all-day-sucker to boot. If they don't put this pair back together we are going out to Hollywood and gum up the whole works. There is no sense in the way they act out there.

We went to the Minnesota tonight and we are glad of it. We saw a cracking good show, Joan Crawford in LAUGHING SINNERS, and if they will make more pictures like that one, this business ought to pick up, but the chances are that the next one we see will be just a picture and hardly that. We believe Joan did the best work in this one she has ever done, and that ought to be good enough for anybody. Good, sensible dialogue is what makes a worthwhile picture, and that's what this one has, and good dialogue oftentimes covers up a lot of blemishes, but there were no blemishes in LAUGHING SINNERS that we noticed. There is just as much difference in dialogue in pictures as there is between the Sextet from Lucia and shanty nigger jazz. One makes you glad you are alive and the other makes you crazy. That's why we have so few happy people and so many lunatic asylums.

"Miracle Woman" Good Movie; Subject Interesting; Cast Fine

By DORIS ARDEN

"The Miracle Woman" is an extraordinary picture—one of the few unusual films that have come to the screen in the recent months. It's the subject-matter, chiefly, which makes it so interesting, but the acting and direction are above average as well. The State-Lake has had to content itself with some rather mediocre pictures lately— but they've got hold of a humdinger this time, and they deserve congratulations for presenting it to Chicago. Barbara Stanwyck has never been lovelier nor more sympathetically cast than she is in this role. She blossoms out into one of the most gifted of our screen players * * * you'll be enthralled and interested.

CHICAGO DAILY TRIBUNE

By MAE TINEE

The picture is a thrilling melodrama that sports several staggering sensational situations with dramatic effort * * * "The Miracle Woman" ought to do big business for it is different and electrically exciting. It is excellently produced and played to the nines. Barbara Stanwyck gives a pulse-quickening performance.

CHICAGO EVENING AMERICAN

"Miracle Woman" Real Smash; Don't Miss It, Urges Rob

By ROB REEL

"The Miracle Woman" is a real smash—an unusual story dramatically developed and with a cast that means something at the box office. It should be well patronized by those who seek good pictures. Frank Capra, who has delivered so many other big Columbia hits, officiated at the megaphone, and summing it all up "The Miracle Woman" is one of THE films of 1931.

Put "The Miracle Woman" down on your list of summer photoplays that MUST NOT BE MISSED. Barbara Stanwyck's performance in it is among the year's best. Columbia deserves a pat on the back for having made it into such a stirring talkie.

CHICAGO EVENING POST

By GENEVIEVE HARRIS

Right in the midst of a slump in pictures comes one so good that there ought to be a parade or something to honor it! * * * it is good entertainment * * * it is an exciting, clever story, presented skilfully, acted in fine fashion.

Barbara Stanwyck Magnificent In This Film.

By CAROL FRINK

The story is well and dramatically told and provides Barbara Stanwyck with her best opportunity to date * * * you will find this a fascinating and exciting drama made from unusual material.

THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS

By CLARK RODENBACH

In "The Miracle Woman" Miss Stanwyck demonstrates again that she does not have to tip her hat to any of 'em as an actress * * * you're hard to please if you don't go for this one.

BOSTON RECORD

By GORDON HILLMAN

One of the most ably directed screen plays of the entire season is "The Miracle Woman" film for Barbara Stanwyck at Keith's. Frank Capra, the director, has waved a magic wand over each and every one of the scenes. "The Miracle Woman" is a triumphant tour de force—something very worth seeing. It is Capra's dynamic power of direction that makes "The Miracle Woman" what it is; a truly remarkable film.

BOSTON POST

Barbara Stanwyck in "The Miracle Woman" is one of those few pictures that justify a dozen disappointing quests for compelling movie entertainment * * * the story itself is richly engrossing * * * the film is of dramatic intensity.

THE BOSTON GLOBE

"The Miracle Woman" at the RKO-Keith Theatre is a well told vivid story * * * the leading character is excellently portrayed by Barbara Stanwyck * * * the picture is particularly timely.

LOS ANGELES ILLUSTRATED DAILY NEWS

By HARRY MINES

"The Miracle Woman" which comes from Columbia studios to the Orpheum screen is a stirring melodrama boasting entertainment plus. All in all, it is a production well worth seeing—credit belongs to Jo Swerling for his good dialogue and to Harry Cohn for a splendid production. Frank Capra directed, evolving an attraction noteworthy for its charm and humanness.

LOS ANGELES EXAMINER

By MARQUIS BUSBY

Enough drama is packed in an hour or so of "The Miracle Woman" for at least three ordinary pictures. It has a daring theme, some sizzling situations, and a magnificent performance by Barbara Stanwyck. Frank Capra's direction is splendid.

THE PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

"The Miracle Woman" which opened yesterday at the Albee is entertaining melodrama. The success of "The Miracle Woman" is aided by the acting of Miss Stanwyck. She carries an impression of sincerity which makes her role an appealing one.

THE COMMERCIAL APPEAL, MEMPHIS

Barbara Stanwyck in "The Miracle Woman" fills the role beautifully, physically and emotionally—a thoroughly good motion picture.

THE SCHENECTADY UNION-STAR

"The Miracle Woman"
Proves Entertaining

From the standpoint of dramatic value "The Miracle Woman" is full of pathos and human appeal. Barbara Stanwyck has the title role and she contributes another of her memorable performances. The picture has been made with careful and high grade craftsmanship by Frank Capra who previously had several big film successes to his credit, namely, "Flight," "Ladies of Leisure," "Rain or Shine," and "Dirigible."

THE POST-STANDARD, SYRACUSE

By HELEN M. TAIT

Barbara Stanwyck in "The Miracle Woman" gives a performance that surpasses any of her previous ones. It would be difficult to decide which scenes are the best. There are plenty of exceedingly dramatic and emotional ones, with a few lighter ones to relieve the tension. And all of them are well done. Don't be afraid to see "The Miracle Woman"—it's worth the time of anyone.

ALBANY EVENING NEWS

"The Miracle Woman" is as widely emotional as its subject. Barbara Stanwyck has a fine gift of acting sincerity, simple earnestness and suppressed emotion. "The Miracle Woman" will have a wide audience appeal.

CLEVELAND PRESS

By SIDNEY ANDORN

Barbara Stanwyck in "The Miracle Woman" scored with large crowd. She does fine acting—great audience picture.

CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER

By GLENN C. PULLEN

"The Miracle Woman" is steadily interesting, vivid romantic drama in which Miss Stanwyck does some of her best work. She blazes out in a scintillating fashion that settles all doubt about her ability. Novel type of plot, a good cast and a heavy heart punch.

DALLAS NEWS [* * *]

A highly entertaining drama of slightly different flavor from the general run of film fare. Barbara Stanwyck's interpretation of the role is the finest bit of histrionism she has yet exhibited on the screen. Credit must also be given Director Capra for the cleverness of his guidance and his unique methods incorporated in filming the play.

NEWARK CALL

"The Miracle Woman"—holds your interest from beginning to the climax. The entire cast is excellent, and, together with a pleasing love interest, suspense and interesting situations, make "The Miracle Woman" an entertaining movie.

SOUND REPRODUCTION

The BLUEBOOK School

ANSWER TO QUESTION NO. 86

The question was: (A) In just what way is current generated in the coil located in the magnetic field of a Western Electric disc record pick-up? (B) What will current generated in the coil in the magnetic field of a Western Electric disc record pick-up result in? (C) What is meant by "oil damped"? (D) Describe the present pick-up equipment.

Here is the correct answer as compiled by the Erpi Engineering Department: Answer to question (A): Current is generated by a varying flux passing through the coils.

Answer to question (B): The current after transformation by the loudspeaker will result in sound the same as the original sound that was recorded.

Answer to question (C): "Oil damped" means that some of the vibrating parts of the reproducer are immersed in oil to prevent free vibration at their natural frequencies.

Answer to question (D): The record by rotating causes the needle riding in the groove to vibrate sidewise. The vibrations are transferred to a diaphragm. The diaphragm vibrating varies the reluctance of the magnetic circuit causing a varying flux which passing through the coils generates a current. After amplification the current is transformed into sound by the loudspeaker.

List of particularly good answers: S. Evans and C. Rau, Joseph Bliven, John McKay, Lester Borst, J. D. Orlander, Bill Doe, D. T. Wyley and James McGuire.

Those who also made the grade, though not quite so well, were: Thomas McGruder, H. D. Cole, Richard Singleton, Bob Danning, N. D. Garling, William D. Hotaling, Peter Cermak, Dan L. Graves, Robert Banning, Peter Danielson, Frank Burker, G. E. Doe, T. Van Vaulkenburg, James Devoy, James Pendone, James Lerbetter, Robert Lester, Dan Graves, William Bogert, Nic Granby, D. L. Simmons, Alonzo Zerach, Jack Billings, Wm. Gibson, Harry Lidding, Andy F. Boe, P. L. Topeing, George Richards, Henry Edwards, John Williams, Alexander Tilson, H. D. Schofield, S. Kay, Tom Kay, Andy Bailey, Lester Daniels, Leroy Bates, R. Channing, W. D. Samuels, R. B. Whithath, D. Johnson, Charles L. Goldman, John H. Day, F. T. Leroy, D. Fausett, Will Peck, B. G. Anden, Larry Tipton, Pat O'Brien, Seymour Carroll, A. Dexter, Seymour Emmerson, Frank Oliver, Tom Hazelton, D. L. Warren, H. B. Becker and L. Mooring.

The replies of all those in the first list deserve publication, but that of course can't be done. I have selected from them the answer of Messrs Evans and Rau as best on points B, C and D. They were wrong in A, but were excellent on all the rest. They say:

(B) The current generated in the coil in the magnetic field of a Western Electric disc record pick-up will result in an exact reproduction in the form of electric current, of the amount and power of the sound waves which have been the original source of energy used to impress the undulations in the grooves in the record.

(C) Oil damped, used in regard to disc pick-up, means that the entire mechanism of the reproducer is enclosed in a casing filled with oil. This is for the purpose of dampening or smoothing out any tendency to excessive freedom of movement, or "wobble," on the part of the needle.

(D) In the present design of Western Electric disc pick-up equipment, the reproducer is oil damped. In the side of the case opposite the magnetic poles is a thin, steel diaphragm to which the needle holder is attached. The flexibility of this diaphragm permits the needle sufficient freedom to follow the record groove undulations. It also serves as the armature. One of the magnet pole pieces is in the form of a circle. It extends around the edge of the steel diaphragm. The other magnet pole piece is double, and is located opposite the center of the diaphragm, its end a few thousandths of an inch removed from the diaphragm. It has a coil wound upon each of its prongs, which are both of the same polarity. This arrangement amounts, in so far as concerns magnetic action, to essentially the same thing as would a straight armature across the legs of a horseshoe magnet, but provides a far better mechanical arrangement. The movements of the needle caused by the record groove undulations will of course be exactly reproduced in the bending of the diaphragm, the greatest effect of which will be concentrated at its center, and since the center pole piece is placed at a certain fixed distance from the center of the diaphragm when it is at rest, it follows that the needle movements will be precisely reproduced in alternations of distance between the diaphragm center and end of center pole piece, and therefore in alternations of electro motive force generated in the coil.

I will print Joseph Bliven's answer on points B, C and D. Everyone was wrong on point A.

(B) The current generated in the coil is an exact electrical equivalent of the original sound waves recorded in the making of a production.

(C) A reproducer filled with oil having low viscosity which presses against the torsion steel armature by force of gravity, and thus lessens the chance of excessive vibration, is known as an oil-damped reproducer.

(D) The present disc pick-up used by the Western Electric is an oil damped reproducer. It has a torsional steel diaphragm that is placed opposite the center of a magnetic pole piece which has a double prong similar to a yoke, but is of the same polarity. Upon this is wound a coil of wire. This disc armature is placed a few thousandths of an inch removed from the pole pieces, so that the flexibility of the steel diaphragm enables the needle to have sufficient freedom without wobble.

The movement of the needle in the record groove oscillates the torsion steel disc armature, so that an electric current is set up (induced. Ed.) as the diaphragm is brought nearer to first one pole piece and then the other, of the permanent magnet. This it will continue to do so long as the record is being rotated with the needle in contact with the groove.

On the side of the diaphragm of the Western Electric reproducer the needle holder is placed, provided with a small set screw to clamp the needle firmly into place. The arm of the pick-ups is just as important as is the reproducer end. If the drift of the reproducer arm be not right, then the dragging of the needle against the side of the record groove will result in very poor sound pick-up, and will most likely, at low frequencies result in breaking down of partitions between grooves, thus throwing the sound out of synchronism.

The correct needle tension of a correctly designed pick-up should not exceed fifty thousand (50,000) pounds per square inch of pressure upon the groove. (Remember the needle rests upon a very fine point. To obtain the square inch pressure the weight resting upon that point must be multiplied thousands of times. Ed.) All pick-ups are not alike in design. The characteristics vary rather widely. The impedances vary from two hundred (200) to three thousand (3,000) ohms, depending upon the type and the coupling to the output circuits of various amplifier sets.

PROJECTION COMMITTEE REPORT

The projection committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers is composed of: Harry Rubin, Chairman; Lester Issac, Louis M. Townsend, Rhudolph Miehling, Chauncy Greene, J. H. Goldberg, George Edwards, Jesse J. Hopkins, Herbert Griffin, Thad Barrows, P. A. McGuire, Samuel Glauber, H. B. Santee, Max Rubin, R. H. McCullough, and F. H. Richardson.

Your editor was for a number of years chairman of the Projection Committee. He was finally supplanted by Harry Rubin and feels impelled to remove his chapeau out of respect for the excellence of the report presented to the west coast meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. It is by far the best report this committee has ever turned in. Chairman Rubin is of course to a considerable extent responsible for the excellence of this report, but just the same he didn't do it all—not by a dam'd sight. I attended almost every meeting of the committee and can personally vouch for the fine way most if not all the members did their full and complete duty.

The plan was hit upon of dividing the work between sub-committees, one of which was known as the Projection room planning committee. Another was the sub-committee of Progress and Improvements in Projection Designs and Accessories. Another was the sub-committee upon Monitoring and Control of Sound In Theatres and, last but not least, the sub-committee on Projection Room Routine and Maintenance.

The committee indorsed the standard Release Print as being in the nature of a forward step in the improvement of projection. The reports of some of these various committees were copiously illustrated both with photographs and blue prints.

The procedure was to hold a meeting of the projection committee as a whole about once a month, at which time the various sub-committees would present their work, which would be discussed by the whole committee and either accepted or the report referred back to the committee for further deliberation.

To show the completeness of the work, here are the various items dealt with in the Projection Room Planning sub-committee: Projector spacing, observation ports, projecting ports, other openings. Dimensions of projection room. Front wall. Conduits. Projection arc conduit. Conduit for sound equipment. Projection room lighting. Ventilation. Extra rooms. Toilet and wash room. D.C. Spot for arcs. Location of arc generators. Projection room floor covering. Fire shutter equipment. Projection room construction. Ceiling. Floor slab. Other rooms. Exits. Doors. Heating.

By the foregoing you can get some understanding of the work of this committee. Its report is illustrated by five blue prints.

The reports of the other sub-committees are equally exhaustive. The committee has every reason to feel proud of its work. I compliment Chairman Rubin upon the excellence of the planning which brought about such a really remarkable result.

VOICE OF THE INDUSTRY

WELL, WELL, WELL, AIN'T IT FUNNY what a difference just a few months make! Six months ago features were worth their weight in gold, and admission prices anywhere from 50 cents to $2.50. Now productions are on the bargain counter and 35—15 is the admission price, except on supers. I wonder if the producers will stop bidding against one another for stars? If they will do so, and cut down these pampered rascals' salary, we will have gained a great step forward. The only kick I ever receive is high admission prices to build millionaire homes in Hollywood, and this kick is registered daily. People are disgusted to find that Harold Lloyd is worth twelve millions. They feel of their empty wallet, and groan!

Fox is putting out good pictures in the main —"Lightning" and "Just Imagine" are very fine; "Scotland Yard," very good; "Men On Call," "Under Suspicion," "Six Cylinder Love," pretty good; "Man Trouble"' and "Renegades" fair; "Part Time Wife" has one scene that will make you wish you were not an exhibitor.

"Mothers Cry," (First National), extra fine for type, but not as fine as "Sarah and Son" (Paramount), which is great. "Right of Way" (First National) fair. "Cimarron" (Radio) is a natural. "Dixiana" drew. "Charley's Aunt" (Columbia), good draw, but not as good as silent; comedy is overdrawn. "Billy the Kid" (MGM) very good, and Metro's "Call of the Flesh" extra fine. Buck Jones' "Fighting Sheriff," his latest, went over with a bang! "Kiss Me Again" (First National) fine show, but did not draw.

Educational comedies fell down badly. Metro's Laurel-Hardy and Chase all to the good. The Dog comedies too long drawn out. Radio's Louise Fazendas go good. Humanettes (Radio) a frost, as they have no footage. Universal's Oswald, and Silly Symphony (Columbia) are good. Radio's Tobies only fair.

Business? they ain't no such animal!—PHILIP RAND, Rex Theatre, Salmon, Idaho.

"Your Public" a Boon

WOULD BE VERY GLAD TO RECEIVE your endorsed list of pictures, also radio broadcast.

Think Rita C. McGoldrick's "Your Public and You" a great boon for the little ehibitor who has to bear the brunt of everything that goes wrong.

Yours for better pictures and bigger business.—J. T. TEDLOCK, Venus Theatre, Shreveport, La.

Hancock Comment

FOLLOWING IS COMMENT ON A NUMber of pictures I have shown:

"Laughing Sinners," Metro, had a hard time titling this picture and it might well have not been titled at all. With pictures like this one, they are not doing Joan Crawford any good.

"Daybreak" with Ramon Navarro. A costume picture of old Vienna. Old stuff that will not go far. The American audience does not care for this type of picture. Metro killed Gilbert in the same kind of a role, and they will do the same for Navarro. Fops with monocles in their eye may be all right in Europe, but, with a small town audience, it is over their heads. The only saving grace of this picture is that there is some comedy. But on the whole it was not liked. A weak story, and a lot of them walked out on it. If you can get business with costume stuff, I couldn't.

Metro has another weak sister in "Never The Twain Shall Meet." It is not all depression that is keeping the business away. It is a lack of good produced pictures. Too much dialogue and not enough action is the fault with most of them. Make no mistake, the public is moviewise today, and they are picking them as they never did before.

One or two poor pictures in a row and you miss the old familiar faces until some outstanding picture turns up. And that does not add to the bank account.—A. E. HANCOCK, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Ind.

Epics Appoints Sales Heads; Adds To Its Selling Force

Frank R. Wilson, president of Talking Picture Epics, has organized an executive sales personnel for this country and Canada composed of Ira H. Simmons, director of sales; John N. Weber, Eastern district manager; Tom North, Middlewest district manager; William G. Minder, Southern district manager; R. A. Mitchell, Western district manager and Harry G. Price, Canadian district manager.

William Raynor will be New York branch manager. Additional salesmen have been added to the sales force throughout the country.

Castle Films To Make Additions To Sales Staff

Castle Films, producers and distributors of commercial pictures, has made several additions to the sales organization throughout the country.

Jacob Baur Greiner, formerly with Curtis publications in the Middlewest, will have charge of sales in Detroit; Walter A. Rivers becomes production manager, with headquarters in Chicago and San Francisco; Charles Charlton, formerly with Pathe Review, is new chief technician for Chicago and Detroit, and Bert Dawley is chief technician at New York.

Deny Rumor I. J. Hoffman to Quit Warner in New England

The Warner home office has emphatically denied current reports that I. J. Hoffman, New England zone manager for Warner houses, would resign in the fall at the expiration of his contract.

Eddie Alperson, of the Warner theatre department, has characterized the report as "one of those silly warm weather rumors."

In Charge of Commercials

B. E. Norrish, managing director of Associated Screen News Ltd., Montreal, has appointed Gordon Sparling in charge of direction and editing of commercial film production. Sparling directed a number of productions in Hart House theatre a few years ago, and at one time was film editor of the Canadian government motion picture bureau. For the past two years he has been at the New York Paramount studios.

D. W. Griffith Honored

D. W. Griffith has been honored with a life membership in the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees. The presentation, conferred by Local 52, was made at the Audio Cinema studio in the Bronx where the director is filming "The Struggle."

Weitzenkorn Authored Play

A recent review of the Warner film, "Five Star Final" inadverdently failed to correctly note those responsible for the work. Louis Weitzenkorn wrote the original stage play, while Byron Morgan prepared the adaptation and the dialogue.

Ruth Waterberry Quits Magazine

Ruth Waterberry is succeeded by Elliot Keane and Elizabeth Wilson as co-editors of Silver Screen, fan publication.

Screen Book, fan magazine, has ceased publication.

World distribution rights to "Regeneracion," Spanish all-talker starring Darita Ceprano and produced in Hollywood, have been acquired by J. H. Hoffberg Company.

Mlle. Chanel Due In Fall

Mlle. Gabrielle Chanel, designer of fashions, will visit this country October 1, in connection with her clothes designing work for Samuel Goldwyn's films.

WABASH AVE.

Chicago

An error in a recent issue of Publix Opinion was responsible for the impression that it takes four B. & K. advertising men to get one idea, which is not so. The article referred to the widely broadcast stories that during a recent hot spell, B. & K. theatres enjoyed a 25 per cent increase in business, attributed to those sweltering thousands who sought the cooled theatres for relief. Now, an actual 25 per cent increase over the preceding week end business of the summer was shown, but Publix Opinion reported that it took four B. & K. men—and named them—to see the publicity value in that fact. It didn't. It was Lou Pollock's idea, and if he hadn't had enough news sense to see the opportunity, Walter Brown, his old City News Bureau boss, never would have spoken to him again.

Now Lou comes out with another. He talked several of the town's leading medics into endorsing the cooled theatres for perspiring youngsters on hot afternoons. Then he arranged free shows for orphans to start the thing off, and the result was the abundant publicity in all local papers, which you probably noticed.

Ludwig Sussman came through one of those partnership tiffs victoriously the other day. Sussman, who is one of Chicago's most enterprising showmen, never turns down an opportunity to work an improvement into his theatre and its programs. His overcautious partner construed these innovations to be in the nature of "waste," and so told a court in which he tried to prove a case of mismanagement against Sussman. The latter, apparently, had too many sagacious friends in the industry whose testimony prevented anything like that from occurring. Now, things have been patched up again, and the Adelphia is purring along as nicely as ever.

A number of houses have double featured "City Lights" in spite of the agreement not to, which exhibitors were asked by United Artists to sign. Joe Abramson says no penalties for the infractions can be invoked, and about all that can be done is to go around to their theatres and make faces at them. No instances of double featuring of "Trader Horn," sold with a similar agreement, but which added a $500 penalty for infractions, have been reported. The difference seems to be, however, not the $500 penalty clause, but the excessive running time on "Trader," which makes double featuring with it just about impossible everywhere except at the New Drake, where patrons bring week-end bags when they come to see a show.

Alleges Illegal Story Use In "Big Trail," Suing Fox

Mrs. Florinda Gardner, writer, has filed an injunction in the United States district court, Chicago, seeking to restrain Fox from showing or leasing "The Big Trail." She charges illegal use of a scenario of hers in the film.

She also asks an accounting of profits, and claims her copyrighted work, "The Trail and Trials of the Mormon Pioneers" was rejected by the company as unsuitable, and then used in the production of "The Big Trail."

Depinet Sells Product to Twenty-six Chicago Houses

Publix Balaban & Katz has just signed for RKO Pathe's new product, to play in the 26 Chicago theatres of this circuit, Ned E. Depinet, vice-president and general sales manager of RKO Pathe announced today. The 26 theatres include several which are nationally known de luxe pre-release houses.

Frederick S. Revell, Canadian representative of British International Pictures in Toronto, has denied the statement of Arthur Cohen, managing director of Famous Players, that the Canadian circuit had made use of all available British product with poor response from the public.

Revell claimed British pictures had not been given as wide showing as American product by Famous Players and he challenged the company to keep British pictures out of Canada. This is considered an aftermath of the Peter White film investigation report.

MUSIC AND TALENT

"NAME" BANDS IN NEW DANCE SMASH

Weekend Frolic Climax To Theatre Show

Tryout at Little Rock Brings Rebooking of One Unit and New House Record With Another

A new use of "name" bands at theatres is proving a godsend to the box office. The innovation is a dance, with the band featured, at the conclusion of its regular engagement.

The new idea in entertainment at the theatre had its introduction at the Arkansas theatre in Little Rock, Ark., in cooperation with the Music Corporation of America, which inaugurated the policy. The plan came at the request of independent theatre owners, says the announcement of Music Corporation, which controls the bookings of a large number of outstanding name bands.

So well as the experiment worked at the Arkansas theatre that a return engagement immediately was booked for one band, and another set a new record for the theatre's attendance.

The weekend dance is staged on the last day of the band's engagement at the theatre.

The theatre management at Little Rock attributes the success of the innovation in part to the fact that the bands thus far engaged have been stage hits with good box office returns and to the reflection of that stage popularity in building up a big attendance for the weekend dance.

The first band to play the Arkansas theatre under the new policy was Eddie Neibaur and His Harmony Kings, which was booked for a return engagement later. Husk O'Hare and His Band was the second booking under the new policy; it succeeded in setting up a new house record for the theatre. Johnny Johnson is scheduled to follow the O'Hare unit, with other name bands to follow.

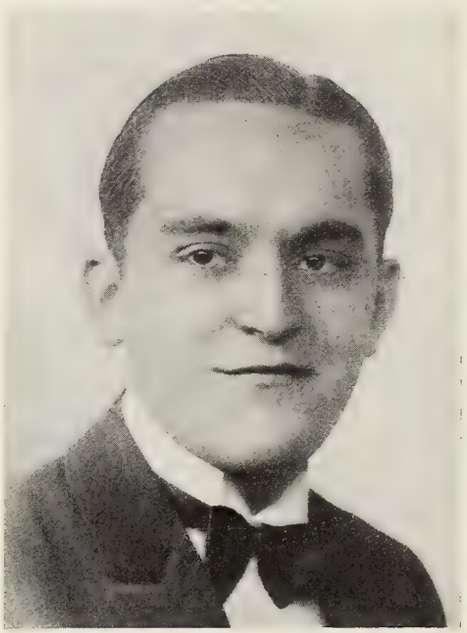
Enthused by the succees of the Little Rock experiment and with several other managers interested in similar bookings, officials of the Music Corporation of America are seriously considering booking bands over regional circuits of such theatres.

Universal Music Co. Owners Buy Interest of Universal

Universal Music Company, Ltd., headed by Frank Goodman and Lou Handman, has purchased all rights, title and interest of Universal Pictures in the music company.

It is expected, however, that the two firms will be affiliated by an arrangement providing for the publishing by the music company of all original songs used in Universal films.

Bill Hoffman



This personable chap is the featured organist at Loew's Pitkin Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. Hoffman was born in Germany and received his musical education at the Leipzig Conservatory of Music. When he came to America, six years ago, it was with no difficulty that he received work in the Wurlitzer Organ Company. He was offered the position of featured organist in the Commodore theatre, Buffalo, which position he held for one year, or until he decided to come to the big city, where he immediately connected with the Universal circuit of theatres. He played in a number of their houses in the metropolitan district and was kept on when the Loew circuit took over the Universal. He has been with this circuit off and on ever since. Hoffman is not only an accomplished musician but is also a composer of music and he also holds a diploma as an electrical and mechanical engineer.

Sam Fox Company to Publish All Music Used in Fox Films

Sam Fox Publishing Company will publish all music used in Fox pictures, in accordance with a recent arrangement, by which it becomes official music publishers to Fox Film.

There is no relation, personal or otherwise, despite the similarity of names. The music company has offices in Cleveland, Chicago, Los Angeles, London, Paris, Berlin and Melbourne.

Yates Gives First Recitals by Wire On Pipeless Organ

First to play the new Richard Ranger pipeless organ, Warren Yates, organist at Warners' Fabian theatre in Paterson, N. J., is giving half-hour recitals from his home over a three-mile telephone wire to Hahn's department store in Newark. His July 17 program consisted of favorite popular songs, as gauged by Fabian theatre audience requests, and included "Many Happy Returns of the Day," "For You," "Say a Little Prayer for Me," "Have You Forgotten," "Now You're in My Arms" and "I Found a Million Dollar Baby."

Yates states that he "was greatly honored to be chosen as the first theatre organist to play Capt. Ranger's pipeless organ and further honored by the requests to repeat the recitals on successive Fridays." He also expressed his enthusiasm for the new instrument and its future.

Aside from his daily work at the theatre, Yates also broadcasts three half-hour periods of organ music a week over station WODA from the console of the Fabian theatre organ.

The Ranger pipeless organ has a regular two-manual console. It derives its power from ordinary AC house current and involves the use of 150 vacuum tubes. It is capable of approximately 3,000 tone colors and unusual percussion effects. T. Scott Buhrman, editor of The American Organist, stated that it is "the first electrical instrument to have the right to be called an organ."

Music Department Of Loew Is Unified

Starting this week, Louis K. Sydney will have full charge of all production and musical activities in all Loew theatres. Heretofore Sydney had charge in all deluxe Loew houses but due to the resignation of Ernst Luz, after having been with the firm for the past 18 or 20 years, he now is in full charge.

Don Albert, until now technical musical adviser for the deluxers to Mr. Sydney, will now have the additional duties of advising on all theatres. Raymond Maher of the same office will also work with Mr. Sydney and will aid Don Albert.

Don Albert will continue, for a while at least, as musical conductor at Loew's Jersey theatre.

UNIFORMS FOR HOUSE ATTACHES COSTUMES FOR STAGE PRESENTATIONS BROOKS 1437 B'way N. Y. City

STAGE SHOWS

New York Paramount

Week ending July 23

"Three Shades of Blue," produced by Boris Petroff in seven scenes, proved to be the most stupendous and beautiful offering ever presented at this house.

Settings, both flashy and simple in about six shades of blue instead of the billed "Three," and the beautiful costumes were the work of Vincente Minnelli. This show sets a new pace for presentation productions and is said to have cost $10,000, far more than the usual expenditure for these shows.

Opening with Elsie Thompson singing from the wings "Call of the Blues," a Negro spiritual, as the Forbes Randolph Colored Ensemble accompanied her, the 24 Bines Girls do a "drum-major" routine in modernistic dress and settings.

The next scene is "Wail of a Frail," featuring Eileen Dougal, who puts over her "torch" singing effectively. Two girl pianists accompany her.

The Six Blue Devils, known to vaudeville as the Beeche and Rubyiat Acrobatic Troupe, are on third for their routine of tumbling and acrobatic stunts. This scene is billed as "Sky Blue" or "A Gymnastic Fantasy," and is set in a simple but beautiful scene giving the boys plenty room to perform their entertaining work.

Number four spot is chock full of entertainment and features Eddie Eddingbone and his New Orleans Wildcats and the Forbes Randolph Colored Ensemble. Eddie's three or four-piece band is a novelty one, and between them and the colored voices they do full justice to "St. Louis Blues" and "Minnie the Moocher."

"Valse Bluette," number five, brings on the Bines Girls for another number, this time as ballerinas. Their work is very well done and pleased this audience.

"Harmonica Rhapsody," Borrah Minevitch and his Harmonica Rascals (12), gave the audience real music and a lot of comedy. Borrah's solo of "Rhapsody in Blue" got a great hand.

The first part of their act is done in one, but after the solo of "Rhapsody," curtain parts for finale. Dave Rubinoff conducts the orchestra on the stage in the "Rhapsody in Blue." The regular arrangement of this classic is amply stirring, but Rubinoff used a special one that had the entire audience eating it up. During this number the Colored Ensemble rise on elevator, upstage, and Bines Girls, as lancers, prancing around downstage.

This was an intricate show to produce, Petroff deserves a lot of credit, as does Edward Paul, who superintended the arranging and scoring of the music.

Philadelphia Fox

Week ending July 17

Fanchon & Marco's stage show, "Love Letters," was a well staged and attractive presentation.

Ron and Don at the organ gave as their specialty an "Indian Medley," in which one recited while the other played interpretative music portraying the ramblings of an Indian chief and his three daughters. This was followed by a lively Indian medley and a very good reception from the audience.

Max Bradfield and His Music Masters presented a "Musical Bouquet of Roses," with baritone solos, "Roses of Picardy," and "Mighty Lak A Rose."

The backdrop for the first scene showed a great number of addressed letters scattered across it. Jeanne Devereaux and George Ward came on, carrying a huge letter addressed to Jeanne. They sang and danced.

The first episode of the revue showed the fifteen Sunkist Beauties in quaint Colonial costumes, some dressed as men in wigs and knee breeches, against a beautiful modernistic black and white drop with graceful drooping trees. The girls sang "Souvenir" as they danced a stately minuet. A ballet dancer appeared and did a very difficult solo dance for which she was applauded.

As the second episode of this revue, the dancers tripped on the stage in white ostrich feathers and rhinestones and danced a graceful number centering about an old fashioned letter on a parchment roll, with the dainty little dancer pirouetting about the stage. The effect of this number was greatly enhanced by constantly changing lights in soft pastel shades.

Nelson Knight then came on and amused the audience with a peppy monologue interspersed with clever tap dancing.

The drop curtain arose showing a large U. S. Mail wagon, the side doors of which opened and George Ward and the Sunkist Beauties, dressed as special delivery girls in striking blue uniforms, hats and shoes, gave a snappy dance and drill.

Jerry Coe was then announced and after playing several popular numbers very creditably, he appeared without his accordion and offered his "snake-hips" dance. As an encore he gave a unique slow motion dance that was thoroughly enjoyed.

Jim French's Aeroplane Girls evoked the most applause of the evening. They were dressed in white satin and rhinestones with small aeroplane propellers on their heads, and gave a splendid exhibition of dancing and drilling on roller skates as two girls on trapezes suspended from aeroplanes circled about overhead. The girls also did a clever tap dance on skates. This was a very attractive number, displaying the versatility of the chorus and the act as a whole showed splendid staging and teamwork.

San Francisco Fox

Week ending July 22

This week's stage show at the Fox is about as fine a bit of entertainment as ever has been seen here. The Fanchon & Marco offering originally was put out under the title of "Vaude Bits Idea," but is featured here as the "Hacienda Idea," owing to the Spanish atmosphere.

Walt Roesner and his Fox Concert Orchestra present a "Schubert Reverie," which features the famous "Serenade," and Bernard Blumard sings in place of Joaquin Garay, who is on a vacation. Bernard is a diminutive pupil of Joaquin and gets a wonderful reception.

The stage show opens with the orchestra in Spanish costume in the dimly lighted patio of the hacienda, with a Spanish singer doing a popular number. This young woman acts as hostess and introduces the various specialty performers as her guests.

The Three Rhythm Girls first are presented and do a lively turn, dancing as one. The number is rather out of the ordinary.

Doyle and Donnelly, late of the Ziegfeld Follies, start the laughs by uncorking a lot of jokes and singing topical songs. One has to do with the rain and liberal use is made of a sprinkling pot to provide the desired effects. The boys declare that they mop up at every show. They close by singing a song of their own, an answer to their old success, "A Cottage for Sale."

Sue Russell burlesques ballets and operas, with the assistance of Hinky and Dinky, the long and short of hilarity. They contribute a lot more material for laughs, particularly in a ballet number.

The thrill of the show is the offering of the Six Gordonians, who make use of springboards and a bouncing net. Its members think nothing of turning two or three somersaults from a springboard and landing on the shoulders of fellow members already stacked two high. The climaxing thrill is reached when one does a triple twisting somersault from the bouncing net and lands in a sitting position in an armchair high off the floor.

The hostess, or mistress of ceremonies, presents Spanish and novelty dances between specialties, with a fandango especially well liked.

Milwaukee Wisconsin

Week ending July 8

The Wisconsin theatre orchestra under the direction of Glen Welty precedes Fanchon & Marco's "Varieties" Idea by playing "By the River Sainte Marie." Orville Rennie, tenor, is featured.

The idea opens with the six Flying Flemings, who perform somersaults and twists between swinging trapezes in an astonishing manner.

Baker, Dove & Allen juggle myriad colored clubs without a mishap. One member engages in some clowning which goes over big.

Sully & Thomas carry on a bit of entertaining dance and patter. They dance the St. Louis rhythm and wind up with a radio studio scene shot, well received.

The Norman Thomas Quintette gives its proper noise and color to the Idea. One of the members plays the banjo and sings "Loving You the Way I Do," another plays "Listen to the Mocking Bird" on the piano in an unusual manner; another handles the drums and incidentally dashes all over the stage to play them, and the remaining two twist and dance to their hearts' content. The episode is labeled as "Harlem Mania" and rightly so.

Joins Capitol Dancers

Florence Malee, daughter of Thomas Malee, chief deputy of the Internal revenue department in New York, has joined the Chester Hale girls appearing at the New York Capitol.

SLICES OF MELLIN

By BOBBY MELLIN

Meet Jack Perry, one of the most versatile men in the music business. His title is manager of Phil Kornheisers' Chicago office and he is without a doubt one of the hardest working individuals I ever have come across. The success of "Pardon Me," "Pretty Baby," "Faithfully Yours" and "Maybe It's the Moon" in the Western territory can be laid to his efforts. He has a great pair of pipes and demonstrates songs at both the radio stations and music counters.—WCFL radio station moves to its new headquarters in the Furniture Mart, around the first of the month, according to information received from Handsome Joe Plunkett, program station director.

The Wanderers Quartet, one of the best male quartets in the United States, who are under the personal supervision of the one and only Eddie Freckman, arranger and pianist for Witmark, are now the proud possessors of four chain programs weekly, three over the Columbia Chain and one over the NBC. The members of the above quartet have marvelous voices and their services are in great demand everywhere.

Bobby Meeker, who leads his orchestra in nightly broadcasts from the College Inn, over WBBM, has reached the stage in popularity where his fans have organized a club in his honor. Some fan started it, and now there are five hundred members enrolled in the "Bobby Meeker Club." Most of the feminine members of the club blame it all on Bobby's rendition of "Dream a Little Dream of Me" and "My Ideal," two of Bobby's favorites as he points his megaphone in the direction of the microphone. Bobby has a great orchestra and if you have not heard him play, tune in over WBBM and get the treat of your life.

Lee Sims, famous radio pianist featured on NBC broadcasts, has purchased a 28-foot speed boat with which he plans to commute between his north side penthouse apartment and the KYW studios facing Grant Park. Lee has named the boat "Illomay" after his wife, Illomay Bailey, whose soprano voice is heard along with his piano playing.

Another of the country's greatest dance orchestras to be heard over WGN will be Duke Ellington and his Cotton Club Orchestra playing at Lincoln Tavern. Duke Ellington is acknowledged to be the foremost colored orchestra leader in America. His mad rhythms at the Cotton Club in Harlem attracted the throngs of night club devotees to that part of New York City in such numbers that the band was signed for stage appearances.

Two Theatres May Close If Musicians' Agreement Fails

Reports from Indianapolis indicate that there is small possibility of an agreement being reached between theatre owners and musicians, by August 1, the latter refusing a cut in the present scale of $80 per week.

Theatres involved are Indiana, Skouras-Publix house and the Lyric. Approximately 30 men, including stage hands, would lose employment if the theatres close, as inside reports state they are not unwilling to do.

ORGAN SOLOS

JESSE CRAWFORD (New York Paramount) presented but three popular numbers for his current organ concert, and these three aroused more enthusiasm than any solo he has offered recently. The songs presented were: "An Unemployed Sweetheart," "When Yuba Plays the Rhumba on His Tuba" and "Yours Is My Heart Alone." These numbers are not outstanding successes but the fine manner in which they are presented and played by Crawford certianly made them popular with this audience. He received a good hand after each number and a fine one at the finish.

BILL CIMLER (Jersey City, Jersey), guest starring for Ted Meyn, while he is on his vacation, presented an appropriate and entertaining solo entitled "Sunburned and Broke" for his presentation this week. This solo is a satire on a young fellow's vacation and is cleverly explained by the use of special lyric slides played to the tunes, "Just a Gigolo," "Walkin' Baby Back Home," "One More Time," and "Broken-Hearted." The regular choruses of popular songs he used and to which the audience sang were: "Let's Get Friendly," "Two Little Blue Little Eyes" and "Nevertheless, I'm in Love With You." Cimler did very well with this solo and had no difficulty in having the audience sing. Their reaction and applause were very favorable.

C. SHARPE MINOR (New York City Beacon) asks questions of the organ this week and gets surprisingly intelligent and humorous answers from it. He orally introduces the solo to the audience and then starts in asking his questions, answering them with appropriate songs. The audience reaction to this is most favorable. Minor announced a "sing contest" between the women and men, first leading up to it with a cleverly worded introduction and a smart special version to the tune "Walking Baby Back Home," following this with a whistling chorus, "99 out of a 100" and a singing chorus with special lyrics to the tune, "Side by Side," which he sang in "conversation" style. Minor then closed with a cleverly worded special to "Ha Ha Me Too." Minor's smart chatter, showmanship and good playing have gained him a great popularity here.

FLOYD HOFMANN (Menominee, Mich., Lloyd's) presented a timely and novel solo, entitled "Baseball," for his singing novelty this week. He introduced the idea by informing the audience that a big baseball game between the home team and a mythical one was scheduled for that day and that the home team needed their support, the support being their singing of popular songs. They "loosen up" with the singing of "Whistling in the Dark." Then "play-ball" with the boys and girls alternating sentences in a special parody on "Take a Walk." Then they lean on "Moonlight Saving Time" for a "homer." Other choruses included are: "Moonlight on the Colorado," "Smile Darn Ya Smile" and "Tie a String Around Your Finger." The solo was well received and earned an encore in which Hofmann played "You're the One I Care For."

UP AND DOWN THE ALLEY

HELLO, EVERYBODY

Bobby Mellin is now the manager of the Chicago office of Remick Music Company . . . (Yes . . . he is the same fellow who has been giving you all the dope on Chicago music activities for the past year in "Slices of Mellin") . . . Bobby is not only a darned good business man and a regular fellow but you'll have to admit he writes a peach of a column too . . . Incidentally this new assignment of Bob's makes him one of the youngest executives in the music business. . . .

Pat Flaherty, who has been general manager of Sterling Songs, Inc., since its advent, has bought out Irving Weiner's interest in the firm and is now the sole owner.

Elsie Thompson, who has become endeared to Brooklynites as the "Sweetheart of the Organ," and who was replaced by Merle Clark, organist from the Toledo Paramount, is back on the job again and is being featured with Merle in a novel stunt this week. . . . Both of the giant consoles are on the stage. . . . Stuart Barrie, who formerly played at this house and many more throughout the country, is back in the city in which he started. . . . He is now featured at the Chicago in Chicago.

Louis Bernstein, president of Shapiro, Bernstein & Company is making his current trip to Europe a combination of business and pleasure. He will be gone for the next six or eight weeks. . . . Herb Marks is also over in Europe for his firm, Edward B. Marks Music Company. . . . Herb has been over there for some little time now but will be back shortly. . . .

You organists in this country sure should consider yourself fortunate, considering the expenditures Eddie Fitch, organist over at the Regent theatre, Melbourne, Australia has . . . Eddie, who is a well known American organist, informs me that an original organ novelty of between 30 and 40 slides costs around $50 or $75. . . . I am reprinting an excerpt from Eddie's letter to me which I am sure will interest you. . . . "I suppose you've heard about the 'plane mystery here, but in case you haven't read about it. . . . One of the 'planes on the Sydney to Melbourne run started out from Sydney o.k. and simply didn't get to Melbourne, and even to date it hasn't been found, not even a trace. . . . Incidentally it was the same plane that Mrs. Fitch and I took from Brisbane, when we left there to go to Sydney. . . . All this is of interest to you simply because of the fact that Clyde Hood was one of the passengers on it in its ill-fated trip. . . . Hood was connected with some music firm in Chicago and I knew him when I played at the Stratford. I hadn't seen him for years until I ran into him at the Capitol in Sydney, where he was producer for Union Theatres. It just goes to show you what a wild country Australia is (in between towns) when a big three-motored eight passenger plane can crash and nobody can ever even find it again." . . .

Space is short, so—long. . . .

CONDUCTED BY AN EXHIBITOR FOR EXHIBITORS

"Lend Me Your Ears!"

ABOUT INDEPENDENT THEATRE OWNERS

TRUTHFULLY speaking, they are the backbone of the industry. You know the men we mean. They own and operate their own houses. Buy their own product. Take care of their own advertising, exploitation and publicity. Are always in evidence around the theatre and are known and liked by practically every patron who frequents the house.

Contrary to general opinion they have not passed out of existence. They are just as strong in numbers today as they were yesterday. Some may have dropped out of the game for a while, but the majority have either come back or are still operating.

Many a visitor, corresponding member or exhibitor writes to ask us how many of the Club members are theatre owners. For the information of those interested in such figures, as well as those many exhibitors who think the Club is dominated by chain theatre managers, we want you all to know that over fifty percent of our membership is composed of independent theatre owners.

Possibly, by reason of the way the material is presented on the Club pages, you may have developed the notion that very few of the exploitation activities described are from men who own the houses they run. Well, the percentage is about the same as the membership.

Here, on common ground, every showman, be he an independent exhibitor, paid manager or in any way dependent upon theatre operation for an existence, can meet and discuss their various troubles and problems. Nothing in the nature of "slams" or "taking a crack at somebody." That's out. But for "mutual benefit and progress" every one of these pages are at your disposal.

Here we meet every week and tell, not only about the campaigns we put over successfully, but HOW we put them over. Every conceivable type of theatre activity is discussed. Newspaper tie-ups, merchants' campaigns, kid shows, kiddie clubs, civic contacts and local goodwill building, a tip-off on coming holidays and events, advertising, how we handle the equipment in our houses, how we save money in the operation of the theatre, and so on with not a single detail overlooked for any length of time.

We encourage controversy. Yet we attempt to establish no standard as to what is right or what is wrong. But every man, if he is willing to air his views for publication, can express himself. And the other man can come right back with an answer.

Discussions on theatre advertising and management are vital all the time. If we lend a willing ear to learn what the other fellow is doing we give ourselves the opportunity of improving our own methods and can profit thereby.

We want all theatre men, independent owners in particular, to make this their own department, not only in name but in fact. Here they can tell their brother exhibitors all about the experiences they are having in handling their local affairs. Here they can tell one another how they sold the picture. Here they can learn how they can operate their theatres more efficiently and less expensively.

In encouraging the independent theatre owners to be active on the Club pages, we must admit that it is a selfish thought because he has something we want, something we all need and something which other so-called showmen can use to good advantage. Namely: experience, ability, and the knack of handling every detail in the operation of a theatre all by himself.

He stands out as a jack of all trades and a master of them too. He has a keen knowledge and understanding of film buying, he knows how to sell his attractions to best suit his local conditions and theatre, he can make up attractive newspaper ads,

The Power of Suggestion—!

Fred Sarr Enlists Aid From Churches In Sale Of Tickets

The Club has at hand a recipe for the building of good-will with churches and other local organizations which is described by Fred J. Sarr, manager of the Strand Theatre, Oswego, N. Y., as "One of the finest show business has ever known," and after reading this member's contribution we are forced to conclude that his use of the superlative is entirely justified.

The whole idea is based upon the fact that people do not usually bite hands that help feed them, nor is it good taste to examine the teeth of gift horses. Following out this train of thought, Sarr has arranged so that it is possible for the church and other organizations to engage in the selling of theatre tickets on a sliding scale basis which nets the seller approximately 20% to 50% on the sale of from 250 to 1,000 tickets.

The value of the above move lies not only in the fact that it is instrumental in pulling the house over a tough week but it gives a faction, prone to criticize motion pictures, a chance to make money off them. In Sarr's case, coming attractions were advertised on church bulletins, in the Sunday School rooms and were even mentioned in the pulpit. It also brought in and made regular customers out of people who never before attended the theatre, for the reason that they belong to a class who do not readily respond to regular run of publicity. There are many other good angles to arranging benefits of this type and same can be easily adapted to the needs of any community where conditions warrant such a step by the simple method of going after the proper people in a tactful and dignified manner, such as was displayed by Manager Sarr.

Sorry you couldn't stop in when you were in New York. Better luck next trip.

Selette Employs A Herald-Letter Gag That Gets Response

In response to this department's request for heralds, Edward Selette, manager of the Arcadia Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H., comes through with a collection, one of which both he and the Club will admit has outstanding qualities.

Selette apparently has considerable in the way of competition in his town and upon the inauguration of a new admission policy and installation of new sound and seating equipment, solicited letters from the townspeople on the subject of "Why I Patronaze the Arcadia Theatre." Out of a large collection of replies Selette selected a dozen and reprinted them on his throwaway. All are sincerely expressed and one writer even went so far as to put his thoughts down in a well written poem.

He also sends along samples of several other heralds including announcements of gift nites; merchants' tie-ups; announcement of a forthcoming serial; a theatre booster club; donation of a special award, and announcement of the new equipment.

We are sure that Selette will gladly furnish further information on the subject of his heralds if any member cares to drop him a line care of the above named theatre. We dwell particularly on the use of the letters mentioned in the second paragraph as this again comes under the classification of institutional advertising, a brand which the Club has, and will continue to plus as one worthy of attention from every member. This manager has sent the Club many an interesting contribution and we sincerely hope that he will continue to advise his fellow members as to what's doing in Portsmouth. Incidently, Ed., we want to thank you for those many ads you've been sending along. They show that you are on your toes to sell the shows in Portsmouth. Right?

Fishing Contests And Kid Matinees Plugged By Hughes

A fishing contest and a Kid Matinee played important parts in recent exploitation activities of J. T. Hughes, manager of the Palace Theatre, Breckenridge, Texas.

One of the stunts was in connection with a special morning matinee showing of "Skippy" to the children. At the special matinee were 619 kids and all of them bought tickets at the reduced rate. Since the special showing preceded the regular showings of the picture's run, it proved an excellent builder for the picture as the kids enthused about it to their parents.

Another stunt was purely one of good-will. It had to do with the opening of the fishing season and Manager Hughes offered four guest tickets to the person catching the largest bass. This story was planted on the front page of the local newspaper.

All efforts to build kiddie patronage are interesting to Club members in view of the fact that it is a help towards increased receipts and always nets considerable word-of-mouth advertising at the home. And a good fishing yarn always gets by your editor's desk. We hope Club member Hughes will remember to send other contributions in the future.

THIS WINDOW WILL CATCH THE EYE!

Tommy Phelan Busy Prescribing Summer Tonic For His House

Just to let his fellow Round Tablers know that he is on the job and to acquaint other summer resort manager-members with what he is doing in the way of selling amusement, Tommy Phelan, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Long Branch, N. J., sends along a few samples of recent activities.

For one thing, he's using his mailing list for the circulation of a little combination institutional and coming attraction pamphlet among Summer colonists in his community. A portion of the first page is cut out in order to show a view of the interior of the theatre on the third page. The second page is devoted to institutional copy and the fourth page lists the next week's attractions. It is the first of a series for this class of circulation and the cut-out page gives it a novel and attractive appearance. The second of the series carries institutional copy on the first page and the balance of the folder is devoted to page announcements of coming attractions. The folder measures about 4 inches by 5 inches.

Tommy also recently promoted a Dance Revue, tying up with a local school, and the net result was a lot of helpful publicity at no cost to the theatre. The newspapers gave the event a fine break and a 19-number program provided a fine attraction of a different nature. Another recent tie-up that proved popular was engineered with the co-operation of a local radio dealer, the latter standing the expense of the advertised award.

Just as we stated, Tommy, the above is ample evidence that you're not napping on that nice white sand beach down your way and the Club is glad to hear that everything is coming along so nicely. Keep up the good work and don't forget us in the future.

How Shows Are Sold In Hawaii Is Told By Henry G. Santos

How they do it in Hawaii is rather graphically illustrated in a copy of the "Garden Island," newspaper of Lihue, Kauai, a big mound out in the Pacific where Henry G. Santos operates the Tip Top Theatre.

At first glance it appears that the Kauaians undoubtedly take their movies seriously, if generous allotment of space can be offered as evidence. Right on the front page of this journal is a big three-column cut of the interior of the Tip Top, captioned "Here's the Gang" and showing a house crowded with kid-guests of the Consolidated Amusement Co. Turn the page and we find almost a full page of amusement gossip, interspersed with reproductions of stills and ads of other theatres. Two stories carry two-column heads.

On another page is an ad of the Tip Top, a reproduction of which you will see on this page. It measures about 30 inches by 8 inches and carries copy for a half a dozen coming attractions. We are presenting it just to prove that the Hawaiian Islanders are not lagging behind when it comes to appreciation of display advertising and to let you know that Senor Santos is very much on his job. On still another page we note that the Senar is running a contest on "Floradora Girl" and making awards for the best answers to mistakes made in the reproduction of three figures dressed in the period of the "gay nineties." He is tied in with the newspaper for the publishing of contestants' names.

And that's about all we can see in this one issue right now, except to be thoroughly impressed with the fact that Santos and this newspaper's editor are getting along famously. We believe that it is interesting to Club members to have an insight of what theatre managers are doing outside of the U. S. border lines and hope that Santos will favor the Club with future contributions.

Drop us a line when you get a chance, Henry, and tell us some of the gossip about the islands, we are always anxious to know how showmen in other spots outside these United States are doing things.

Frias Holds Up To Slogan Of Letting Other Fellows Pay

Keeping up his reputation for letting the other fellow pay for a considerable portion of his advertising, the Club notes two recent result-getting stunts put over by Senor Carlos Frias, manager of the Plaza Theatre, El Paso, Texas.

When playing "East Lynne," Frias tied-up with a local confectioner who paid for a full half-page of copy that was dominated by information on theatre, cast and playdates. The bottom four inches of the ad was given over to the merchant with the co-op copy to visit the store after the show.

On "Ladies' Man," Frias tied with but two merchants for a full page co-operative ad which was unsually attractive on account of the page not being strewn with small boxes. He laid out the page himself and, as usual, the theatre received a fine break. Heads of Powell and other members of the cast were used in the ads.

On both the above occasions Frias found it unnecessary to run other ads for both broke on opening day. In fact, in connection with the latter stunt, the newspaper also published a three-column mat on the amusement page on opening day. Neither of these publicity gags cost the house a cent and they are the kind that make the boys back in the home office smile. Next time, Carlos, you put over something else, don't forget your Club, if you do we are apt to be getting after you again. We never let a live-wire keep quiet too long, they're too valuable to us all.

Suggs Very Active Selling Shows Down In Sunny Tennessee

A tie-up with a college, for promotion of a college fund, the employment of a trick summons and a good-will stunt, briefly describes result-getting efforts put forth by M. S. Suggs, manager of the Paramount Theatre, Bristol, Tenn., when exploiting lately played pictures for that fine theatre of his.

Suggs advertised the second day's showing of "Rain or Shine" as College Day and ten days in advance arranged with girl students for the painting of window cards to be placed in every downtown store window, hotel, etc. Special announcements were also made by the students over the local radio station and several merchants donated space in their ads to push the coming attraction. Several days in advance and on opening day the society editor of the paper gave the event several good stories. At the theatre, the girls put on a stage attraction in three acts and after decorating the lobby arranged tables for the serving of ice cream.

On "Criminal Code" he arranged for distribution of 1,000 heralds in the residential districts one day prior to opening. These were made up in regulation "Summons" form with the usual compelling copy which ended up with a terse description of the picture.

When playing "City Streets" Suggs pulled another good-will stunt by sending telegrams to over 500 mothers, as an observance of Mothers' Day. He made the tie-up with a taxi company and in addition to a typical Mothers' Day message, calling attention to the attraction, mentioned the taxi as a means of transportation. Another tie-up was also made with a florist who gave an entire window for display of a set piece made by the theatre's artist, surrounded by stills from the picture. A newspaper announcement called attention to the donation of a rose to each mother attending the showing.

There's some good tips in Club Member Suggs' above contributions, particularly shaped for those who are located in, or nearby, college towns. The good will of a school is certainly a valuable asset to any theatre and we believe, as this manager believes, that it pays to cultivate it.

Harry Cohen Says Ford Give-Away Was Big Trade Booster

Harry Cohen is all het up over a Ford give-away recently promoted for the benefit of the box office at the Forum Theatre, Los Angeles, Calif., which, he states, is feeling particularly healthy these days as a result of this effort. Harry is the manager of this theatre and since another man promoted the stunt he very graciously calls our attention to the fact that it was put over by Harry Maiglish—"of whom you've no doubt heard is burning up the Coast with his stunts."

Too bad we can't go into detail on the above plan but as long as it proved such a result-getter we feel sure that either of the above named will gladly furnish additional information if members will but take the time to write them a letter requesting same. And we'd like to hear some more about those Coast-burning methods of exploitation being put over by Maiglish.

THE INDEPENDENT THEATRE OWNER

he generally knows as much about the projectors and booth equipment as the projectionists themselves. There is little or nothing that gets by his eagle eye.

The reason for this is obvious. He must stand or fall on his own feet. No district manager will be there to help him. No home office with its excess of executives will be able to guide him. He must steer his own course and from the start of showbusiness he has proven his ability to do so, profitably and successfully.

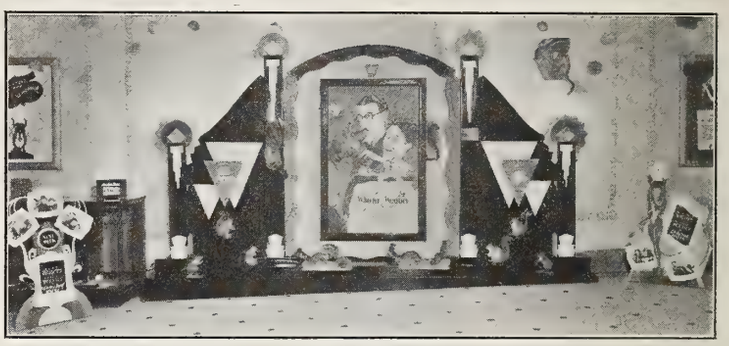
Listen to what has has to say because he knows what he's talking about.

"Chick."

Harry Stearn Uses Squirrel Display To Exploit Nut Picture

What could be more atmospheric than squirrels for a nut picture? And that's just what Harry Stearn thought when casting about for an idea to use in a lobby display when playing "Cracked Nuts" at the Orpheum Theatre, Wilkesbarre, Pa.

An elaborate panel was placed along one side of the lobby; the center containing a framed one-sheet showing Wheeler and Woolsey in one of their characteristic poses from the picture. The rest of the panel-display was made up of neatly-attractive art displays together with miniature stuffed squirrels. To the left in a cage was an assortment of Australian Flying Squirrels. Cut-out heads of Wheeler and Woolsey were suspended from the ceiling.



We are reproducing a photo of Harry's lobby display here and think all Club members will agree that it is well worked out. It is easy to believe that it attracted attention and helped sell the picture in advance.

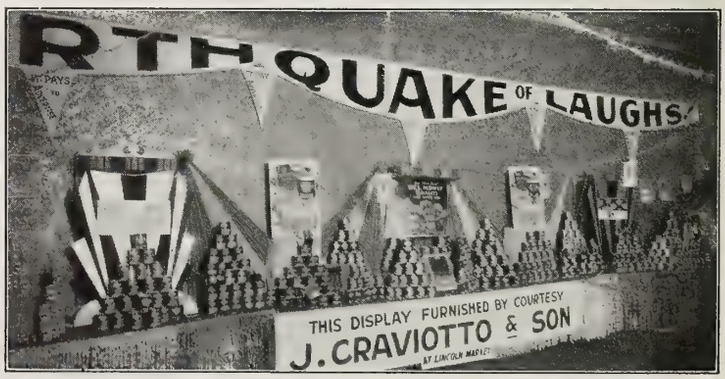
La Falce Devises A Good Substitute For Machine Guns

Credit Frank La Falce, of the Warner-Washington theatre staff, for production of an effective substitute for the rat-tat-tat of machine gun fire used in conjunction with the showing of a special trailer-prelude on "Public Enemy."

This effect was obtained by the simple means of removing the fan blades from an electric fan and attaching straps in the same connections. The fan was then placed near a drum and the tatoo produced by a turn of the switch. By moving the drum the volume of sound could be increased or reduced to a series of muffled reports.

We understand that La Falce and his associates put over a singularly effective campaign on the above picture but detail is lacking at this writing. Six different designs of display matter were used in newspapers and concentrated effort made to distribute heralds and to put on unique lobby displays. As soon as Frank has the time, we are going to expect the whole story from him. 'Till then, the customary so long.

IT CERTAINLY PAID TO ADVERTISE!

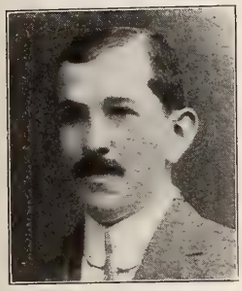


One week in advance of the showing of "It Pays to Advertise" at the Fox U. C. Theatre, Berkeley, Calif., Manager W. K. Mitchell arranged with a local distributor of canned food products for the lobby display shown above. This was but part of a stirring campaign he conducted with full co-operation from the Downtown Merchants' Association to plug a "Better Bargains Week."

Veteran Showman J. Forster Sends Club Antique Photograph

The Club is in receipt of an interesting communication from Joseph Forster, manager of the Inwood Theatre, Forest Hills, N. Y., in which this veteran showman expresses his desire to become a member of this organization and encloses some data on show business which must be classed as historical. Incidentally, if any of you other showmen have any "old-time" pictures, send 'em in! Everybody likes to know about the good old days.

In addition to a photo of Joe Forster himself we are showing a view of the front of the old Crescent Theatre, Cypress Hills, N. Y., one of the houses he managed in bygone days. Note the banner proclaiming the fact that the funeral of Mayor Gaynor is being presented as the main attraction. To enter some houses in those days they had to climb steps and there is our genial manager standing at the top, alongside a banner draped over front of box-office.



Forster also encloses a singular document—singular in that it may be the only one in existence today. It is a summons from the United States District Court in New York City, commanding Forster to appear as a witness in the suit involving the Motion Picture Patents Co., and the General Film Co. It is dated November 17, 1913.

Very interesting, Joseph, and the next time you communicate with the Club we will expect to hear something about how you are putting over shows at the Inwood. Right?

Carden And Slentz Again Combine To Further Good Will

That well-known team from Texas, Roy Slentz and C. E. Carden, respectively manager and publicity director for the Worth Theatre, Fort Worth, Tex., recently combined a good-will and business getting stunt which greatly enhanced the reputation of their house among local citizens.

To commemorate Mothers' Day this pair publicized the fact that all mothers of 65 years of age or over would be admitted as a guest of the house provided they were accompanied by some member of the family who paid the regular admission. To provide gifts for the occasion a candy company and a florist were tied-up for distribution of 500 small boxes of candy and 500 cut flowers to the mothers as they were greeted in the lobby by either manager or assistant manager. They were then directly escorted to their seats by the usher.

The above not only created a lot of good will, we are informed, but brought in extra business on account of the fact that each elderly lady was accompanied by one or more members of her family who paid regular admissions. That's killing two birds with one stone, Slentz and Carden, and it's a good one for other Club members to file away for use next year. Let's hear more about what you are doing to sell shows down in Fort Worth.

Notice to Members

PLEASE be sure to notify the Chairman of any change of address.
—THANK YOU

WHAT A STRANGE COINCIDENCE—???

—or call it what you like but since it proves a certain argument which we have been carrying on for some time, we care not what you title it.

Visiting a theatre recently reacquired by an independent exhibitor from a chain, said indie was telling us some of the reasons why the circuit lost money and why he would make money.

Said he, "They carted off a whole truckload of extra parts and supplies after the deal was closed because I refused to keep and pay them for the stuff. Imagine spending a lot of money to keep a supply closet loaded with such things as 250 amp. fuses, extra intermittent movements, etc., etc., no wonder they were losing money."

The climax of this story arrived about the same time as we were getting ready to leave. One of the main fuses on the big panel down in the basement blew out. It took over an hour before an emergency wagon could get to the theatre with another fuse.

Reluctantly, this indie admitted later, that close to a hundred refunds had to be made and twice that many rebate passes issued.

We don't know at the moment what a couple of those large fuses cost, or how much a complete set amounts to, but we do know it would have saved this exhibitor a lot of dough and customers that night.

The moral of this story, little showmen, is to keep spare fuses and spare parts liable to be needed for replacements, on hand at all times. There is no legitimate excuse to be without such necessities.

Caldwell Waged A Strenuous Campaign To Sell "Indiscreet"

A variety of effort was put forth by Wally Caldwell, manager of Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, when he waged the advance campaign on Gloria Swanson's recent picture, "Indiscreet" and the sum total represents a considerable amount of result-getting work by this enterprising member of our Club. And it's mighty glad we are to tell about it.

Wally secured co-operation of newspapers for the placing of three special advance pictures in the leading dailies; made a tie-up with one of the big stores for a special Swanson pajama window; ran a series of fashion pictures in the "Times," tying-in with fashionable gowns worn in picture by the star; arranged for 18 special downtown windows, displaying 14 x 17 de luxe Swanson fashion pictures; placed 200 cards in regular locations all over city; ran six-day telegram contest with "News-Bee," four days in advance and two days current; placed 15 twenty-four sheet stands; 1,500 heralds stuffed in all packages at retail market; 300 hand heralds distributed to patrons, and 500 heralds in parked cars.

A vast amount of energy in the above but, then, Toledo is a big town and it takes a lot of paper to cover all the corners and there can be no doubt that this was accomplished by Wally Caldwell. It is, however, a well-rounded campaign that will admirably serve any manager who will take the time to shape it to his own requirements. We know the Club can depend upon this member to keep it advised, so shoot along some more Wally, when you can find the time to do so.

Adler Co-operates With School Show And Wins Support

On one of the two days when the "King of Jazz" was booked at the Empress Theatre, Fairbanks, Alaska, Manager Don Adler ran into direct local competition from a High School play staged by the students. Instead of directly trying to coax patrons from this event he actually co-operated in helping to put it over by inserting ads asking citizens of his town to patronize the amateur performance. He added, however, that owing to the importance of attending the School show, he would see that everyone would be given a chance not to miss the regular theatre attraction through the holding of a special matinee on the following day. Business held up fine that night and also at the matinee.

That's what we call handling a delicate situation in a most tactful way. Adler not only made friends out of the students through the wording of his ads but secured valuable publicity for his show in a way that could not displease anyone concerned. Why not store this one away in the memory for use when a similar situation presents itself to some other Club member? And thanks, Don, for passing it along. Your contributions are always interesting and we will be on the lookout for others.

GET SET FOR A BIG SEASON!

Just a matter of a few weeks and we'll be right in the midst of the new season's start-off. Which should serve as a warning for all wide-awake showmen to make their plans accordingly.

The optimists (and we should all be optimists), are looking forward to a decided upward trend in business conditions in the industry with the coming season. Activity should, therefore, be pointed that way.

Usher in the coming of show-weather and fall activity with a grand showing for your house. See that every detail of it, from front to back and top to bottom radiates comfort, relaxation and improved service for your patrons. Make your theatre the centre of the entire community's entertainment.

Plans should now be in work for brightening up the front, the signs, the marquee, entrance, foyers, lobby, rest rooms, etc. A thorough cleaning and freshening ought to be included in your plans. Uniforms ought to be cleaned, pressed and put into shape for a long grind.

Folks will be drifting back home from vacations and summer homes. Labor Day is generally the dead-line for remaining out of town. Get them interested in your theatre from the moment they get back. Possibly a letter of greeting from the theatre's manager would start them off on the right track.

You are not too rushed now, take advantage of it by working out all the details for a smash opening for the new season. Perhaps if you get off to a good start it will make the going lots smoother as the season keeps moving.

At any rate, make up your mind that this is "the" year for big business and big things. Think that way and act that way. And let that feeling catch on with every merchant in your community.

Whittaker Made Fine Publicity Gain By A Tie-up With Laundry

A laundry tie-up on "Shipmates" and a Mothers' Day observance were the means of further publicizing his theatre during recent campaigns, writes E. E. Whittaker, manager of the Carolina Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

Real worthwhile publicity resulted from the insertion of cards in 3,000 shirt fronts distributed in homes by the local laundry concern. Copy on the cards was relative to the picture, theatre and playdates, the entire cost was but $9 and all it set the house back was cost of printing. The laundry paid for the extra slick finished card to supplant the ordinary one unfit for printing.

Whittaker played up Mothers' Day on both screen and in lobby, announced by special trailer one week in advance that a beautiful bouquet of roses would be given to all mothers accompanied by son or daughter on the day. The trailer was used directly following the Mothers' Day novelty three days prior to regular observance. A flower shop furnished the flowers in exchange for a courtesy card in the lobby.

For a lobby display Whittaker used a six-foot painting of Whistler's portrait of his mother, displayed one week in advance. A panel on each side carried a poem to mother. Another panel carried copy on the presentation of the bouquets of flowers. A basket of roses was placed beside the painting.

Both the above stunts worked out nicely for Whittaker and he's passing them along for the benefit of brother showmen to use at an appropriate time. You Club members have had other samples of Whittaker's work and it is our hope that we may present other evidence of his activities from time to time.

George Brown Is Grabbing The Usual Bag Of Free Space

Recent news about George Brown, director of advertising and publicity for the western division of Radio-Keith-Orpheum Corp., bears strong testimony that this live-wire theatreman has been unsually active in the fine art of grabbing a lot of free newspaper and window space at neglible cost to the Orpheum Theatre, Los Angeles.

He netted 500 inches of free space in a local daily when playing "Young Donovan's Kid" by pulling a "Most Typical Boy" contest. The paper got behind the idea with both feet, publishing letters from the boys which set forth their views on the subject and followed through to the finish with a good yarn and photos about the winners. An additional tie-up was made with a local baking company which put out an advertising campaign in newspapers, featuring Jackie Cooper. 35,000 inserts, bearing ad copy on both bakery and theatre, were distributed throughout the city. No cost outside of time spent contacting the principals could be charged against the theatres as the merchants donated all awards for the contest.

Brown also waged a strong campaign in connection with showings of "White Shoulders" and "Up for Murder." On the former, at a cost of but $5, he secured 100 window displays of an especially made card bearing a photo of Mary Astor, for distribution by the local Lux dealer. Elaborate and effective tie-ups were built around each card and 99 per cent of the copy boosted the attraction at the theatre. A beauty products concern was also tied-in at the same time for 500 displays of an attractive streamer bearing the star's photo and a drug store took a half-page to tie her with a beauty aid.

For "Up for Murder" a tabloid edition of 5,000 copies were hawked around busy corners by a group of boys the day before opening. The art department made up signs reading, "Extra, Lew Ayres Up for Murder," which the boys wore fore and aft. In exchange for a chain drug store ad in the tab the cards were mounted on the windows of all stores in town, many of them at the most important intersections. The boys were also sent through downtown restaurants at peak luncheon hour, yelling "extra."

Well, George, the Club can certainly testify that you made a big splurge at very little cost to your house which netted the desired results, and after all that's what every manager wants to accomplish. Your "Typical Boy" contest will also be most interesting to many members on account of the drive these days for kid patronage. Next time you put over some more stunts be sure to let the Club hear all about them. Right, George?

Ben Cohen Junks All Circulars But One; Says It's Oke

After spending considerable time and effort on a number of circulars to advertise his house, Ben Cohen, manager of the Senate Theatre, Detroit, Mich., finally hit upon one which he says has captured the fancy of his patrons to the extent that all other methods of this sort will be thrown in the discard. After two issues, he states, the response was so great that he wouldn't think of making any other change at the present time.

This issue of his circular measures about 9 inches by 12 inches and carries a streamer head across the top reading, "Free Theatre Tickets," and it's just chock full of tip-offs to patrons as to how to win passes, notices of coming attractions and jokes. A cut of popular screen stars also livens up the front page and between paragraphs appears one of the free pass gags, the names of people in his community who may secure same by applying at the box office with the necessary credentials. The back of the page is devoted to space for advertising coming attractions.

For a feature in his next issue of the circular it is his intention to start a "Photo-Grabber" contest, which he explains is having a photographer walk up and down the main street with a kodak and take pictures of various faces. Those who register the cheeriest expressions will receive two free passes. This member's patrons are nuts about these contests and if others are working under similar conditions we can cheerfully pass the above suggestions along for consideration. We'll be anxious to hear how the "grabber" idea works out.

BIG SHOT ON THE JOB!

The "Big Shot" in the above photo is Julius Lamm, manager of the Variety Theatre, Cleveland, and the scene is the theatre lobby on the occasion of the opening of "Big Business Girl." Regular office atmosphere was supplied through a tie-up with an office furniture supply house and a portable typewriter was promoted for a give-away to the lucky patron. This was a novel stunt and it attracted a lot of attention.

BEST FORMS OF THEATRE ADVERTISING!

This week's articles cover a field consisting of the larger town and the small-town. Miss Lea M. Duhamel expresses her views as publicity director for the Publix houses in Providence, R. I. That gives you the larger town slant.

From the small-town angle we offer the opinions of two typical exhibitors in two typical towns. Ed. Hiehle runs the theatres in Newark, Ohio, while Frank C. Goldquist caters to the entertainment tastes of Savanna, Ill.

We like the diversified views as expressed by these able contributors, and we feel certain you will like them too. If, by any chance, YOU have something to say on the subject, these columns are at your disposal.

Newspaper Ads Form Background, —Lea Duhamel

Newspaper advertising!!! Ads that are new and imaginative with persuasive information, without exaggeration and misinformation, are to my mind, the most important form of theatre advertising. To get public response, you must know the surest and most graceful method of winning attention, confidence and desire to instantly respond. To get these results, you must study your attraction and emphasize the merits of your show in clear and understandable English in the show window of the theatre, the newspaper ad.

Newspaper ads form the backbone for every campaign both big and small. There are some who say that word of mouth is the best form of advertising, but unless an opening is obtained, there will be no word of mouth advertising.

In these days of keen competition, no sales angle should be neglected. Every known avenue through which the show you are selling can be brought before the public should be utilized, but build the entire campaign around newspaper advertising. They are the big berthas which blast your opening. All other sales angles such as distribution of literature, radio, exploitation, the employment of mailing lists, etc., although very helpful and just as necessary as the machine gun nests on the front line, merely serve to uphold the impressions created in newspaper ad space.

Remember the newspaper ads are read by members of every family in your entire communities, while heralds after distribution trickle into only the hands of a small minority. One must also bear in mind that when Mr. and Mrs. Theatre Goer decide to see what is playing at the Home Town Theatre they do not go out looking for window cards, billboards, or turn on the radio, they pick up the newspaper and turn to the theatre page.

We must employ the same tactics in selling the public that are used by the motion picture producers to sell the exhibitors. The greatness of a new picture is impressed upon the exhibitors' minds by a heavy bombardment of trade paper advertising. True trick ash trays, paper weights, book markers and such kindred articles follow in the wake of the opening trade paper advertising but these little trinkets do no more than remind the exhibitor of the fiery ads he has read on the picture. They have a purpose and a very good place in a well arranged campaign but can you imagine a live producer failing to advertise his wares in the press and merely relying upon a set of novelties to sell his stock? Of course, you cannot and the same idea holds true when the exhibitor sets out to sell his public.

There are a few rare exceptions where because of some unusual condition an exploitation stunt alone will cause a sell out. Happy is the showman who has this experience but for constant publicity and advertising, the newspapers are his show window.

Believing that the newspaper ads are the very soul of every campaign, the good showman will be careful that they reflect the high standards of his theatre. Be truthful in your ads and keep them on a high plane. Perhaps an off color ad may draw a certain class into your house, but it will only be a bubble which when it bursts will leave a feeling of resentment against your theatre and will destroy the good will you are trying to build up in your respective communities.

Remember your advertising reflects your theatre. Plan your ads carefully. Have the pictorial sections of your layouts sell . . . . infuse life and selling lines into your copy . . . have your ads stand out on the page just as you want your theatre to stand out in your community. Spend plenty of time in the preparation of your ads. Do not be discouraged if your budget is small and you cannot afford to splash. The carefully thought out small ad draws more surely that a large ad carelessly constructed.

Local Exploitation Proved Best Bet For Frank Goldquist

The best medium of advertising in the theatre business, especially the motion pictures, is without doubt exploitation. While the smaller towns do not lend themselves to this to the extent that the larger places do, the art of exploitation can be modified to apply to any community.
